A writer in the The Lancet, Dr. C. H. Jones, states that in a majority of cases, neuralgia essentially implies a lowering of the vital power and functional action of the nerve, and not an increase—an opinion which is also supported by the well-known experiment of Dr. du Bois Raymond, in which a diminution of the nerve current was found to be co-existent with the [illegible] of pain in the nerve. The writer thinks it may be fairly argued, that when the symptoms of debility, and especially of nerve debility, are so apparent, and have so distinct a relation to the particular symptom, this must be itself of like essential character; it can hardly be that the morbid state of the nerve affected can be greatly different from that which prevails so generally throughout the system, especially when the means which avail for the cure of both are considered. The nutrition of the nerve being ill performed, its structure undergoes some molecular alteration which conditionates pain. What is true of neuralgia from this cause, Dr. J. believes to be true of all cases belonging to the non-organic class. Thus, electrical disturbances, damp, cold, malaria, all seem to act in the like way, so far as can be judged—[illegible] by deranging the molecular [illegible] tions of the nervous structur[e] [illegible] pairing its function.

Angel and Saint.

Oh! I would be an angel,
And kneeling at his feet,
Would wait my message given,
And then, on pinions fleet,
I'd haste to weary mortals,
The care-worn, troubled soul,
I'd bid them look to Jesus,
Who makes the wounded whole;

And round my sister spirits,
(Earth angels though they be,)
I'd linger till they whispered
Of heaven, O Lord, and thee.
Oh! blessed are those harpers
Who stand around the throne,
And day and night, unceasing,
Make all his glories known.

But, oh! when earth and heaven
Are mingled into one,
And saints and angels waken
A universal song,
The loudest, sweetest songsters
Of all that crowd, I ween,
Will be earth's suffering martyrs,
Who ministered, unseen;—

Whose prayers were ever rising
Up to the throne of light,
For grace to keep them holy,
And fitted for the fight.
Oh! when that morning dawneth
Which ushers in the day
That turneth earth to heaven,
May I be Christ's, I pray.

Ministerial Rascality.

Among the crying evils that beset the churches of Jesus Christ in these last days of peril, one of the most grievous is the presence of a class of ministerial rascals; men who serve the devil under the cloak of religion, and who fleece the flock of God because they are too lazy to earn their own bread. Societies and churches are at present greatly dependent upon preachers and preaching. They must have preaching, not merely for their own edification, but to tickle the itching ears of a lot of religious loafers, who spend their time "in hearing or telling some new thing"; and who, though they will not themselves serve God, will pay something for "divine service," if some one else will perform it.

A minister of the gospel, unlike an ordinary man, is respected, reverenced, confided in, trusted, flattered and beloved. He comes at once by virtue of his position to have the freedom of the place where he lives. The brethren kill their fattest calves, [illegible] and chickens for him, and the sisters prepare their sweetest cakes and their most dyspepsia-making pies, their costliest dishes and their most elegant viands, for "the minister." His coat is fine, his credit good, [illegible] standing high, and his position enviable. [illegible] man in this position will set himself to do good, to visit the distressed and afflicted, to lift up the bowed down, to warn the unruly, to instruct the inexperienced, to counsel the perplexed, to defend the down-trodden, to comfort the mourners, to be a [illegible] to the orphan and a friend to the friendless, then he is a great blessing to a people even in temporal things, and a guide [illegible] them to the glory that is to come. But [illegible] pursue a different course, woe to the church or people who have warmed a viper [illegible] their bosom. For if he set himself to [illegible] iniquity, he can plunder the poor, op[illegible] the humble, debauch the virtuous, [illegible] the simple, browbeat the good, mis[illegible] the unwary, disgrace religion, discour[illegible] christians, and lead a host to ruin af[illegible] him, while God's flock are scattered, [illegible] disheartened and destroyed.

There are various classes of these per[illegible] individuals, which demand our at[illegible]. We will not waste time to de[illegible] a class whose qualities are merely [illegible]; men who are always ready to [illegible] while others are ready to pay, who [illegible] around a church treasury as constant[illegible] [illegible] do about a candle,—who do [illegible] good, are never converted or saved; who [illegible] too lazy to work and too distrustful of [illegible] to push out into "the regions beyond," [illegible] who follow in the [illegible] of others, who never break up a rod of new ground themselves, but who are generally on hand about the time "the thing begins to pay,"—who go and come, and come and go, taking snuff with the women, chewing tobacco with the men, smoking cigars with the boys, taking a drop of liquor for very slight ailments, and setting an example which benefits no one, and only injures those that follow it.

This class are usually assigned their proper place, and when they keep in a genial mood, do not throw out hints and sneers at all the preachers who do, or try to do, more than they do; do not peddle gossip, tattling and slander from one church to another, and so all over the land; perhaps the evil they do is balanced by the good they may accomplish, and so they stand as mere ciphers in the grand account. But, aside from these, there are instances where the character of preachers is positive for evil and corruption. Among these we may enumerate

First, The Amorous Minister. This man's easily besetting sin is love,—not "brotherly love," but "sisterly love." He is a ladies' man. He makes himself particularly at home among women. He is familiar, and sometimes, perhaps, gross and even vulgar in his behavior. His magnetic eye watches and scans every "susceptible" lady in the congregation. He finds among them his "affinity" and his "affinity" never seems to be his own wife. He makes the acquaintance of good-looking sisters,—especially those whose lives are rendered burdensome by the presence of husbands who do not sympathise with them in all their feelings, whether normal or morbid. Such husbands, failing to love their wives as their own bodies, leave their hearts unlocked. Our gentleman takes possession. He sympathizes, he visits, perhaps he doctors, or he magnetizes; he knows the family secrets. He comes and stays. The wife invites him, and he comes. He holds the woman under his will. He creeps into houses thus, leads captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts. Thus he pursues his course till gossip arises, he persists in feeling that he is injured until he takes some fatal step, upon which follows exposure, ruin and disgrace; and he is wrecked, leaving, perhaps, some other one to shudder at the consequences of such a course, and shrink back from a path that leads to the depths of sheol. Such a man as I have described will, by disgusting the pure and exciting the vicious, by disgracing the truth and insulting the moral sense of community, do more than ten vile seducers can to ruin souls and hinder the work of the Lord.

Next may be mentioned the Dishonest Preacher. He is sly sometimes and sometimes open. Sometimes mean, then audacious. He wants more money than he can earn. He will have it if he can get it. So he goes to work. He begs all he can, misrepresenting his circumstances, pleading his poverty and robbing widows of their shillings and orphans of their pence to fill his pockets, or rather his lusts. Failing in this he borrows, and woe be to the man who lends him a "five" or a "ten." If he tries to borrow "ten" of you, you had better give him "five," if you choose. He never pays. It is against his principles, or at least it is contrary to his practice. If you entrust money to his hands to be conveyed, it never reaches its destination. If the contents of a collection are handed to him to be divided, he forgets it and takes the whole himself. He trades when he can make good bargains. Sometimes he trades with his brethren and afterwards they feel "tried" with him; at other times he trades with outsiders, and they swear that he is a scoundrel. These men are not trust-worthy. They forget their butcher's bill, don't pay their grocer's, cheat their boarding mistress, borrow money of maiden sisters, wear off clothes which belong to their tailor, and finally leave town perhaps "between two days," leaving everybody fleeced, abused and discouraged. It takes a long time to undo the mischief one such man will accomplish, if once he gets at his work.

Another minister whose very breath is pestilence and death, is the Dram-drinking Preacher. He has exalted opinions of the value of ardent spirits. He needs no special direction of an inspired apostle to induce him to take a "little wine" for his "stomach's sake" and his "often infirmities." His infirmities are very often, and his stomach clamors loudly for wine from day to day. At length wine seems very weak. He forgets that it is "a mocker" and that "strong drink is raging." His health gets worse. Alcohol always helps, but never cures him. It is like the yankee's medicine "warranted to cure if taken according to the directions,—externally, internally, and eternally." So he tries it;—"Holland gin," "French brandy," "high wines," "sherry rum," all these contribute to his health. He proceeds to "fancy brands." "Schiedam schnapps," and "Old Bourbon whiskey," go to complete the assortment, while cider is used to dilute them. A change comes over him. He is variable in his temperaments, up and down, gloriously elated or horribly depressed; terribly misused and abused and furiously earnest to right his wrongs. Time passes on, Tobacco, cardimon seeds and cloves, fail to take the smell out of his breath. He speaks of his ill-health to excuse his liquor drinking—he sometimes, when accused, braves it out, and claims the privilege of taking all the medicine he pleases when and where he chooses. He grows worse. He keeps jugs in his barn and visits it oftener than his closet. He sends his hired man to low groggeries to get his bottles filled. He gets tipsy. He denies it. He is often taken suddenly sick away from home and nothing cures him but a little "spirits." With a draft from his bottle and a text from his Bible he is prepared to deny the existence of any "spirit" except "the word" and brandy, and to mock at the experiences of any who know more of the leadings of God's spirit than his stimulated, jaded, rum-benumbed senses can apprehend. So he goes on. He waxes pot-valiant. He rails at others. His eyes and nose get red, his face becomes "liver-colored." He sees "snakes in his boots." He has delirium and perhaps dies. Men have been afraid to interfere with him or impeach him, and so he has made terrible havoc with temperance, righteousness and sound morality.

One more character may be named. The Ministerial Rascal. He is the product of all the others added up—the quintessence of them boiled down. He lies, cheats and steals. He changes his name as often as his coat and goeth about like his master "seeking whom he may devour." He does all the bad things that bad men do. He is a liar, an adulterer and a reprobate. He leaves his wife, goes into a new place, walks into the affections of some young dunce of a girl, mesmerizes her, marries her, borrows money or steals a horse, travels off when his true character is beginning to be developed, and plays his game in another quarter, leaving his poor dupes to foot his bills, apologize for his absence, and pick up the pieces the best way they know how. He goes on till he finds a home in the penitentiary, or dies as the fool dieth, having prostituted the noblest cause to the basest of ends.

I shall not stop to enumerate more—the subdivisions—the smaller fry of these before mentioned races. Having pointed out in brief the existing evil, I propose to allude to

THE REMEDY.

First. Churches must be more independent. They must keep the rod in their own hands. It is utterly absurd to think that a stranger, who came last week and goes away next, should acquire such control over any church as to swing it away from the guidance of faithful men to whom the charge of the flock has been committed. Churches must learn to live without preaching, or preach and pray themselves. Then they will not be driven to employ Simon Magus, Baalam, or Judas Iscariot to talk to them, rather than to worship God themselves. Then they can live if preachers die, or backslide or fight. In this way they can be partially secure, for if they watch and stick together, they can guard against "grievous wolves" who enter in, "not sparing the flock" of God. Churches must attend to this or suffer by being scattered, rent and torn by these "wolves in sheep's clothing." The evil is in the land. Some propose to remedy it by putting a settled pastor over every church, but this makes the church lazy, and warps its talent, and only secures a supply to a few churches which have the most money, while the rest are left destitute and still more exposed; the field is robbed of evangelists, the gospel ceases to be preached "in the regions beyond," and there is an end of growth and vitality and self-denial for the work and cause of God. A dozen or so of preachers can roll themselves into snug berths, draw their pay and make themselves as comfortable as possible, leaving the whitening harvest ungathered, and the Macedonian cry unheeded, but this course can never properly remedy the evil complained of.

The local church must have in it strength and back-bone. Its talent must be developed; and then it must be a settled principle that the humblest testimony of a feeble saint is worth more to the true church of Christ, than the most high sounding oration from some sanctimonious letcher, swindler, drunkard or rascal. Let it be understood and adopted as a line of policy and principle that dishonesty, sin, or rascality, is an absolute disqualification for usefulness in God's work, and, that no matter how glib or how smooth the tongue of a wheedling villian is, he cannot be allowed to wag it in the church of God, till he breaks off his sin, his dishonesty, and his rascality; rights his wrongs and undoes his evil doings, and then a great part of the evil will be removed at once.

Second. Churches must exercise great care in the ordaining of ministers to the work of God. Not every man that can talk will answer the purpose. Is he a good man? Is he blameless? Has he a good report of them that are without? Will he preach, or will he back out in a month? Can he preach? Is his purpose a transient impulse or a settled principle? Will he preach if the business does not pay? Is he too lazy to work and is he looking to the ministry for fat living and easy labor? Will he be forever whining over his hardships and his troubles? Will he quit work when he can make more money at something else? Will he sow more tares than wheat, and spread error, darkness and division wherever he preaches? Will he deny the Lord that bought him? Will he count the blood wherewith he was redeemed as an unholy thing? Will the ministers who ordain him be forced to warn people against his doctrine, his example, his influence? Can we trust him in our families, in our houses, in our churches? Will he go about belieing the men who aid him, kicking down the ladder on which he has climbed up? Will he destroy spirituality, introduce bad habits, weaken conscience, and shipwreck the church?

These questions the church should answer; hence the propriety of ministers being ordained at home, or in the immediate circle of their own acquaintance. And no person should ever present himself for ordination to preachers of the gospel, without the assent and recommendation of the local church where he belongs, or the testimony of good, reliable, honest brethren, who fear God and will tell the truth, even at the risk of displeasing some one who wants to be a minister. It is no time for temporizing. Unfaithfulness in this matter is treason against God and Christ. It rdins the interests of his church. God will hold a man accountable for it.

Thirdly. Christians must be jealous who they receive as ministers of Christ. They are to entertain strangers. They may properly say to the traveler, upon a bare profession of his faith in the Lord, "if any have a word of exhortation, say on." If nothing suspicious appears in his behavior they may extend to him all needful courtesy and send him on his way. But if he proposes to tarry, to be a teacher, to take a job of preaching to do, to be a pastor going in and out among a people, having access to our houses, our families, and the society of our wives and daughters; and standing as the representative of Christ's cause, then it is our right, our privilege and our duty to know more about him.

Who are you, sir? Where do you belong? What is your business? Where have you lived and labored? You say you are a preacher, how do I know that you are not a play-actor? You say you are a Methodist, how do I know but you are a Mormon? You pretend to be an honest man, how can I tell but you are an adulterous, lying, swindling impostor and vagabond. You can find out my reputation here in town. How can I find out yours? Where did you preach last? Why did you leave? Who knows you? Who will recommend you? Give us the proof of your honesty and then we will go with you heart and hand. No honest man can find fault with these questions. A rascal will most commonly stand upon his dignity, and decline to answer such improper interrogations. He wants time to preach, borrow money, make a party, get the sympathies of a few silly women, run in debt for his board, get a new suit of clothes, beg what cash he can, and then, as exposure approaches, give him one day's start of you on the cars, and he will not tread down the grass in your door-yard again for a long time, I assure you. You will get pay for your credulity by being disgraced, taunted and abused, and will find the work of years laid prostrate by the operations of such a villain in a very short time.

Fourthly. Local churches must act promptly in such a case. A church that allows a miserable toper, loafer or blackleg to preach for them, is responsible to God and man for his sins and his influence. Stop it. Tell him he must quit preaching or mend his ways. Look him in the eye. Do not wait till he has fooled half the church and got them on his side. Do not delay and send him off to a "Conference" to tell his own story and get whitewashed over by a lot of ministers who know nothing about him. Do not hold back for fear of a fuss. Do not wait hoping he will move away, and so pitch into some other church and play the same game and ruin them. Do not shrink from duty. Do not sneak around behind his back and stab him there. Come up and face him. Let the elders that are ordained in every church come to the rescue. If a private interview does not settle him, then tell it to the church. Meet him in public. Let a rogue see how an honest man's eye looks. Tell him what he is. Prove it to him. Expose him. Let the church require him to repent. If he does it you may save him; if not, let him be as an heathen man and as a publican. He will wilt like a cabbage plant in the sunshine. You will have trials, abuse, and impudent reproach, but you will save your flock and be approved of God.

Such are my views of the matter. One such experience and exposure seals a man's doom unless he repents. I heard of one vagabond who was an infidel and adulterer and hypocrite. He still kept preaching. No one brought him to account. He was going away from home and wanted a recommendation from the church where he lived. His wife (God bless her!) got up in the meeting and said, "I object to giving it. He is not a fit person to preach the gospel." His case was settled—henceforth he was an infidel openly; before, as I heard him say, he was one secretly; a rascally hypocrite, living on the flock of God and serving the devil with all his might. May God spare his people and give not his heritage to reproach, is the prayer of an unworthy servant of Christ. H. L. HASTINGS.

Suffering.

Though bosoms torn may be,

For the Crisis.

My Experience.—No. 5.

Soon after this decision the opportunity was given. The minister, to whose faithful labors I was so much indebted, called at my father's, stopping over night. After spending the time in religious conversation and prayer with regard to these things, the next morning being Sabbath, I decided to go forward in baptism that day, though not without fear and trembling, for I had not as yet related my experience and been accepted by the church, as was the custom, which, however, I must do that day. It was a great cross for me, being so young and going forward alone, yet He who had thus far marked my path and guided my feet, would still sustain me. We went to the meeting, and after listening to two excellent discourses, by request I arose in the congregation, declaring what great things God had done for my soul; my determination to love and serve him by keeping his commandments, and following his example, was then received by the church; after which we repaired to a beautiful lake, where, being led down into the water and laid beneath its yielding wave, rose again rejoicing in God, and inviting my youthful friends and associates to come and go with me. I was now happy in the Lord, and went on my way rejoicing. This closed my thirteenth year.

My religious privileges, as well as others, were rather limited; yet, after walking two or three miles over hills and through vallies, we were glad to meet in school-houses, barns, and in the groves, to hear the preached word, and endeavored to improve them aright, receiving much sweet comfort and enjoyment, and remembering them still as our happiest days.

It was not till the latter part of the next summer, in one of these meetings, that I took my first lesson in disobedience. Somehow, while I had kept a willing heart to work, it had been accepted, and a small portion assigned me to do, which, in my youthful simplicity, I had not imbibed as yet the least idea of neglecting.

But one Sabbath afternoon, near the close of a discourse, feeling as usual the movings of the Spirit to testify for God, something seemed to say, "it is a great cross for you to do this, it does but little if any good, and there are others here that are as good christians as you are, and they don't do as you do! It is more of a habit than anything else; you can live a good christian life just as well without this ceremony; others do. You need not break off all at once—omit it to-day, but resume it at the next meeting." While I was listening to these insinuations, so plausible and apparently so truthful, the meeting closed. A wound and a burden was now fixed upon my poor heart unknown to it before. D. M. K.

☞ "I will never dare to think," says Justin Martyr, "nor speak, that the Scriptures can be adverse to themselves, but if any Scripture seem to be so, and has a color as though it did contradict some other Scripture, I will rather confess that I understand not the things there spoken, being certainly persuaded that no part of Scripture can be opposite to any other part thereof."

For the Crisis.

Deliverance to the Captives.

We have been called to fasting and prayer, by the supreme executive of the nation, that God would avert the calamities that seem to be impending, hush the discordant elements, and smile upon us as heretofore; that our Union may be perpetuated, and remain a constellation of brightness among the nations of the earth. We love our country, and we pray for its peace and prosperity, and that God would give wisdom to our rulers, that they may so steer the ship of state as that she may finally enter the port of rest. But if we would fast as God requires, we must "loose the bands of wickedness; undo the heavy burdens, and let the oppressed go free, by breaking every yoke."—Isa. 58: 1-6. Such a fast as this God will approve; for we shall demonstrate that our obedience to God is the supreme object of our heart, rather than supreme selfishness; and without complying with these requirements, how can we mock God by asking him to give us success in fraud and oppression? As a nation, we are verily guilty; as a nation, we should be clothed in sackcloth, and come up to the obedience of his most holy commandments, and not hypocritically appear before God with a lie in our right hand.

Christ came to preach "deliverance to captives" and "opening of the prison doors to them that are bound"; and also, "to set at liberty them that are bruised"; and it is the solemn duty of every member of his mystical body to pray for the deliverance of the captives; and while we do so, we are to relieve the oppressed, as far as in us lies; and where it is not possible to give the relief which we desire, to express our sympathy for them in their distress, and kindly remonstrate with their oppressors on the absurdity and wickedness of holding their fellow men in bondage. But when attempting to do this, we are gravely told, even from the sacred desk, that there is no prohibition in the sacred volume against one man's holding another in involuntary servitude, but rather that it sanctions it. The authority for this assertion is supposed to rest on a portion of the book of Leviticus, which book, being altogether typical, was nailed to the cross on the death of Christ—the great antitypical High Priest. But if this passage, relative to servants of the Jews at that time, proves any thing in favor of bondage now, it proves too much; for it gives all our neighboring nations, with whom we sojourn, the same power to enslave us all that it does us to oppress the Assyrian. The same book says, "He that blasphemeth the name of the Lord shall surely be put to death, and all the congregation shall certainly stone him;" and is there a man now in this country that would justify an assembly of men in putting any man to death because he had blasphemed the name of the Lord? There is a great difference between the moral law of God, and that which is merely typical. The former binds us on all occasions; the latter was superceded by the gospel. We have tolerated the vile and abhorrent practice of enslaving our fellow men, and if a fugitive escapes from oppression our Constitution says, Return him to his master. But God says, "Thou shalt not deliver to his master the servant that has escaped from his master unto thee. He shall dwell with thee, even among you, in that place which he shall choose, in one of thy gates, where it liketh him best; thou shalt not oppress him."—Deut. 23: 15, 16. And as long as our Constitution contains an injunction so diametrically contrary to the moral law of God, how can we ask him to bless us? As long as man oppresses his fellow man, so long will God be angry till we are consumed.

Gloom and darkness surround us in view of the future prospects of this nation; and it is time to "cry aloud, spare not," "lift up the voice like a trumpet," to convince the people of their transgressions. "Behold, the hire of the laborers that have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them that have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth." Can the church of God throw off her responsibility, if she looks on the sinful state of the nation unmoved? And though there are many honest and good men, who are so anxious for the preservation of the Union that they seem to think they have no duty to do for God in this matter; and that the poor slave, if he flees here for a refuge against oppression, must be handed over to a cruel master to keep peace; and there are public teachers, and even ministers of the gospel in the midst of the land of bondage, who will stand up, and without a blush justify slavery as an institution of benevolence. But are there not some at least, servants of God, who "despise the gain of oppression"? To such I would send an earnest appeal. Are you doing by others as you would that they should do by you? Can you love your neighbor as yourself, and not utter one word in behalf of the suffering slave? Remember "God hath made of one blood all nations to dwell on the face of the whole earth." This proves that, as creatures of God, we are all brethren. But there is a closer, holier brotherhood among believers in Christ, many of whom will one day be found to have worn out a dreary life in painful toil, unpaid—in gushing tears, unconsoled—in flowing blood, unavenged; and well indeed might he cry, "O Lord God, to whom vengeance belongeth; O God, to whom vengeance belongeth, show thyself,"—"Lift up thyself, thou Judge of the earth; render a reward to the proud."

Every generous, humane heart must forever feel a just abhorrence to the system of slavery in any form, much more so as it now exists in America. And though I would make every allowance that justice requires for the habits, circumstances and instructions of those who have been brought up with, and inherited, them as property, yet slavery in its best dress is a species of fraud and robbery. Some masters are kind to their slaves, and have a feeling of sympathy for them, and all such know and feel that it is wrong for them to hold them in bondage; but they are borne away on the tide of popular feeling to either resist all scruples, or remain in a state of masterly inactivity; and thus the serpent lives, till he becomes a dragon, untamed and untamable. Thus it may be seen that the kindness of those good masters cannot counterbalance the cruelty of th[illegible] that are hardened in extortion and wickedness. Every just man deplores the abuses of slavery; and as long as the system exists, he will have to mourn over the sufferings of the innocent, but friendless brethren writhing under the lash of the tyrant. Behold, for a moment, the merciless oppressor, gloating over his victim with a fury and fierceness scarcely outdone by diabolical spirits! Solomon had a view of the oppressions that were done under the sun, and behold the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter; and well indeed might he praise the dead which are already dead, more than the living which are yet alive in such a state. Job also congratulates the dead by saying, "There the servant is free from his master;" "there they hear not the voice of the oppressor." The first law of our nature is freedom, and many a helpless brother would choose "strangling and death," rather than such unheard of injuries, accompanied with insults.

In view of morality and religion both, slavery has a most deleterious influence; it has a most hardening effect, which is often contagious. Let a man go from the land of freedom and enter the precincts of bondage, where it presents the least objectionable features, and by a familiarity with its customs he will soon say: Slavery, after all, is not so bad as it has been represented. Let this same man enter the arena of a second class, where brutal masters tyrannize daily over their victims, and he will alter his mind, and at first shudder at the cruelty inflicted by tyrants, and endured by the poor, unheeded, unbefriended African, who has been stolen away from his native country, and doomed to perpetual bondage—not for crime, but to gratify the insatiable avarice and infernal rapacity of plunderers hardened in iniquity and barbarism. Let this man become inured to these sights daily, and they will soon become a matter of course; which he cannot only look upon with the utmost indifference, but he will become a participator, and even an inflicter of tortures which disgrace humanity; wring from christianity the bursting tears of sympathy, and baptize the land in blood. Can the spirit of the meek and holy Jesus exist in such a land as this? He who came to preach "deliverance to captives," came also "to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of the vengeance of our God"—yes, "the great day of God Almighty." "He hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness." It hastens, it hastens; the day is at hand when "God will break the arm of the wicked," and "set at liberty them that are bruised."

Shall we fall on our knees and beseech God to preserve our glorious Union, while our Constitution abrogates one of the plainest precepts of God's moral law? Nay, verily, we cannot do this thing; for "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me"; who may justly retort, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" If we should persuade the slaveholder to lay down his weapons of rebellion against God and his brother, we ask him to [illegible] the most abhorrent system that ever [illegible]

Angel and Saint.

Oh! I would be an angel,
And kneeling at his feet,
Would wait my message given,
And then, on pinions fleet,
I'd haste to weary mortals,
The care-worn, troubled soul,
I'd bid them look to Jesus,
Who makes the wounded whole;

And round my sister spirits,
(Earth angels though they be,)
I'd linger till they whispered
Of heaven, O Lord, and thee.
Oh! blessed are those harpers
Who stand around the throne,
And day and night, unceasing,
Make all his glories known.

But, oh! when earth and heaven
Are mingled into one,
And saints and angels waken
A universal song,
The loudest, sweetest songsters
Of all that crowd, I ween,
Will be earth's suffering martyrs,
Who ministered, unseen;—

Whose prayers were ever rising
Up to the throne of light,
For grace to keep them holy,
And fitted for the fight.
Oh! when that morning dawneth
Which ushers in the day
That turneth earth to heaven,
May I be Christ's, I pray.

Ministerial Rascality.

Among the crying evils that beset the churches of Jesus Christ in these last days of peril, one of the most grievous is the presence of a class of ministerial rascals; men who serve the devil under the cloak of religion, and who fleece the flock of God because they are too lazy to earn their own bread. Societies and churches are at present greatly dependent upon preachers and preaching. They must have preaching, not merely for their own edification, but to tickle the itching ears of a lot of religious loafers, who spend their time "in hearing or telling some new thing"; and who, though they will not themselves serve God, will pay something for "divine service," if some one else will perform it.

A minister of the gospel, unlike an ordinary man, is respected, reverenced, confided in, trusted, flattered and beloved. He comes at once by virtue of his position to have the freedom of the place where he lives. The brethren kill their fattest calves, [illegible] and chickens for him, and the sisters prepare their sweetest cakes and their most dyspepsia-making pies, their costliest dinners and their most elegant viands, for "the minister." His coat is fine, his credit good, his standing high, and his position enviable. If a man in this position will set himself to do good, to visit the distressed and afflicted, to lift up the bowed down, to warn the unruly, to instruct the inexperienced, to counsel the perplexed, to defend the downtrodden, to comfort the mourners, to be a father to the orphan and a friend to the friendless, then he is a great blessing to a people even in temporal things, and a guide to them to the glory that is to come. But if he pursue a different course, woe to the church or people who have warmed a viper in their bosom. For if he set himself to work iniquity, he can plunder the poor, oppress the humble, debauch the virtuous, [illegible] the simple, browbeat the good, mislead the unwary, disgrace religion, discourage christians, and lead a host to ruin after him, while God's flock are scattered, frightened, disheartened and destroyed.

There are various classes of these pernicious individuals, which demand our attention. We will not waste time to describe a class whose qualities are merely negative; men who are always ready to preach while others are ready to pay, who fly around a church treasury as constantly as moths do about a candle,—who do no good, see none converted or saved; who are too lazy to work and too distrustful of God to push out into "the regions beyond," who follow in the wake of others, who never break up a rod of new ground themselves, but who are generally on hand about the time "the thing begins to pay,"—who go and come, and come and go, taking snuff with the women, chewing tobacco with the men, smoking cigars with the boys, taking a drop of liquor for very slight ailments, and setting an example which benefits no one, and only injures those that follow it.

This class are usually assigned their proper place, and when they keep in a genial mood, do not throw out hints and sneers at all the preachers who do, or try to do, more than they do; do not peddle gossip, tattling and slander from one church to another, and so all over the land; perhaps the evil they do is balanced by the good they may accomplish, and so they stand as mere ciphers in the grand account. But, aside from these, there are instances where the character of preachers is positive for evil and corruption. Among these we may enumerate

First, The Amorous Minister. This man's easily besetting sin is love,—not "brotherly love," but "sisterly love." He is a ladies' man. He makes himself particularly at home among women. He is familiar, and sometimes, perhaps, gross and even vulgar in his behavior. His magnetic eye watches and scans every "susceptible" lady in the congregation. He finds among them his "affinity" and his "affinity" never seems to be his own wife. He makes the acquaintance of good-looking sisters,—especially those whose lives are rendered burdensome by the presence of husbands who do not sympathize with them in all their feelings, whether normal or morbid. Such husbands, failing to love their wives as their own bodies, leave their hearts unlocked. Our gentleman takes possession. He sympathizes, he visits, perhaps he doctors, or he magnetizes; he knows the family secrets. He comes and stays. The wife invites him, and he comes. He holds the woman under his will. He creeps into houses thus, leads captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts. Thus he pursues his course till gossip arises, he persists in feeling that he is injured until he takes some fatal step, upon which follows exposure, ruin and disgrace; and he is wrecked, leaving, perhaps, some other one to shudder at the consequences of such a course, and shrink back from a path that leads to the depths of sheol. Such a man as I have described will, by disgusting the pure and exciting the vicious, by disgracing the truth and insulting the moral sense of community, do more than ten vile seducers can to ruin souls and hinder the work of the Lord.

Next may be mentioned the Dishonest Preacher. He is sly sometimes and sometimes open. Sometimes mean, then audacious. He wants more money than he can earn. He will have it if he can get it. So he goes to work. He begs all he can, misrepresenting his circumstances, pleading his poverty and robbing widows of their shillings and orphans of their pence to fill his pockets, or rather his lusts. Failing in this he borrows, and woe be to the man who lends him a "five" or a "ten." If he tries to borrow "ten" of you, you had better give him "five," if you choose. He never pays. It is against his principles, or at least it is contrary to his practice. If you entrust money to his hands to be conveyed, it never reaches its destination. If the contents of a collection are handed to him to be divided, he forgets it and takes the whole himself. He trades when he can make good bargains. Sometimes he trades with his brethren and afterwards they feel "tried" with him; at other times he trades with outsiders, and they swear that he is a scoundrel. These men are not trust-worthy. They forget their butcher's bill, don't pay their grocer's, cheat their boarding mistress, borrow money of maiden sisters, wear off clothes which belong to their tailor, and finally leave town perhaps "between two days," leaving everybody fleeced, abused and discouraged. It takes a long time to undo the mischief one such man will accomplish, if once he gets at his work.

Another minister whose very breath is pestilence and death, is the Dram-drinking Preacher. He has exalted opinions of the value of ardent spirits. He needs no special direction of an inspired apostle to induce him to take a "little wine" for his "stomach's sake" and his "often infirmities." His infirmities are very often, and his stomach clamors loudly for wine from day to day. At length wine seems very weak. He forgets that it is "a mocker" and that "strong drink is raging." His health gets worse. Alcohol always helps, but never cures him. It is like the yankee's medicine "warranted to cure if taken according to the directions;—externally, internally, and eternally." So he tries it;—"Holland gin," "French brandy," "high wines," "cherry rum," all these contribute to his health. He proceeds to "fancy brands." "Schiedam schnapps," and "Old Bourbon whiskey," go to complete the assortment, while cider is used to dilute them. A change comes over him. He is variable in his temperaments, up and down, gloriously elated or horribly depressed; terribly misused and abused and furiously earnest to right his wrongs. Time passes on. Tobacco, cardimon seeds and cloves, fail to take the smell out of his breath. He speaks of his ill-health to excuse his liquor drinking—he sometimes, when accused, braves it out, and claims the privilege of taking all the medicine he pleases when and where he chooses. He grows worse. He keeps jugs in his barn and visits it oftener than his closet. He sends his hired man to low groggeries to get his bottles filled. He gets tipsy. He denies it. He is often taken suddenly sick away from home and nothing cures him but a little "spirits." With a draft from his bottle and a text from his Bible he is prepared to deny the existence of any "spirit" except "the word" and brandy, and to mock at the experiences of any who know more of the leadings of God's spirit than his stimulated, jaded, rum-benumbed senses can apprehend. So he goes on. He waxes pot-valiant. He rails at others. His eyes and nose get red, his face becomes "liver-colored." He sees "snakes in his boots." He has delirium and perhaps dies. Men have been afraid to interfere with him or impeach him, and so he has made terrible havoc with temperance, righteousness and sound morality.

One more character may be named. The Ministerial Rascal. He is the product of all the others added up—the quintessence of them boiled down. He lies, cheats and steals. He changes his name as often as his coat and goeth about like his master "seeking whom he may devour." He does all the bad things that bad men do. He is a liar, an adulterer and a reprobate. He leaves his wife, goes into a new place, walks into the affections of some young dunce of a girl, mesmerizes her, marries her, borrows money or steals a horse, travels off when his true character is beginning to be developed, and plays his game in another quarter, leaving his poor dupes to foot his bills, apologize for his absence, and pick up the pieces the best way they know how. He goes on till he finds a home in the penitentiary, or dies as the fool dieth, having prostituted the noblest cause to the basest of ends.

I shall not stop to enumerate more—the subdivisions—the smaller fry of these before mentioned races. Having pointed out in brief the existing evil, I propose to allude to

THE REMEDY.

First. Churches must be more independent. They must keep the rod in their own hands. It is utterly absurd to think that a stranger, who came last week and goes away next, should acquire such control over any church as to swing it away from the guidance of faithful men to whom the charge of the flock has been committed. Churches must learn to live without preaching, or preach and pray themselves. Then they will not be driven to employ Simon Magus, Baalam, or Judas Iscariot to talk to them, rather than to worship God themselves. Then they can live if preachers die, or backslide or fight. In this way they can be partially secure, for if they watch and stick together, they can guard against "grievous wolves" who enter in, "not sparing the flock" of God. Churches must attend to this or suffer by being scattered, rent and torn by these "wolves in sheep's clothing." The evil is in the land. Some propose to remedy it by putting a settled pastor over every church, but this makes the church lazy, and warps its talent, and only secures a supply to a few churches which have the most money, while the rest are left destitute and still more exposed; the field is robbed of evangelists, the gospel ceases to be preached "in the regions beyond," and there is an end of growth and vitality and self-denial for the work and cause of God. A dozen or so of preachers can roll themselves into snug berths, draw their pay and make themselves as comfortable as possible, leaving the whitening harvest ungathered, and the Macedonian cry unheeded, but this course can never properly remedy the evil complained of.

The local church must have in it strength and back-bone. Its talent must be developed; and then it must be a settled principle that the humblest testimony of a feeble saint is worth more to the true church of Christ, than the most high sounding oration from some sanctimonious letcher, swindler, drunkard or rascal. Let it be understood and adopted as a line of policy and principle that dishonesty, sin, or rascality, is an absolute disqualification for usefulness in God's work, and, that no matter how glib or how smooth the tongue of a wheedling villian is, he cannot be allowed to wag it in the church of God, till he breaks off his sins, his dishonesty, and his rascality; rights his wrongs and undoes his evil doings, and then a great part of the evil will be removed at once.

Second. Churches must exercise great care in the ordaining of ministers to the work of God. Not every man that can talk will answer the purpose. Is he a good man? Is he blameless? Has he a good report of them that are without? Will he preach, or will he back out in a month? Can he preach? Is his purpose a transient impulse or a settled principle? Will he preach if the business does not pay? Is he too lazy to work and is he looking to the ministry for fat living and easy labor? Will he be forever whining over his hardships and his troubles? Will he quit work when he can make more money at something else? Will he sow more tares than wheat, and spread error, darkness and division wherever he preaches? Will he deny the Lord that bought him? Will he count the blood wherewith he was redeemed as an unholy thing? Will the ministers who ordain him be forced to warn people against his doctrine, his example, his influence? Can we trust him in our families, in our houses, in our churches? Will he go about belieing the men who aid him, kicking down the ladder on which he has climbed up? Will he destroy spirituality, introduce bad habits, weaken conscience, and shipwreck the church?

These questions the church should answer; hence the propriety of ministers being ordained at home, or in the immediate circle of their own acquaintance. And no person should ever present himself for ordination to preachers of the gospel, without the assent and recommendation of the local church where he belongs, or the testimony of good, reliable, honest brethren, who fear God and will tell the truth, even at the risk of displeasing some one who wants to be a minister. It is no time for temporizing. Unfaithfulness in this matter is treason against God and Christ. It rdins the interests of his church. God will hold a man accountable for it.

Thirdly. Christians must be jealous who they receive as ministers of Christ. They are to entertain strangers. They may properly say to the traveler, upon a bare profession of his faith in the Lord, "if any have a word of exhortation, say on." If nothing suspicious appears in his behavior they may extend to him all needful courtesy and send him on his way. But if he proposes to tarry, to be a teacher, to take a job of preaching to do, to be a pastor going in and out among a people, having access to our houses, our families, and the society of our wives and daughters; and standing as the representative of Christ's cause, then it is our right, our privilege and our duty to know more about him.

Who are you, sir? Where do you belong? What is your business? Where have you lived and labored? You say you are a preacher, how do I know that you are not a play-actor? You say you are a Methodist, how do I know but you are a Mormon? You pretend to be an honest man, how can I tell but you are an adulterous, lying, swindling impostor and vagabond. You can find out my reputation here in town. How can I find out yours? Where did you preach last? Why did you leave? Who knows you? Who will recommend you? Give us the proof of your honesty and then we will go with you heart and hand. No honest man can find fault with these questions. A rascal will most commonly stand upon his dignity, and decline to answer such improper interrogations. He wants time to preach, borrow money, make a party, get the sympathies of a few silly women, run in debt for his board, get a new suit of clothes, beg what cash he can, and then, as exposure approaches, give him one day's start of you on the cars, and he will not tread down the grass in your door-yard again for a long time, I assure you. You will get pay for your credulity by being disgraced, taunted and abused, and will find the work of years laid prostrate by the operations of such a villain in a very short time.

Fourthly. Local churches must act promptly in such a case. A church that allows a miserable toper, loafer or blackleg to preach for them, is responsible to God and man for his sins and his influence. Stop it. Tell him he must quit preaching or mend his ways. Look him in the eye. Do not wait till he has fooled half the church and got them on his side. Do not delay and send him off to a "Conference" to tell his own story and get whitewashed over by a lot of ministers who know nothing about him. Do not hold back for fear of a fuss. Do not wait hoping he will move away, and so pitch into some other church and play the same game and ruin them. Do not shrink from duty. Do not sneak around behind his back and stab him there. Come up and face him. Let the elders that are ordained in every church come to the rescue. If a private interview does not settle him, then tell it to the church. Meet him in public. Let a rogue see how an honest man's eye looks. Tell him what he is. Prove it to him. Expose him. Let the church require him to repent. If he does it you may save him; if not, let him be as an heathen man and as a publican. He will wilt like a cabbage plant in the sunshine. You will have trials, abuse, and impudent reproach, but you will save your flock and be approved of God.

Such are my views of the matter. One such experience and exposure seals a man's doom unless he repents. I heard of one vagabond who was an infidel and adulterer and hypocrite. He still kept preaching. No one brought him to account. He was going away from home and wanted a recommendation from the church where he lived. His wife (God bless her!) got up in the meeting and said, "I object to giving it. He is not a fit person to preach the gospel." His case was settled—henceforth he was an infidel openly; before, as I heard him say, he was one secretly; a rascally hypocrite, living on the flock of God and serving the devil with all his might. May God spare his people and give not his heritage to reproach, is the prayer of an unworthy servant of Christ. H. L. HASTINGS.

For the Crisis.

My Experience.—No. 5.

Soon after this decision the opportunity was given. The minister, to whose faithful labors I was so much indebted, called at my father's, stopping over night. After spending the time in religious conversation and prayer with regard to these things, the next morning being Sabbath, I decided to go forward in baptism that day, though not without fear and trembling, for I had not as yet related my experience and been accepted by the church, as was the custom, which, however, I must do that day. It was a great cross for me, being so young and going forward alone, yet He who had thus far marked my path and guided my feet, would still sustain me. We went to the meeting, and after listening to two excellent discourses, by request I arose in the congregation, declaring what great things God had done for my soul; my determination to love and serve him by keeping his commandments, and following his example, was then received by the church; after which we repaired to a beautiful lake, where, being led down into the water and laid beneath its yielding wave, rose again rejoicing in God, and inviting my youthful friends and associates to come and go with me. I was now happy in the Lord, and went on my way rejoicing. This closed my thirteenth year.

My religious privileges, as well as others, were rather limited; yet, after walking two or three miles over hills and through vallies, we were glad to meet in schoolhouses, barns, and in the groves, to hear the preached word, and endeavored to improve them aright, receiving much sweet comfort and enjoyment, and remembering them still as our happiest days.

It was not till the latter part of the next summer, in one of these meetings, that I took my first lesson in disobedience. Somehow, while I had kept a willing heart to work, it had been accepted, and a small portion assigned me to do, which, in my youthful simplicity, I had not imbibed as yet the least idea of neglecting.

But one Sabbath afternoon, near the close of a discourse, feeling as usual the movings of the Spirit to testify for God, something seemed to say, "it is a great cross for you to do this, it does but little if any good, and there are others here that are as good christians as you are, and they don't do as you do! It is more of a habit than anything else; you can live a good christian life just as well without this ceremony; others do. You need not break off all at once—omit it to-day, but resume it at the next meeting." While I was listening to these insinuations, so plausible and apparently so truthful, the meeting closed. A wound and a burden was now fixed upon my poor heart unknown to it before. D. M. K.

☞ "I will never dare to think," says Justin Martyr, "nor speak, that the Scriptures can be adverse to themselves, but if any Scripture seem to be so, and has a color as though it did contradict some other Scripture, I will rather confess that I understand not the things there spoken, being certainly persuaded that no part of Scripture can be opposite to any other part thereof."

For the Crisis.

Deliverance to the Captives.

We have been called to fasting and prayer, by the supreme executive of the nation, that God would avert the calamities that seem to be impending, hush the discordant elements, and smile upon us as heretofore; that our Union may be perpetuated, and remain a constellation of brightness among the nations of the earth. We love our country, and we pray for its peace and prosperity, and that God would give wisdom to our rulers, that they may so steer the ship of state as that she may finally enter the port of rest. But if we would fast as God requires, we must "loose the bands of wickedness; undo the heavy burdens, and let the oppressed go free, by breaking every yoke."—Isa. 58: 1-6. Such a fast as this God will approve; for we shall demonstrate that our obedience to God is the supreme object of our heart, rather than supreme selfishness; and without complying with these requirements, how can we mock God by asking him to give us success in fraud and oppression? As a nation, we are verily guilty; as a nation, we should be clothed in sackcloth, and come up to the obedience of his most holy commandments, and not hypocritically appear before God with a lie in our right hand.

Gloom and darkness surround us in view of the future prospects of this nation; and it is time to "cry aloud, spare not," "lift up the voice like a trumpet," to convince the people of their transgressions. "Behold, the hire of the laborers that have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them that have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth." Can the church of God throw off her responsibility, if she looks on the sinful state of the nation unmoved? And though there are many honest and good men, who are so anxious for the preservation of the Union that they seem to think they have no duty to do for God in this matter; and that the poor slave, if he flees here for a refuge against oppression, must be handed over to a cruel master to keep peace; and there are public teachers, and even ministers of the gospel in the midst of the land of bondage, who will stand up, and without a blush justify slavery as an institution of benevolence. But are there not some at least, servants of God, who "despise the gain of oppression"? To such I would most earnestly appeal. Are you doing by others as you would that they should do by you? Can you love your neighbor as yourself, and not utter one word in behalf of the suffering slave? Remember "God hath made of one blood all nations to dwell on the face of the whole earth." This proves that, as creatures of God, we are all brethren. But there is a closer, holier brotherhood among believers in Christ, many of whom will one day be found to have worn out a dreary life in painful toil, unpaid—in gushing tears, unconsoled—in flowing blood, unavenged; and well indeed might he cry, "O Lord God, to whom vengeance belongeth; O God, to whom vengeance belongeth, show thyself,"—"Lift up thyself, thou Judge of the earth; render a reward to the proud."

Every generous, humane heart must forever feel a just abhorrence to the system of slavery in any form, much more so as it now exists in America. And though I would make every allowance that justice requires for the habits, circumstances and instructions of those who have been brought up with, and inherited, them as property, yet slavery in its best dress is a species of fraud and robbery. Some masters are kind to their slaves, and have a feeling of sympathy for them, and all such know and feel that it is wrong for them to hold them in bondage; but they are borne away on the tide of popular feeling to either resist all scruples, or remain in a state of masterly inactivity; and thus the serpent lives, till he becomes a dragon, untamed and untamable. Thus it may be seen that the kindness of those good masters cannot counterbalance the cruelty of th[illegible] that are hardened in extortion and wickedness. Every just man deplores the abuses of slavery; and as long as the system exists, he will have to mourn over the sufferings of the innocent, but friendless brother, writhing under the lash of the tyrant. Behold, for a moment, the merciless oppressor, gloating over his victim with a fury and fierceness scarcely outdone by diabolical spirits! Solomon had a view of the oppressions that were done under the sun, and beheld the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter; and well indeed might he praise the dead which are already dead, more than the living which are yet alive in such a state. Job also congratulates the dead by saying, "There the servant is free from his master:" "there they hear not the voice of the oppressor." The first law of our nature is freedom, and many a helpless brother would choose "strangling and death," rather than such unheard of injuries, accompanied with insults.

In view of morality and religion both, slavery has a most deleterious influence; it has a most hardening effect, which is often contagious. Let a man go from the land of freedom and enter the precincts of bondage, where it presents the least objectionable features, and by a familiarity with its customs he will soon say: Slavery, after all, is not so bad as it has been represented. Let this same man enter the arena of a second class, where brutal masters tyrannize daily over their victims, and he will alter his mind, and at first shudder at the cruelty inflicted by tyrants, and endured by the poor, unheeded, unbefriended African, who has been stolen away from his native country, and doomed to perpetual bondage—not for crime, but to gratify the insatiable avarice and infernal rapacity of plunderers hardened in iniquity and barbarism. Let this man become inured to these sights daily, and they will soon become a matter of course; which he cannot only look upon with the utmost indifference, but he will become a participator, and even an inflicter of tortures which disgrace humanity; wring from christianity the bursting tears of sympathy, and baptize the land in blood. Can the spirit of the meek and holy Jesus exist in such a land as this? He who came to preach "deliverance to captives," came also "to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of the vengeance of our God"—yes, "the great day of God Almighty." "He hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness." It hastens, it hastens; the day is at hand when "God will break the arm of the wicked," and "set at liberty them that are bruised."

Shall we fall on our knees and beseech God to preserve our glorious Union, while our Constitution abrogates one of the plainest precepts of God's moral law? Nay, verily, we cannot do this thing; for "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me;" who may justly retort, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" If we should [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] weapons of rebellion [illegible] heathen, we ask him to [illegible] abhorrent system that ever [illegible]

tion within his own limits, and let it be extended no further. But an inordinate desire to plunder his neighbor of his liberty, his strength and his life, that he may prey upon him, cannot be far out of the neighborhood of the cannibal; for the latter, after he has devoured the flesh, will leave the bones and skin of his victim; and what does the slaveholder leave more? for he eats up the hard earnings, the strength, activity, life, and often the flesh, by forced overlabor in cruel bondage. And for all these evils we are brought to the very verge of ruin; and shall we pursue this course till it is accomplished? The slave code would better befit the lower regions than a race of civilized men. Truly, "the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel."

We love peace, and would rejoice to see it restored, and the government based on the word of God. We cherish no hostile feelings towards our common brotherhood at the South. But the principle of slavery is so abhorrent to humanity, and so antagonistic to the spirit of the gospel, that we cannot but look upon it with reprobation. Talk not of childish sympathy, nor sickly sentimentalism; these have no place here: but a stern and uncompromising regard for humanity; not one particular class, but the whole family; though the weak and defenceless, especially when groaning under the oppressor's rod, are subjects of our supreme commiseration. We cannot lay the subject down, so long as the monster is raising his hydra-head, and aspiring to grasp the reins, and rule the nation. Remove the nuisance, and the offence will cease; but till the day of judgment opens, the faithful brother will fearlessly stand forth in defence of his helpless brother, of the same holy family, whether white or black. The command to "defend the poor and fatherless," has more weight with him than the threats of a lawless mob. Those who wish to cherish this serpent in their bosom should be careful to nurse it in their own domains; for should it be allowed to stalk abroad over the land, it may receive a death-blow.

But the day of avenging justice is at the door; yes, "the day of the vengeance of our God" is at hand, when the Lord Jesus will be revealed from heaven, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that obey not the gospel. "But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth?" "I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the adulterers, and against false accusers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts." "And now we call the proud happy; yea, they that work wickedness are set up; yea, they that tempt God, are even delivered." But the tables will be turned. Already a wo is gone out against "the oppressing city." "She obeyed not the voice; . . . she drew not near her God." "Her princes within her are roaring lions; her judges are evening wolves; they gnaw not the bones till the morrow." "Her prophets are light and treacherous persons; her priests have polluted the sanctuary; they have done violence to the law." . . . Therefore wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey; for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger; for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy." "Let mine outcasts dwell with thee, Moab; be thou a covert to them from the face of the spoiler; for the extortioner is at an end, the spoiler ceaseth, the oppressors are consumed out of the land."

O ye merchandizers of "slaves and souls of men," "gather yourselves together; before the decree bring forth; before the day pass as chaff; before the day of the Lord's anger come upon you:" "undo the heavy burdens; let the oppressed go free; break every yoke." "Seek the Lord, seek righteousness; it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger."

The Work of an Evangelist.

"Do the work of an evangelist."—2 Tim. 4: 5.

What an important work, when entered into understandingly; what sacrifices of everything that earth holds dear does it cost; and yet how readily and cheerfully those primitive evangelists gave themselves to the work. Read Paul's account of himself in Acts 20: 18—36. Note especially the 22d and 24th verses. Also, 2 Cor. 11th chap., Phil. 3d chap. Then notice his instructions to Timothy all through the two Epistles. In a word, he wished Timothy to follow him as he had followed Christ; and he had confidence in him as a genuine christian. Phil. 2: 19—22; 2 Tim. 1: 5. Now what made these men so dead to this world? I answer, their unwavering confidence in God and all his great and precious promises. Timothy, like Paul, died a martyr, in the firm belief of a glorious resurrection.

But my object was not to describe the work of an evangelist. God's heralds ought to know what it is and feel it; and I think some do fully. I hope all do. I wish briefly on one or two points to state what I do not think is the work of an evangelist.

First. One who instead of going forth, east, west, north and south, filled with love for the perishing, breaking into new places, preaching in barns, school-houses, out doors, when weather permits, footing it when they cannot ride, not stopping to count cost or even their "own lives dear," cheerful or depressed, just in proportion as they are successful in winning souls to Christ; one who instead of doing this makes his preaching a means of getting a living (and I believe God's ministers ought to be sustained), sending all appointments to old established churches, always aiming to get most of them where they pay best, where there is good, congenial society, to spend a week or more between Sundays, in idling away time, feasting and pampering these frail bodies, careful not to preach doctrines to which the church where you are for the time being is opposed; surely, I see no cross in this. Such seem not like toil-worn pilgrims to me; they look to me as though their movements generally must be in harmony with the fleshly desires. I see no difference between such and the pampered priesthood of other sects. In a word, they do not seem to me to be doing the work of an evangelist.

Second. When a preacher goes into a place, instead of doing the work of an evangelist, he goes from house to house, listening with greedy ears to every tale of scandal instead of reproving them, and then retails it from house to house, no matter how it may injure his brother or sister, and then, when he leaves, peddles it all through the regions where he travels, and when he returns he comes with some horrid story of some ministering brother's moral delinquency, who like him visits the place, they both professing to be brother pilgrims; thus, instead of being engaged entirely in the promulgation of the gospel of peace, he is unwittingly becoming a tool of Satan, continually filling the ears with the shortcomings of his brethren in the ministry. Such persons, I apprehend, are not doing the work of an evangelist.

The Lord help us all to see to it that we are all we profess to be, especially all who go forth bearing this last message of mercy to a doomed world. O! may their influence be like a constant flowing stream through some barren waste, imparting verdure and life while all is barren beyond; and not like desolating streams of lava, pouring down the green, sunny sides of Vesuvius, withering and blighting all that with which it comes in contact.

Notes by the Way.

I arrived at East Boston Tuesday. Found most of the church ready to take hold and work. An interest was soon manifested among sinners and a good work began, which resulted in about a dozen desiring prayers during the week, mostly heads of families; and some of the old fashioned, cutting conviction that caused the convict to cry for mercy so loud as to be heard above everything else. Some came out clear in a short time and began to exhort their friends. Others that had become cold in consequence of neglecting duty, saw their position, after looking into the gospel glass, and had to go miles to perform duties that could have been done a short time before without going a rod. But God blest those that did it. Others had heavy crosses, and took them up and got blest as they never did before. The blessing is always a step or two beyond the cross. I rejoiced to see Sr. Cottle there from Scituate, with the armor on, willing to do her duty in a city among strangers. East Boston is a favorite spot with me. I have many good friends there and would like to have stayed longer, but duty called me to West Boylston, to a new field among strangers, and knowing Bro. White and wife to be the best of nurses, I felt that the convert would be cared for.

Had much perplexity in getting to Boylston. First meeting but few out, sectarianism opposing, and the devil scoffing. Second meeting, difficulty about the key of the school-house. Got into the window and took the lock off. Third meeting, the committee demanded the key, but the old Pharisee let us have it for that time, saying that he had rather have Universalism preached than our doctrine. After this squall was over we were admitted to preach, and the devil commenced his work by two old colored Methodists who had troubled the Advent meeting before. The old woman said I had preached a lie, and we were a set of liars, etc. I called her to order when her husband interfered, as he did the evening before. They said they were Methodists. I told them the devil was in them if they were. This tapped the fountain of the bitter waters of hypocrisy, and they commenced cursing, and a real bedlam began. Some were scared and cried. I closed the meeting, and appointed another the next day, Sunday. This is a great change in my situation in three days, from a good, peaceable time in East Boston among the best of friends, a good congregation of attentive listeners. Imagine the change—up here among strangers, roads all mud, very few out, school-house small and poorly lighted with candles, rowdies cutting up the candles near them and scoffing; professors getting mad and swearing, our brethren and sisters crying. I said to myself, I am glad Bro. White did not come in my stead, as proposed. I don't wonder Bro. Ayers thought it was a hard place, and wanted me to go and hew out some crooked sticks. As you agreed to go and pick up chips, there is a chance now. I was sorry that you was not with me in the battle. Saturday evening you would have seen the elements secretly holding the work of God. But calling for the names of the disturbers scattered the foes, and we had peace on Sunday. Now, Bro. Ayers, you must not think strange, if, when you go there, you find some of those crooked sticks cut in two. They were so very crooked I could not get along without. There are a few good children struggling for the truth.

I have been out nine weeks this trip, and it is the worst job I have had,—building water wheels is far preferable. I am going home to work awhile to get breath before I try it again.

Report of Conference at Kennebunk.

This meeting commenced according to appointment, Thursday eve., and although the weather was unfavorable and the traveling very bad during the entire meeting, yet the attendance was good, exhibiting a marked interest in the meeting. There were no new cases of conversion, but a deep conviction was apparent upon the minds of some of the unconverted, and the church was much revived and comforted. Preaching Brn. present were O. R. Fassett, R. R. York, J. A. Libby and N. Smith. The preaching was good and well calculated to strengthen the weak, arouse the backslidden, alarm the sinner and cheer the faithful. The prayer meetings were very interesting. Sunday P. M., after services, about fifty partook of the emblems of the broken body of our Savior, after which there were twenty-five warm exhortations in about eighteen minutes. In the evening, though the traveling was so very bad, the house was filled with attentive listeners, who paid marked attention to a very interesting sermon, preached by Bro. O. R. Fassett from Rev. 4: 1, which closed our very interesting and profitable meeting, and we trust the effort made will result in the upbuilding of the cause in this place and the salvation of souls.

During this meeting the brethren and sisters met to consider the subject of quarterly conferences in the western part of Maine. After a free expression upon the subject, it was unanimously agreed that such conferences would be beneficial to the cause, and that they be hereafter continued, and that W. H. Mitchell send a report of this conference to the "Crisis," and a request that any church desiring the next conference make known such desire to him, a due notice of which would be published in the "Crisis."

Berlin Falls, N. H.

Bro. Grant:—Having just left Berlin Falls where I have spent the last two weeks, I write by request of brethren there, to give some notice of the cause with them. Berlin Falls is on the Grand Trunk R. R., six miles west from Gorham. Bro. Lord, of Frankfort, Me., went there about five or six years ago, and for a year or two, said but little on the subject of our "blessed hope," but he became dissatisfied with this manner of life, and I guess his Lord did too, and he began to speak upon the hope set before us as he had opportunity. Finding an ear to hear and encouraging fruit appearing, he commenced to hold meetings, and soon one after another began to confess the faith. Fifteen or more have embraced the truth there. Some have moved away, and some have died, leaving about ten in the vicinity, who are striving to live amidst opposition and prejudice, though not so strong as I have found in some places. Bro. Lord says that he is not called to preach, but the fruit manifest there as arising from his efforts shows that he is called to do just as he has done since he began to do. It matters not what wonderful "visions," or "woes," one may have as evidencing their call to preach, a genuine call must be attended with genuine fruit, and where this fruit appears it demands a continuation of the efforts which produce it, call it "preaching," "teaching," "exhorting," or what we will.

He has been assisted by Bro. York, who paid them one visit, and Bro. Howard, who has visited them twice. And now, by the writer, who spoke to them ten times, besides two funeral occasions. The brethren take eight copies of the "Crisis," in the place; and, though poor in this world, are anxious to have brethren visit them and dispense the word of life, and share with them their temporal blessings as the Lord prospers them.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 13, 1861.

New Volume.

With this number commences a new volume of the Crisis. We hope our subscribers will forward as soon as possible the advance pay for it, and make an earnest effort to get new subscribers. Let us try to do more this year for our heavenly Master than ever before, by way of spreading the evidences of his coming. Let no child of his be idle. Our work is evidently nearly done, and oh! let it be "well done."

"They were Terrified."

An inquirer wishes to know the meaning of Luke 24: 37–39,—"But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit. And he said unto them, why are ye troubled? and why do thoughts arise in your hearts? Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself; handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have."

The questioner says, "Would not Christ's answer imply that a spirit has not corporeal being?" We think not; but simply that a spirit, or angel is not made of dust as we are. Angels are called "spirits," hence a single one would be "a spirit." But they are corporeal beings, as is shown by their visit to Lot before the destruction of Sodom. He said to them, "Behold now, my lords turn in, I pray you, into your servant's house, and tarry all night, and wash your feet . . . . And they turned in unto him, and entered into his house; and he made them a feast, and did bake unleavened bread, and they did eat."—Gen. 19: 2–3.

At the resurrection of Christ, an "angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone and sat upon it."—Matt. 28: 2. This angel talked with the women who came to the sepulchre.

After the angel had instructed John upon the isle of Patmos, the revelator says, "I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things."—Rev. 22: 8. These and many other passages prove that an angel, or spirit, is a corporeal being, as truly as man, or our Savior; but they are not "flesh and bones" as we are. The Savior "took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham."—Heb. 2: 16.

We do not know of what the angels are made, only that they are not "flesh and bones;" but we do know that they are corporeal beings, because they are thus revealed in the Bible.

"What is that to Thee?"

A correspondent wishes to know the meaning of John 20: 22–23, which reads:—"Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me. Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die; yet Jesus said not unto him, He shall not die; but, if I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?"

This passage appears to afford positive proof that the disciples did not believe in the doctrine that Christ comes at death, as many hold at the present day; because the ground on which they predicated the belief that John "should not die," was the remark of the Savior, "If I will that he tarry till I come." The Lord had taught them that the believers who were alive at his coming should "never die;" hence if John lived till that time, he would "not die." But if he was pleased to let him live till his return, it was not Peter's business, to be over anxious about the matter, but to continue following Christ.

Had the disciples believed Christ comes at death, all can see the absurdity of the report that John "should not die" if he lived till the coming of the Lord.

Again, if Christ comes at death, he must have come many millions of times before his first advent!

The Apocrypha.

The following extracts from the Apocrypha show the faith of those who wrote it, and are in harmony with the Bible; thus giving evidence that the writers received their theology from the Scriptures. In 2 Maccabees, chap. 7, is an account of the cruel torture of a mother and seven sons, who were finally put to death for refusing to eat swine's flesh, as commanded by king Antiochus. After the first had been maimed in a shocking manner, causing his death, the tormentor commenced on the second, who, when he was at the last gasp, said, "Thou like a fury takest us out of this present life, but the King of the world shall raise us up, who have died for his laws, unto everlasting life." After him, the third was tortured and maimed, but he said, when speaking of his severed parts, "These I had from heaven; and for his laws I despise them; and from him I hope to receive them again." When the fourth was ready to die, he said, "It is good, being put to death by men, to look for hope from God to be raised up again by him."

It is said of the mother, "When she saw her seven sons slain within the space of one day, she bare it with good courage, because of the hope that she had in the Lord. Yea, she exhorted every one of them in her own language, filled with courageous spirits; and stirring up her womanish thoughts with a manly stomach, she said unto them, ... 'I neither gave you breath nor life, neither was it I that formed the members of every one of you; but doubtless the Creator of the world, who formed the generation of man, and found out the beginning of all things, will also of his own mercy give you breath and life again.'"

It appears plain that this mother and her devoted sons had not adopted the heathen notion that dead men are still alive, but believed in harmony with the Bible, that their future life depended on the resurrection of the dead.

Conversation with an Atheist.

During our late tour in Canada, we happened to be stopping where we fell in company with an avowed Atheist. He was a strong-minded, intelligent man, who once enjoyed religion, as in the case with most of this class. He appeared to be kind-hearted, but pronounced our "blessed hope" "a humbug." In the early part of our conversation, he said, "You do not know me; I am an Atheist."

Then you believe there is no God?

"Yes."

Will you admit that wherever there is evidence of design, it is proof of a designer?

"Yes."

And that the existence of a law is proof that there is a law-giver?

"Yes."

You must allow that there is evidence of design and of laws beyond the power of man to execute?

"Yes."

Well, with your position, who is the designer and law-maker?

Although the question was frequently pressed home upon him, he could give no answer, only that there was a "mystery" about it. He afterwards remarked, "I am a miserable man, but there is no hope for me." When exhorted to be a christian, he replied, "It is impossible. You might as well dig gold out of this floor." We felt sorry for the man, and urged him to return to the Lord and be saved. The Holy Spirit seemed to be striving with him, but he said his infidel objections kept coming in against the good influences of the Spirit. May the Lord have mercy on him.

Garibaldian Song.

In Italy, the people are enthusiastic in anticipating the events of the coming year. They take delight in singing of Garibaldi, the modern Cyrus. The following, though losing some of its force when translated in English, will give the reader some idea of their feelings and expectations:—

"In the month of April he will mount his horse,
And every one will then be ready for the grand ball;
Our enemies cannot resist
This man sent by Jesus Christ."

☞ We give below the closing paragraphs of President Lincoln's Inaugural Address. The whole was worthy of the man.

"My countrymen, one and all, think calmly and well upon this whole subject. Nothing valuable can be lost by taking time. If there be an object to hurry any of you in hot haste to a step which you would never take deliberately, that object will be frustrated by taking time, but no good object can be frustrated by it. Such of you as are now dissatisfied still have the old Constitution unimpaired, and on the sensitive point—the laws of your own framing under it, while the new Administration have no immediate power, if it would, to change either. If it were admitted that you who are dissatisfied hold the right side in the dispute, there is still no single good cause for precipitate action.

Intelligence, patriotism, christianity and a firm reliance on Him who has never yet forsaken this favored land, are still competent to adjust, in the best way, all our present difficulties.

In your hands, my dissatisfied fellow-countrymen, and not in mine, is the momentous issue of civil war. The Government will not assail you. You can have no conflict without being yourselves the aggressors.

You have no oath registered in heaven to destroy the government; while I shall have the most solemn one to preserve, protect and defend it.

I am loth to close. We are not enemies, but friends. We must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection.

The mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battle-field and patriot grave to every living heart and hearthstone all over this broad land, will yet swell the chorus of the Union when again touched, as surely as they will be, by the better angels of our nature."

Courage.—The world calls that man courageous who dares face any of his fellows in open fight; let no one decide his valor until it has been proved that he is brave enough to face that strongest enemy—self. That is the test! how few could stand it! how many would be stripped of their blood-earned laurels and tracked with the reproach of cowardice! Whoso gaineth a victory over self is a conqueror indeed! It matters not what road we take; self is always lying in ambush ready to attack us with some "easily besetting sin." Rarely are we on our guard; often put to flight; often vanquished!—Ex.

For the Crisis.

My Journal.

From August 19th, 1860, to January 1st, 1861, I have continued to supply the Advent church in Hudson street, Boston—part of the time in person, and when absent by other ministers. The church is happily united and enjoys a good degree of spirituality, though we are among the poor of this world, yet I hope rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom. We share, in common with our fellow men, in what may be called hard times. In this state of things we look forward to the better land with cheerful hope—

"No poverty there;
No, the saints are all wealthy."

In the last five months I have said little or nothing of my labor; but I have not been altogether idle in the vineyard of my Master. During this time I have visited and labored, more or less, in the following places: Wilbraham, Westford, Lowell, Lawrence, Worcester, Springfield, West Townsend, Newburyport, and other places in Mass.; Albany, Syracuse, Homer, Auburn, Seneca Falls, Rochester, Lockport, Lewiston, Buffalo, Springwater, Conesus, Wayland and Dansville, in N. Y.; Cleaveland, East Liverpool, Oberlin, Columbus and Cincinnati, in Ohio; Louisville, Ky.; Jeffersonville, Ind.; and Philadelphia, Pa. A brief narrative of these visits and labors might be given, but they are sealed up for another day to reveal. I hope a good report may come from Him that judgeth righteously in that day, which is soon to break upon us.

I have also thought it a duty to speak out on the definite time of the advent, both by lectures and the press. And it has pleased God to sustain me in this matter, so that the doctrine of Christ's coming in or about 1867–8 has had a wide circulation. I am fully persuaded that the pious and learned expositors of the chronological prophecies, both European and American, are correct in their calculations of this time. And as neither of the publications devoted to the Advent movement advocated this view, and as my object was not controversy, but to give a full and faithful testimony, I commenced a quarterly journal, entitled the "Voice of the Prophets." Twenty-five thousand copies have been published, and scattered in this country and in Europe. In addition to the paper, about ten thousand tracts have been published and circulated; and from extensive correspondence with the waiting people of God, I am assured of the best and happiest results, both from the papers and tracts. A large number of persons not before reached have been enlightened on the subject of the personal and near return of Christ, while others have been quickened, and more deeply interested in the subject.

In the accomplishment of this work, I am happy to know that no other paper or institution with which I am connected, has been injured. I did not expect they would be. I had no such design. Neither have I violated any obligation to God or man in what I have done. As a watchman on the walls of Zion, I never bartered away my right or liberty to speak the truth, by voice or press, in any proper way. Neither have I sought the approbation of men, as to what or how, when or where, I should speak out the honest convictions of my heart on the last message of God to man. And in my relations to other papers and institutions, I have been faithful, and have done all in my power, in the position I occupy, for their prosperity, and would have been glad to have done more, if it had been practicable. As an honest believer in the definite time, I could do no less than to proclaim it, free from perplexities, doubts and sophisms. I had always said to the Advent people, whenever new light should break on the subject of the time, I should speak out. I have done so. I could do no less, and maintain my integrity with God and his church. I know that my motives have been assailed. I expected it. It was because I was misunderstood. But all will be set right in God's good time. I fear not. I have sought to do my humble part to arouse the church and the world to the subject of the speedy coming of Christ. The work is well begun, and its continuance and success is in the hand of that Divine Providence which will do all things well. I may fail in resources to carry it forward, or in my present feeble state of health, I may be laid away to rest till Jesus comes; but this work will go on. God's faithful people will walk up to the light they have, and be ready when the Master comes. We have, as Adventists, labored and suffered too much and too long, and have sacrificed too much, to think of giving up our faith now. Now that we are on the threshold of the promised land, we cannot give up our faith in the time or the event. We cannot and will not cast ourselves upon vague generalities. We have light, and we shall walk in it by the help of God. Let us take heed, and watch against an evil heart of unbelief.

Monday, Dec. 31, 1860, we held a watch-meeting at the Advent chapel. Elders Hale and Morgan assisted in the service. A goodly number of both the Advent societies were in attendance. The signs of the times, and the evidences of the closing up of the times and seasons were given, to cheer the hearts of the waiting ones. We closed by singing the inimitable hymn of Wesley—

"Come let us anew our journey pursue,
Roll round with the year."
[illegible] more sweet and precious.
It never sounded [illegible] to this time.

Since the first of January [illegible] (Feb. 20) I have been afflicted with the dumb ague and intermittent fever, most of the time. Some days I have felt comfortable, and have been able to go out; but most of the time confined. I am as a broken reed. The least effort breaks me down. I now despair of health, unless obtained in some way not yet tried. The disease is inwrought in my whole system, and nothing, as yet, has seemed to reach it. It is now about five years since I inhaled the miasma on the banks of the Mississippi. Since that time, I have had shakes, and chills, dumb ague and fever enough to break down the strongest constitution, and shatter almost any mind. I have suffered beyond expression. None can sympathize with me fully, except they have had a similar experience. I have hoped and prayed for deliverance, but up to this time in vain. Remedies that reach other cases, fail in mine.

Some time since Elder. D. T. Taylor called my attention to the Dansville Water Cure, and also mentioned my case to Dr. Jackson, of that establishment. The Doctor, being an old friend, sent me an invitation to visit his institution, and try the water treatment, with a view to restoring my health. But I had so much to do, I thought it best to keep at work as long as possible. Since that time, I have visited the institution, and both Doctors Jackson and Hurd repeated the invitation to come. But still I thought I could not take the time. But now, after a sickness of about two months, and no sign of improvement, I have concluded to "go and wash in Jordan," to speak in a figure, or literally, to try the water cure.

While writing the above, I received the following note, by post, from Elder Taylor:

"I exceedingly regret your constant illness, and the pressure and want it occasions. I am confident you will never be well and will utterly break down, unless you come here for six months and make a radical change in your habits, and especially your diet. If you could eradicate that fever miasma from your system, where it burrows deep and like a pent up fire, and be washed here as I have been, be simple in your diet—avoiding all stimulants, which only patch up for the time, you would be able to do more in one year than you now do in three. And if it be among the possibilities, I pray you do it."

Well, Bro. Taylor, I shall try. I have just made the resolution, and pray that God will strengthen me to carry it out. In dependence upon God, I hope, by the simple remedies of the water cure, to get my health again. And if so, the best portion of my life for usefulness in the cause of God is before me. I shall rejoice in the hour that I am able to gird on the armor anew for the battle. Much is to be done, and the time is short. Many souls are to be gathered out of the world for the kingdom. I hope to share in this work, and witness the end of earthly labors about 1867–8, and the return of Jesus, to reign over a redeemed universe. But if, in the providence of God, I am destined to sink under fell disease, and finally grapple with the monster Death, and sleep in Jesus, it will be well. I submit, and as an old soldier shall lay off my armor, in the hope of living again in the resurrection of the just. Brethren and sisters, pray for me.

My post-office address will be Dansville, Livingston county, N. Y., and I shall be glad to hear from my friends. On business of the "Voice," etc., send to Boston, as usual.

Correspondence.

From C. S. Emerson.

Bro. Grant:—I would say for the encouragement of the brethren who labor for the salvation of sinners, that the Lord has blessed the preaching of the word in the east part of this town at the Pond. Some twenty have been converted and reclaimed from a backslidden state; eight have been baptized, and the work is going on notwithstanding the opposition. Glory to God, there is power in the truth to save all that will believe. Some of the old Pharisees think if we would leave these non-essential points, the coming of the Lord, the unconscious state of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked, we might do much more good; but we labor to get men converted to God and his truth. I never more saw the importance of having on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. The battle is coming; the fields are white and ready for harvest. Faithful laborers are few. Who will volunteer?

Pittsfield, N. H.

From S. Case.

Bro. Grant:—The question is asked occasionally, "Are there any Adventists in North Canton?" I answer yes; a few, "like sheep," are scattered in the wilderness, without any shepherd. The place is not left without witnesses, saying, "The Lord is at hand." My memory goes back nine years this winter, when Brn. Ripley and Fox were laboring in the place, and numbers of us were searching the Word to see what was truth, and the summer after, of your [illegible] and the [illegible] of brethren and sisters we could count, and then contrast with the present,—it is like the beautiful garden becoming a wilderness. They are scattered; some in the far West, and in other places, and some whose heads are pillowed in the dust. Others, because the Lord did not come when they looked for him, laid down their cross and become like the people about them, with no hope of seeing the King in his beauty.

I never loved the appearing of Jesus any better than during the past year. The sweetest music I hear is, "Behold the Bridegroom draweth nigh; go ye out to meet him." If we can see no signs of the last days now, we must be blinded or have failed to search the Scriptures as commanded. I value our paper next to the Bible. I hear a little preaching through that. It is a feast once a week.

No. Canton, Ct.

From J. Buswell.

I am still holding for my Master and trying to be ready to meet him. I hope to hear it said to me, "She hath done what she could." Are we doing all we can for our friends and neighbors? Do we love them as we ought? If so, we talk with them about Jesus' coming, and because we love him. As we want eternal life, we desire them to have it also. I would lay down my life, if that would be the means of bringing some friends to Christ. Brothers and sisters, let us be faithful to God, to each other, and to our friends that have no hope in Christ, and when Jesus comes to raise the dead and change the living, we shall have a crown of never-fading glory in his kingdom.

Bradford, Mass.

From T. W. Smith.

Bro. Grant:—To-day, for the first time since I left Philadelphia, I have had the pleasure of reading the "Crisis." I have been much refreshed in reading over a few of the many gems with which the Crisis is always so richly laden. Here among the mountains of N. J., Second Adventism, or as I hold it to be, true "Bibleism," is but little thought of; as business men would say, it is "below par." The people here have all got

"Never-dying souls to save,
And fit them for the sky;"

and if they fail so to do they

"Will forever die."

I vainly imagined that I would find in the country more thoughtfulness, more vital piety, more earnest living than I discovered in the city, which is constantly agitated by political questions. None ask us, is the day of our redemption nigh; none hail us with the cry, "Watchman, what of the night?" Their thoughts, their time, all, everything is limited to the present moment. They care but little about the future. The mistake that our friends made in 1843, has caused many to refuse to listen to any calculations on the "time," indeed, some have gone to the opposite extreme and seem to think that the world will be converted prior to the millennium. "When the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?" I shall not cease to warn all to "flee from the wrath to come." I feel that the "end draweth nigh." I do not look for peace; when the world becomes pure then will it be peaceable. I hear men often pray for the restoration of peace, for the conversion of the world, etc., but I cannot consistently say, Amen. If the Scriptures would favor such ideas I would pray for them, but it does not.

I meet with many here who cannot believe the repulsive and unscriptural dogma of eternal misery, and for want of knowledge or research, or from its adaptation to their desires, have embraced the other extreme, and swallow with delight the sugar-coated pill called Universal Salvation. There are opportunities presented often, of publishing the truth by means of tracts, much more so than by preaching. The people will read small publications, such as tracts and pamphlets, or papers. Indeed, they are anxious to get them. I have given away what few I brought with me, and they were received gladly. I could distribute hundreds of tracts with success. The people up here among the mountains are generally honest and candid, they seem willing to give up error and embrace the truth as soon as they are convinced that what we teach is truth. They say, "Show us a 'thus saith the Lord' to your teachings and we will believe them." Tracts on the "signs of the times," the new heavens and the new earth, the coming of Christ, etc., I would like to have very much. Can any of the brethren send me a few? Bro. Hastings has been so kind in sending me tracts so often while I was in the city, that I feel that it would be imposing on his liberality and goodness to ask for more. I cannot afford to purchase any. If there are any of your readers living near this place (Monroe-Corners, Sussex Co., N. J.), I should be happy to see them. I expect to preach here for a few months, and if any of the ministerial brethren should pass this way I would like them to speak for us.

☞ Kind words bless him that uses them. A sweet sound on the tongue tends to make the heart mellow. Kind words react upon the kind feelings which prompted them, and make them more kind. They add fresh fuel to the fire of benevolent emotion of the soul.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Sheffield, Jan. 5th, Betsey Neal, widow of the late Henry Allard, aged eighty years, eight months and three days.

The subject of this notice was born in the state of New Hampshire, and her early history is unknown to the writer. She moved to Canada with her husband and family forty-two years ago last March; and the trials of those early settlers can only be imagined by a mind prolific in the marvellous. But with all her disadvantages, it seems that in her were found some good things; and after living until about the year '43 or '44, the teachings of a better kingdom were sent to Canada, and most gladly received by our now departed mother, and she had the bliss of seeing the most of her family brought to participate in the blessed hope of a soon coming and reigning Christ. Among her children was an only son, with whom she has spent the last years of her life, which have been characterised by much debility and mental derangement; yet while her reason remained, the sounds of the coming kingdom were exceedingly precious to her.

It was an affecting sight, and told volumes for gospel christianity, to see that only son in the prime of manhood cherishing the fond remembrance of a mother's love by providing for every want while the feeble lamp yet glimmered in its socket; and when the last conflict was over, like a patriarch of old, call together his kinsfolks to mourn and to bury his dead out of his sight, as did they, expecting like them to come to the time of the promise that God made to the fathers when the Redeemer shall stand again on the earth, "when there shall be no more thence an infant of days, neither an old man that hath not filled his days." Yet in this life, if there is one spot hallowed above another, it is the verge of a mother's grave. Here a mother's frailties are forgotten. To this spot the full power and glory of a mother's past anxiety, unwearied toil, unchanging love, comes up from the closing grave, and mingled with her unceasing prayers in the past of her life, say to the christian hearts of mourners, be comforted, "For I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, from henceforth blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

Her funeral was attended by the writer. Text,—"Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise; awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust," etc.

Perr H. Lawrence.

Lawrenceville, C. E.

Fell asleep in Geneva, N. Y., Feb. 25th, Freddie Bronson, son of C. H. and Mary Jane Mead, aged ten months and seventeen days.

This infant bud, so young and fair,
Called hence by early doom,
Just came to show how sweet a flower
In Paradise would bloom.

It was hard to part with our little one, but we feel to say, "It is the Lord; let him do as it seemeth him good." How consoling is the doctrine of the resurrection to the believer; that at the last trump the dead in Christ shall come forth and receive their reward. Bro. Grant, I believe that our little one will not sleep long, for the signs of the times show that the hour is at hand when the dead shall be judged. I love this doctrine of the resurrection. On this hangs my hope. If the dead rise not, then we are of all men most miserable. "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." Our prayer is that we may live near to God day by day, and be able to enter into that blessed kingdom which is soon to be set up in the earth.

C. H. Mead.

Died, in Gorham, N. H., Feb. 21st, 1861, Samuel B. Robbins, aged seventy-six years and seven months.

Bro. Robbins went to the post-office on Tuesday, (19th) to get a letter from his daughter, (Sr. Whitney of Frankfort, Me.) The office was at Berlin Falls, about one mile from his house. While returning home on the railroad track, he observed a freight train coming, and turning hurriedly to get off the track he fell. He made an effort to get up, but finding himself unable to rise, he crawled off the track and escaped the train. After the train had passed he made further efforts to rise; but failing, he attempted to crawl to his house, which was in sight. He exhausted his strength in these efforts, and was unable to drag himself off the track; but was compelled to lie there four hours on the snow, in a chilly air, lying on his back, with one leg across the rail and his body inside. He knew his perilous position, and that the train would soon be due; but he had no power to help himself, nor arouse others to his relief. Who can describe the horrors which must have rent his mind while he lay there anticipating the freight train, which was to approach him in such a position that they could not discover him till too late? But in the providence of God the freight train was delayed till after the passenger train passed, which approached from the other way, and had time to stop and avert that dread fate which seemed to await him. He was picked up and carried to his home, where he died the second day after. It is generally thought that he had a shock of the palsy, which with the chill induced by his lying there inactive so long upon the snow, rendered him almost senseless, and he was therefore unable to communicate but a little after he was found. While he was lying there, a human form—perhaps he should be called a man—crossed the track with his team three times, and saw him twice at least, but chose to follow the example of him who "passed by on the other side."

Bro. Robbins came from Beverly, Mass., about forty years ago, and settled in this vicinity, where he has remained ever since. He was a member of the Methodist church for upwards of thirty years; but when Bro. Lord of Frankfort, Me., came here, he began to spread the truth, and Bro. Robbins was the first to embrace it. He loved the truth, and often blessed God for sending Bro. Lord here. He frequently remarked to Bro. L. that he never understood the Bible before. Aged as he was, he often went four miles to an evening prayer meeting. He fervently watched the Lord's coming, and often expressed a hope that he should live to witness that event, but it has been otherwise ordered. He sleeps in peace awaiting the resurrection when Jesus comes.

A discourse was preached by the writer from Job 14: 15, and his remains were followed to the grave by his mourning companion and fatherless children. May the blessing of God rest upon the bereaved family, sanctifying this affliction to their spiritual good, and prompting them to meet him with joy when God shall make up his jewels, where parting will be known no more.

J. K. Lombard.

Died, at Bristol, Conn., Jan. 28th, Sister Almira L. Whiting, wife of Bro. John W. Whiting, after a lingering and painful illness of several months.

In 1840 Sister W. gave her heart to God and consecrated herself to his service. She united with the M. E. Church, and continued a member of their communion until 1847, when she embraced the faith of the speedy coming of the Savior. Since that time, until the hour of her death, she has shown by precept and example the power of this truth to sanctify and prepare a people for the coming of the Lord. From the first of her illness, she seemed to be conscious that her work was almost done; and then, as step by step she neared the dark valley, the grace of God enabled her, with clear, unwavering faith, to triumph in him to the last. In July the physician gave her up to die, and with calmness and composure she gave directions to her companion in regard to her burial; she called the writer to her bedside, and named the text from which she wished him to preach her funeral sermon; John 11: 25. But after having been brought apparently near the grave, she began slowly to amend, so that her family and friends entertained hopes of her recovery. But in December she began rapidly to decline, and human skill was unable to save her. She would have been forty years old the day that she was buried.

Sister W. was a woman of amiable manners, and of deep evangelical piety. To the service of God she devoted her youth and maturer years. Her conscience was very scrupulous, her morality properly rigid, and her life unblemished. A life spent in the service of God could not but end in peace and happiness. Brother Whiting is inconsolable for the loss of his companion. As a wife or mother, but few were her equal; ever pleasant and agreeable to her family, ever courteous and kind to others, and to the last conscious of the relation she sustained to her fellow men as a christian.

Ralph Williams.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at Springfield, Mass., Feb. 21st, Carrie E., wife of G. L. Rice.

Her disease was consumption and chronic diarrhea. She suffered intensely during the last of her sickness, but was very patient and resigned to the will of God; a most amiable companion and humble, consistent follower of Christ.

Asleep in Jesus, gentle Carrie,
Heavenly, peaceful, quiet rest;
Soon he'll come, he will not tarry,
Then we'll meet with all the blest.

Little Franky sleeps beside thee,
Safely in the cold, cold ground;
In the morning he'll be with thee,
When the last loud trump shall sound.

Then together, father, mother,
With our darling boy will be;
By the peaceful flowing river
Of Life's water, we'll be free;

No more sorrow, no more weeping,
No more parting hand of death;
Soon will come the heavenly greeting
In the restituted earth.

Died, in Fiskville, R. I., Nov. 17th, 1860, Abby Foster, wife of William Foster, in the fifty-sixth year of her age.

Our Sister died in the triumphs of faith, in hope of a better resurrection. She was no sectarian. She loved all that bore the christian character, of all orders. She delighted in entertaining the ministers of the gospel, and in doing for their comfort, of which the writer can testify. In her death our brother has lost a kind companion, and the children an affectionate mother. Her funeral was attended by Eld. B. Cottrel, of the Sixth principal Baptist order. Text, Heb. 6: 18.

E. Bellows.

Died, in Bridgeport, Ct., Jan. 4th, 1861, of diphtheria, Ida G., daughter of Rufus and Mary Way, aged three years and six months.

This is the third time death has entered our family in the space of two years, and taken our loved ones from our embrace. We truly feel to cry,

"How long shall death the tyrant reign?"

But we sorrow not as those who have no hope, for we believe Jesus is soon coming to raise our sleeping ones. Ida would very often inquire when Jesus was coming to bring back her little brother and sister. We little thought she was so soon to sleep by their side. Our home is desolate now, and our wounded hearts bleed when we remember her winning ways. O cruel death! why couldst thou not have spared us this one? But thy triumph will be short, for soon we trust He who has the keys of death and the grave will unlock the prison house and bring her forth to life again; then with what joy will we embrace our darling Ida, where farewells and partings are no more. O Lord! hasten that glad day, and grant us grace to live so that we may hail it with joy.

This blooming flower was clipped at morn,
By death's resistless power,
From parents' fond embraces torn,—
Thus fades the loveliest flower.

[Advices of the 20th ult.]

The Italian Parliament was opened by Victor Emmanuel in person on the 18th.

The proclamation for the emancipation of the serfs in Russia will be issued on the 3d of March.

Fresh disturbances had commenced against the Christians in Cochin China.

A conspiracy in favor of Prince Murat had been discovered at Naples.

The Papal Zouaves had invaded the Sardinian territory, but were repulsed by the volunteers.

Pontifical soldiers had fortified themselves at Nanzano.

The Journal of Rome denies that any arrangement has been made between the Holy See and Piedmont.

Turin, Feb. 20. The number of troops made prisoners at Gaeta was eleven thousand, and seven or eight hundred cannon, and sixty thousand muskets were found there. Three Generals accompanied Francis II. to Rome, and twenty-five are prisoners. Gen. Cialdini has been ordered to summon the Commander of the Fortress at Messina to surrender.

It has been decided that the armaments of the war vessels Warrior and Black Prince shall consist of hundred pounders, Armstrong guns, on main deck, and seventy pounders on upper deck.

The Daily News says the Great Eastern will leave the first week in March for Norfolk, Va., where she has been guarantied a cargo, chiefly of cotton, for England, the freight of which will amount to $75,000.

DOMESTIC.

Fort Sumter. The Washington correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser telegraphs as follows:

"One thing is certain, that Fort Sumter will be reinforced within a few days, but the plan by which it shall be accomplished is not at present known.

Several prominent citizens of New York have offered to reinforce the force with men and provisions at all hazards, provided the government will pay for the vessels if lost or sunk under the guns of the South Carolinians.

A prominent plan discussed, has been to land troops in the small boats of one of the war ships, say the Brooklyn. With a propitious night, it was suggested that from one to two hundred men and provisions for them could be landed without any risk, as a dark night would cover their ingress and muffled oars would propel them to Fort Sumter, and the boats could return to the ship unnoticed. This plan was probably the most feasible presented, but as the Brooklyn is off Fort Pickens, she could not be removed without causing suspicion, and of course the guards would be increased and the guard boats would not allow anything to pass them without alarming the various garrisons.

Several other propositions were discussed, but at the time no decision was arrived at as to which of them should be adopted. All the gun-boats are awaiting orders, and quite a number are now reported as being ready for service.

It is said that a naval commission will be appointed to ascertain the practicability of finishing the Stephens water battery at once. This work was commenced by R. L. Stephens at Hoboken, about eighteen years ago, and a portion of it built, but for several years past nothing has been done upon it."

New York, 7th. Despatches from Montgomery state that war preparations were proceeding on a large scale.

It is understood that Gen. Scott has two light draught steamers ready to start at an hour's notice, to take supplies or reinforcements to Fort Sumter. They are probably the Mohican and Pawnee.

Some of the naval officers have volunteered to lead the expedition, and will return all the compliments that may be received from the shore batteries.

A circular was recently addressed by our government to foreign powers, protesting against any acknowledgment of the government of the Southern Confederacy.

Senator Douglas expresses the belief that the President has the nerve to determine what is right, platform or no platform, and believing him to have the brain and heart of a patriot, he shall stand by him.

Will the Pope remove the Papal Seat to Jerusalem?—A correspondent of the Liverpool Mercury, writing from Rome, states that French officers have latterly been very busy in obtaining information respecting Jerusalem and the state of things in that quarter. He adds that they had been taking measurements in several localities, particularly the ground that lies about the Mosque of Omar, on Mount Moriah. From Jerusalem they had gone on to Hebron, Gaza and other points, for the like purpose. It was also currently reported that a body of French troops was shortly to come to Jerusalem, while another would be stationed at Jaffa, and a third on Mount Carmel. At Beyrout, he says, the French officers openly affirmed that their government had no intention of withdrawing the force sent out, but were about to employ them shortly on a new and very different errand to that for which they ostensibly came. The French were also actively employed in making a road from the Holy City to Damascus, along which they were erecting houses at certain intervals. It is said that such a scheme as this intelligence shows to be in the course of development, points to the realizing of Pio Nono's favorite plan of removing the seat of the Papacy to Jerusalem.

The last Throes of Mohammed.—The Krim Tartars are continuing steadily to evacuate the Crimea en masse. They are said to be actuated by a fierce religious enthusiasm, led on by their Mohammedan priests, and their object is a grand slaughter of the Christians. It is thought by many that the Indian mutiny and the Syrian massacres are only the preliminary outbreaks, giving warning of the last final blazing out of Moslem fanaticism and fury against Christianity. If so, there will be bloody work in the East ere long.

☞ The Steamship Empire City has been chartered by the Government, and is now loading at New York large quantities of army stores. Her destination is kept a profound secret, but there are good reasons for the belief that she is bound for Texas, where she will take on board the troops discharged from service by the treacherous surrender of the various military posts in that State. She is loaded very deep, and it will at least take a fortnight for her to reach Indianola or Brazos.

Relief for Kansas.—Atchison, Kansas, 5th.—Seventy tons of provisions have been shipped for Wyandotte and Topeka, in both of which places supplies will hereafter be kept. The rush for a few days past has been tremendous. Little seed wheat, compared with the wants of the country, has as yet been received, and it has to be distributed in small quantities.

"Iron Duke."—According to Rev. G. R. Gleig, author of a life of the late Duke of Wellington, this sobriquet had not its origin in poetic invention, as is generally supposed. The term was first applied to a steamboat, called the "Duke of Wellington," and by and by, rather in jest than in earnest, transferred to the Duke himself. So we learn by the Historical Magazine.

Annual Fast.—His Excellency Gov. Andrew, with the advice and consent of the Council, has appointed Thursday, April 4th, as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer.

☞ Ninety species of bones of quadrupeds have been found, which are now unknown.

Friends from abroad are invited to attend, and may the Lord give us the truth.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For the Crisis.

Going Home.

A little child was going home,
Though way was lonely, bleak and drear,
But tired and faint he still pressed on,
Because the Father's voice he'd hear.

He passed the grave-yard, where was laid
A brother and a sister dear;
"Alone," he sighed, "I'm not afraid,
My Father's land is very near."

A storm was raging all this time,
And beat upon our traveler lone:
"I'll not give up," the poor child cried,
"Soon I shall reach my own dear home."

He sank exhausted on the ground,
The cold and grief had him o'ercome;
He knew not that he had been found,
And borne unto his Father's home.

The morning's rosy beams broke in,
And lighted up his little room;
He woke, he rose, he sang for joy,
For he had reached his Father's home.

So with the pilgrim. Toiling on,
Through dangers, toward his promis'd home,
He learns to suffer grief and pain,
And death soon lays him in the tomb.

The last bright morning soon will dawn,
And bring him from his dusty bed,
No more to suffer grief or pain,
No more to slumber with the dead.

THE COMING STRUGGLE

Between the Church and the Powers of Darkness:

SHOWING THE MISSION AND DESTINY OF SPIRITUALISM.

No. 5.

They are said to be "seducing spirits." Their pretensions to being our friends are seductive; for certainly if our friends have reached "home," as claimed by those who believe in the immortality of the soul, they can inform us what will be our condition when we get there. Nor would we ask for better authority than some loved brother, sister, parent, friend or companion, in whom we had all confidence while with us. Nothing could be more seductive and successful in destroying our confidence in the teaching of the Bible, if we believe in the immortality of the soul, than this pretension of the spirits.

But while it is so alluring to those who believe their friends have entered, and are now enjoying the invisible world, it is a sure evidence that they are lying spirits, to such as believe the Bible doctrine that the dead, saint and sinner, are asleep in their graves awaiting a resurrection at the judgment. When they have gained your confidence as being your friend who has died—but this they can never do while you do not believe your friend has gone to glory—it is then they are able by their seductive arts and flattering prospects to make you yield gradually all teachings of the Bible and trust to them, till they lead you through infidelity and atheism, in all its licentiousness, and finally, "off the plank." Hence, beware of the first step—the immortality of the soul. Cling to your Bible which teaches you that "the dead praise not the Lord."—Ps. 115 : 17; that man's "breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146 : 3, 4; that when the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God, then the dead in Christ shall rise, and we which are alive shall be caught up together with them to meet the Lord, etc.—1 Thess. 4 : 18.

Perhaps it may be a query with some, how these spirits can possess and control men? But I see no difficulty here, when I reflect that the mesmeriser can so far control the mind of his subject as to cause him to assume his thoughts, his will, his hopes and his fears, and lose all control of his own mind during the time. If man has this power over man, certainly these supernatural beings should be able to transmit to man their emotions, thoughts and wisdom, with equal power.

That the doctrines of Spiritualism are the doctrines of devils and not of God, the quotations already given abundantly show. But I will quote further in support of this point. Says a spirit, whose communication was published in the Banner of Light, "No law of God was ever broken—no law was ever violated." Says another, "Is God controling the murderer when he lifts his hand against his brother? Yes; we answer he is, and every stone in nature proves us true." Says another, "We believe our God to be the author of sin as of good. If we give him his due we must give him this." In the Herald of Progress, edited by A. J. Davis, we find the following question: "If there is any wrong in the universe, (moral wrong, I mean,) who is the author of it?" The Editor answers:—"Not only of course, but of necessity, nature and its central power, Deity, must be its author." But as he has ever defined Deity to be "a principle" without intelligence—"a principle of universal vitality," I cannot look upon this allusion to Deity as the "central power" of nature, but as showing that his answer was designed rather as a thrust at christianity than a pure expression of his own sentiments. The phraseology of the Spiritualists in alluding to God is often ambiguous, owing probably to their disposition to address themselves to the understanding and often to the prejudices of their hearers or readers; but their definitions of God are generally uniform,—atheism, perhaps a little guarded.

Says a spirit as published in the Banner of Light,—"We say, as we have said a thousand times before, there is no such thing as sin; no such thing as evil. . . . Now, then, if there is any sin anywhere, God is the author of it." Says another,—"Every thought, word and deed, is of God, and therefore modern Spiritualism is of Divine origin." Another says,—"Every thought that ever has been, or ever will be, is an immutable decree of God. . . . . . It is vain for a man to talk about disobeying the law of God; he can at no time disobey it. . . . . You may curse the author of your being, do you sin? No; you are but casting off the gross of your nature—obeying your God."

At the "Speaker's Convention" of Spiritualists, lately held at Quincy, Mass., Oct. 30th, 31st, 1860, the following resolution was offered:—"Resolved, That man is not totally depraved, as taught by some, neither is he part good and part bad, having an antagonism within himself. But he is wholly and absolutely good and morally pure, and consequently needs no regeneration, but only development in true wisdom." The above, as well as other quotations previously made, being all from Spiritualists, show that their doctrines are the doctrines of devils. That some are departing from the faith, giving up the Bible, through the teachings of these seducing spirits, must be manifest to every reader and needs no proof here; while it is as clear that they cannot speak of the Bible and the christian religion (I mean most of them,) without speaking lies in hypocrisy, and showing us that their conscience is seared as with a hot iron. As a specimen, they tell us that "Christ never was begotten of the Holy Ghost," that he "never performed a miracle," that "his body never was raised," and that he is "never coming again to earth," without pretending to any better evidence than their guesses, and a desire that it may be so.

That they are guilty of forbidding to marry, all must be aware, but I will quote: At a Convention held in Rutland, Vt., June, 1858, as reported by the N. Y. Tribune, they resolved,—"That the only true and natural marriage is an exclusive conjugal love between one man and one woman." A speech from Mrs. Julia Branch delivered at that Convention and reported by the Tribune, contains the following passage concerning marriage,—"When her (woman's) love has died out for the man who has taken her to his heart, she is a living lie to herself, her own nature, and to him, if she continues to hold an intimate relation with him. And so is man's relative position to woman. When his love has died out and he continues to live with his wife on any consideration, he strikes a blow to the morality of his nature, and lives a life of deception, not only to her and society, but he is responsible for all the crimes that his children born under those circumstances are liable to commit." And in concluding her attack on marriage, she read the following resolution, which she affirmed would bear more directly on the marriage question,—"Resolved, That the slavery and degradation of woman proceed from the institution of marriage; that by the marriage contract she loses control of her name, her person, her property, her labor, her affections, her children, her freedom." Joel Tiffany on the same occasion said,—"Thus marriage becomes a matter of her gain and sale. Men and women are not married in a true sense. This is what the marriage relation undoubtedly is, and yet the community uphold the system." Dr. Hatch says in a letter to the New York Herald, that among the Spiritualists, (and he is one, though not so ultra as the mass,) "Prostitution is believed to be fidelity to self; marriage an outrage on freedom; love evanescent, and like the bee should sip the sweets wherever found; bastards are claimed to be spiritually begotten." At a Convention of Spiritualists held at Ravenna, Ohio, Mrs. Lewis of Cleaveland is reported to have said,—"That she was in favor of universal freedom, and that loving whomsoever she chose was a part of that freedom; and to confine her to love one man was an abridgement of her rights." She said that although she had one husband in Cleaveland, she considered herself married to the whole human race. All men were her husbands and she had an undying love for them. She said also, "what business is it to the world whether one man is the father of my children or ten men are? I have the right to say who shall be the father of my offspring."—Boston Bee, July 25th, 1857. At a Spiritualist Convention in Kiantone Valley, Chatauque Co., N. Y., Sept. 1st, 1858, Mr. Codding is reported to have said, while under spiritual influence, that, "The marriage institution was slavery and should be abolished. Those groaning beneath the galling fetters of matrimony should be freed at once and be left to bestow their affections when and where they pleased." A lady said,—"Free love—it is God's law, it is heaven's command." The Buffalo Commercial in noticing a lecture delivered in that city about two years since by H. C. Wright says,—"The speaker then proceeded to a defence of free love, of marriage in its true sense; not marriage by law, but by the union of souls." (These sentiments on marriage are not to be attributed to the reporter.) He says further,—"It is a violation of law for men and women to become fathers and mothers without marriage. I speak of marriage, or love between one man and one woman; not of a civil contract or bargain before witnesses and according to human enactments."—Errors of the Bible, p. 64. Dr. Harris says,—"The marriage vow imposes no obligation in the views of Spiritualists."—London Advertiser.

The originator of a society denominated the Progressive Union, a Society for Mutual Protection in Right says, in a letter to the New York Herald a few years since,—"All advanced Spiritualists, though few may have the courage to confess, repudiate marriage in its legal sense, and believe in the doctrine of affinities." They have since found courage to confess it pretty generally. Says Amanda B. Spence, "The ideas of the past have brought us in our social relations to monogamy and into legalized libertinism. . . . . . Marriage has been legal instead of spiritual."—Spiritual Regr. Another writer says,—"The marriage of the spirit is the only marriage to abide in any condition. The marriage institution of man is wrong, and must be annulled ere the race is redeemed."

The above quotations, all from Spiritualists, show that they deny the marriage law as they do the Bible, God's existence, etc., and we may soon expect them to "command" us to "abstain from meat" as there is among them a general inclination to use vegetable food alone. This feature being mentioned last, will evidently be developed last in order. Hence, we may say in concluding this point, already we see seducing spirits teaching a religion to men answering to the prediction as the doctrine of devils; already we see some departing from the faith and giving heed to these seducing spirits and their doctrine of devils; already they are forbidding to marry, and shall we be in doubt as to the application of this prophecy? We shall next consider the Scripture in 2 Tim. concerning the men of corrupt minds.

The Attitude of Loving Faith.

"And unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

As the weary and care-worn traveler, long exiled from his native home, desires to behold the objects of his affection, and again fold them in his embrace of love, so do the real and true disciples of the Lord Jesus long for the coming of their Savior, that they may behold him in his beauty, and where he is to be also. Not only in these last days, when the fulfillment of prophecy concerning the coming of the blessed Redeemer seems well nigh expired, is love for his appearing roused up afresh, as though it were something new, but upon this glorious event have the saints of all ages fixed their hope as with a death grasp never to be released, till Gabriel's trump shall summon them to banquet at the marriage feast of the Lamb. Even the Psalmist David, amid all the splendors of earthly luxury with which he was surrounded, could cry out, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God; when shall I come and appear before God?" This was the great and crowning desire of the Psalmist, to appear before God; and for our joy and comfort the apostle tells us that all who possess this class of feelings, to those who look for him, shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation. And to the christian, the object for which he is coming is of the greatest importance, and constitutes his highest joy.

Another apostle tells us that those whose conversation is in heaven, from whence we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, "that when he does come, he shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." This, then, in the christian's hope, is paramount to everything else, to get rid of this vile body, that has so long been a clog and hindrance to our spiritual joys. O! who has not mourned over it, sorrowed and sighed at its unlikeness to the divine image, pressed down with the painful thought that it would never be wholly otherwise while clothed in the robe of flesh? But when Jesus comes, we are not only to see him, with all the bright retinue of holy angels, descending in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, bringing with him the glorified saints, attired in their new and beautiful resurrection dress, but we ourselves are to be of the happy number thus changed and fashioned like unto the blessed Redeemer. O! we have often thought with wonder and admiration of that glorious period, that time of introduction, when the saints on earth, at the coming of our blessed Lord and Savior, shall be presented to those who have long slept in Jesus, and whom he will bring with him. Does not the very anticipation of this long prayed for event fill the soul with holy rapture at its contemplation, and determine us to break away from everything that would prove a hindering cause to our meeting the Holy One with joy and not with grief? And now that our redemption is nearer than when we first believed, it is important that we wake up as out of sleep, and bind our heavenly armor more closely around us, that thus we may be truly ready and waiting for the approaching footsteps of our Lord and Master.

It may be we shall have to endure the warfare a little longer, engage in a few more conflicts, battling with sin and sinners; maintaining the right against the wrong, standing up for liberty over oppression, declaring a life of love and holiness, instead of worldly mindedness, ease and indifference. Perhaps our Master designs that we shall bear some humble part in establishing all these points of truth and justice, in doing something to bring about the nation's jubilee, when the yoke of oppression shall be severed from the groaning millions in our midst, and in its room the tie of universal brotherhood prevail. Let this be the object of our endeavors, leaving the result of success or failure in the hands of Him who hath said, "Occupy till I come." When it will be said to us, "Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing; of a truth I say unto you, that he will make him ruler over all that he hath."

The Inquiry.

Tell me! ye soft breezes that fan the glad brow
Of beauty and youth with a gentle hand,
Lightly lifting the curls from necks of snow,—
Tell me! have ye spied on the desert sands,
Or where icebergs heedlessly float around
The north pole, is there not a quiet spot?
Ah! is there not some little nook can be found
Where turmoil and deadly strife enter not?

"Aye! we've brushed the locks of the angel child,
Fanned the fairest brow the dark earth can boast;
And have kissed as softly the savage wild,
And borne up the flag for the fighting hosts;
We've swept o'er the cold, sparkling icebergs too,
And the burning sands with our wings of air;—
There are loving hearts wherever we go,
But turmoil and deadly strife too are there."

Tell me! ye soft breezes, ah! have ye not been
By the streams, that o'er silvery pebbles stray;
On whose banks are meadows of emerald green,
With spicy groves where the lambkins play;
Or in the city, that great busy mart,
In the templed domes, where they meet for prayer,
On the ocean wave, in the gallant barque,—
Do turmoil and deadly strife linger there?

"The restless sea with its mountain wave,
Bears on her bosom hearts brave and true,
The martyr sleeps in his coral grave,
And by him nestles the pirate crew;
Some on the mountain, some by the stream,
Some in the city, aye, bright gems are there,
But where the sun shineth and bright stars beam,—
Aye, turmoil and deadly strife breathe everywhere."

Is any part of Man Immortal?

No. 1.

1st. Does Reason teach man's immortality?

We are told that reason as well as the Bible teaches the immortality of the soul. But we inquire, what reason? Whose reason? Educated or uneducated; enlightened or unenlightened reason? We affirm neither. As to unenlightened reason, what does it know of the truth of any matter of science or revelation of which it is ignorant? What does a child know of mathematics that has never studied the science of numbers? Or a native, of philosophy or chemistry, who is ignorant and uninstructed? Persons must first avail themselves of information from the true sources of knowledge before they can know of the things of which they are ignorant. They must become scholars before they can be teachers. Uneducated reason therefore can know nothing of the things of God until it receives information from the true sources of Divine knowledge. Untaught reason may utter her oracles for the belief of the world and gain credulity among the ignorant; but she cannot declare nor determine anything satisfactory to the wise. She must first be instructed in the knowledge of the things of which she would teach before she can gain credulity among thinking and educated men.

Nicodemus, "a ruler of the Jews," was a man of natural ability and information, and possessed considerable influence among his own people in the days of Christ (John 3 : 1; 7 : 40—53), yet he was exceedingly ignorant of divine things, as is seen in his night conversation with our Lord, and from the language of Christ to him:—"Art thou a Master of Israel, and knowest not these things?" He came to the right source for information, and that for his own profit and of his people, as we have reason to conclude from the history subsequently given of him. Human intellect, natural ability and worldly wisdom, do not make one wise in the things of God; and not until that intellect, ability and wisdom sit at the feet of Jesus and become instructed there, can it know the things of God. There is many a master in the christian church who knows as little of the things of the kingdom of God as did Nicodemus, and happy would it be for the church if they had the humility even by night to be instructed in the way of God more perfectly. The apostle says: "What man knoweth the things of a man save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the spirit of God." A man must have the intellect and mind of a man (not that of an idiot) to understand and gain human knowledge; and to know "the things of God," he must have the "spirit of God." For, as says the apostle, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."—1 Cor. 2 : 11—16.

However intelligent men may be,—however superior their minds, and wise in their judgments,—however profound in knowledge and in all human science, they cannot know or comprehend divine revelation until they in meekness and sincerity come to the sources of divine information. This is evident from the whole history of our race, and the declarations of God's Word.—Dan. 12 : 10; 1 Cor. 1 : 20—29; also 2 : 7—9; Acts 13 : 27. As we put into the hands of our children and youth books containing knowledge and information needful for after life, and also place them under a competent instructor to teach them in the knowledge contained in their books; so must human reason take in her hand the Holy Scriptures and "search" them as did the noble Bereans, and place herself in communication and under the influence of the Holy Spirit as her "teacher," to be "guided into all truth" and shown "things to come." "There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." But the verse follows, "Great men are not always wise."—Job 32 : 8, 9. In order for the greatest and wisest among men to be truly wise, they must be taught of God, who is the great fountain and source of all wisdom, and who giveth to all who ask him "liberally, and upbraideth not."

The ancient theories of the universe," says Buck, "had as great names to sustain them as can be found on the historic page:—Pythagoras, and Thales, and Ptolmey, were master spirits of a splendid age. But since the days of Copernicus and Newton, who thinks of receiving the once orthodox and popular theories and conclusions of former ages, simply because they had the sanction of great names? "Great men are not always wise." They may be great in some things, and far from great in other things. Great men are at variance in respect to a thousand things; and by the greatness of names we can never ascertain a doubtful truth. Truth is greater than great men; and sometimes God reveals to "babes" what he hides from "the wise and prudent."

The Future Reign of Christ.

In framing any suitable conception of the "better country" reserved for the true Israel of God, we must remind ourselves of its government. The accounts given of various nations include their political institutions, or the different frames of society among them, whether rude and simple, or complex and elaborate. We distribute all the modes of government known under such names as patriarchal superintendence, despotisms, limited or constitutional monarchies, aristocratic and popular representations, and pure democracies. Much account is made of these forms as related to the well-being of the people. We boast, even excessively, of that under which we live. From our national self-congratulations, one might infer that this alone is what other lands need, and then, upon comparison, he might doubt if this be on the whole any considerable advantage, or more than a desirable exchange of evils—a mitigation of the abuses found in all political institutions. We only wonder that the contemplation of these differences does not oftener lead devout minds to brood over the conception of a government immeasurably superior to any yet maintained on the earth, and one that must make any part of the universe a better country than ours or all others. In a company where the conversation turned on the different forms of government, a thoughtful man sat silent, till, on being asked which he preferred, he answered, "A monarchy, with the Lord Jesus Christ at its head." We confess that no other method of administering the affairs of mankind, no other scheme for ordering and ruling society, satisfies our desires or kindles our enthusiasm, but this. No regal, no popular sovereignty, fills its office without as much to censure as to praise. No people can manage their own affairs, can devise and execute their own laws, so well as it can be done by such a monarch.

The subordination of reason, conscience, and God's word to transient interest, mercenary calculation, and blind passion; the neglect and even contempt of vows to God and covenants with men; the indifference of the many to all grievances and all rights but their own; the strife and bitterness of faction, the misrule of corruption, imbecility and violence; the reckless ambition of demagogues, and popular stupidity or madness,—these are among the evils from which a government we have reckoned the best does exempt us. "Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?" "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision." The earth needs her returning Lord, "the Lord of lords and King of kings." This revolted realm of sin and woe will never know perfect peace and unqualified prosperity till he shall "come to his own." His people individually enter into rest, being with him in Paradise, "his pavilion," "the secret of his tabernacle;" but their final abode will have this pre-eminence, that they will all be compacted into one commonwealth under his perfected and glorious reign. Their country will be the consummated, visible kingdom of God, of Christ, of heaven, the restored realm of Messiah the Prince, David's Son and Lord, seated on the throne of David established forever, whose name is "wonderful Counselor, mighty God, everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." His reign alone has the strength and the gentleness of God, alone realizing the fond dream among monarchists of a paternal government, never oppressing the weak nor succumbing to the strong, inaccessible to corruption, favoritism, fear, or caprice, incapable of wrong or error, originating not from beneath, in the ambition of a usurper, or the zeal of a populace, but from above, in the all-comprehending wisdom and might and goodness. Better the country where King Jesus is palpably enthroned, which is subject to his kingdom, that is not of this world, than all the monarchies or republics that mankind have hailed with admiration, and then seen go down in the ruins of time; and better not only in itself, but in its duration—for his kingdom, and his alone, shall endure forever.—Independent.

Evening Hymn.

The shadows of the evening hours
Fall from the darkening sky;
Upon the fragrance of the flowers
The dews of evening lie;
Before Thy throne, O Lord of heaven,
We kneel at close of day;
Look on thy children from on high,
And hear us while we pray.

The sorrows of thy servants, Lord,
Oh, do not thou despise;
But let the incense of our prayers
Before thy mercy rise;
The brightness of the coming night
Upon the darkness rolls;
With hopes of future glory chase
The shadows on our souls.

Slowly the rays of daylight fade;
So fade within our heart
The hopes in earthly love and joy,
That one by one depart;
Slowly the bright stars, one by one,
Within the heavens shine;—
Give us, O Lord, fresh hopes in heaven,
And trust in things divine.

Let peace, O Lord, thy peace, O God,
Upon our souls descend;
From midnight fears and perils, Thou
Our trembling hearts defend;
Give us a respite from our toil,
Calm and subdue our woes;
Through the long day we suffer, Lord,
Oh, give us now repose!

Dull Discourses.

If the speaker is not eloquent, it by no means follows that he is not instructive. Eloquence adds beauty to instruction; but instruction may be useful without beauty. In this case, the work of the hearer may be shorn of some pleasures, but may be equally well, if not better rewarded. A regular attention, systematically given, will discover beauties, where a careless and wandering mind can perceive none.

Even a dull discourse can be greatly improved by a close, intelligent attention. The hearer is not so entirely dependent upon the speaker as he commonly thinks. If he finds himself in a condition where he cannot do otherwise than remain in the audience, his most profitable effort will be that of severe attention to the matter in hand. He will thereby very likely improve upon the words of the speaker. The hearer thinks faster than the speaker can speak; and if he will only constrain his thinking into the same channel with his hearing, he will enrich all that he hears with additional arguments and illustrations of his own. A simple piece of music, if well performed on a powerful instrument, is best in its simplicity; but, on one of feeble tones, a good performer will exercise his judgment, inserting many an unwritten beauty, as expository of his fuller conception of the meaning of what is written. So the plainest and flattest speech may receive beauty and variety and deeper meaning to the hearer, from the activity of his own mind.—S. S. Times.

Great Swelling Words.

"That was a most masterly performance," said Mr. Balloon to his friend Jones, as they emerged from the church where Rev. Mr. Gassmann had been discoursing on the Relation of the Infinite to the Impossible. "Yes—no," replied Mr. Jones, "I suppose it was very fine, but it was out of my depth. I confess to being one of the sheep who 'looked up and were not fed.'" "That's because you haven't got a metaphysical mind," said Mr. Balloon, regarding his friend with pity; "you've got a certain facility of mind, but I suspect you haven't the logical grasp requisite for the comprehension of such a sermon as that." "I'm afraid I haven't," said Mr. Jones. "I tell you what it is," continued Mr. Balloon, "Mr. Gassmann has got a head. He is an intellectual giant. I hardly know whether he is greater as a subjective preacher or in the luminous objectivity of his argumentum ad hominem. As an inductive reasoner, too, he is perfectly great. With what synthetical power he refuted the Homoiousian theory! I tell you, Homoiousianism will be nowhere after this!" "To tell the truth," said Mr. Jones, "I went to sleep at that long word, and didn't wake up till he was on Theodicy." "Ah yes!" said Mr. Balloon, "that was a splendid specimen of ratiocinative word-painting. I was completely carried away when, in his singularly terse and marrowy style, he took an analogical view of the anthropological"—but at this point Mr. Balloon "soared aloft" so high, that he left the more terrestrial Jones in statu quo.—Examiner.

The Slavery of Drink.

One who has been a slave to strong drink, stated that he just had a few hurried words with a friend, who only two months before had promised him that he would drink no more, but who had broken his vows, and had said to him, "Oh, if you could know the agony I have been in for the past two months you would pity me." Said this man, "I knew how to pity him, for I knew the power of appetite for strong drink, and I knew that nothing but the power of God could destroy it for me; and I asked him to come to my shop at one o'clock, that I might tell how the Lord delivered me from that appetite, through the instrumentality of this meeting. And now I want you to pray that I may have influence with him to bring him to Jesus at once, where alone he can find salvation."

Thus the Savior sends his redeemed ones from the power of Satan, to tell how great things the Lord has done for them, and the power of personal religion and personal effort makes its mark upon the strongholds of the adversary.

ADVERSITY.—A smooth sea never made a skilful mariner. Neither do uninterrupted prosperity and success qualify man for usefulness or happiness. The storms of adversity, like the storms of the ocean, rouse the faculties, and excite the invention, prudence, skill and fortitude of the voyager.

Reading for Youth.

An old man one day took a child on his knee, and talked to him of Jesus, and told him to ask the Savior ever and pray to him and love him. The child knew that the old man was not himself yet a christian, and felt surprised. Then he looked up into the old man's face and said, "But why don't you seek God?"

The old man was affected by the question, and replied, "Ah, my dear child, I neglected to do so when I was young, and now my heart is so hard that I fear I never shall be able."

Ah, my little reader! believe him. "To-day, if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." It will be more difficult to hear to-morrow. And weeks, and months, and years hence, ever, could you be sure of them, how high and strong a barrier will gradually be rising between you and Christ! Will you not resolve, "I will begin now to seek my Savior?" Listen to the words of Wisdom: "They that seek me early shall find me."

The Indian Chief.

A missionary was preaching Christ to a party of North American Indians. The hills around echoed the challenge with which he closed, "Was ever sorrow like unto my sorrow?" Then the plumed and painted chief, a giant of a man, stood forth with compressed lips, and in tremulous tones said to the missionary, "Did the Son of the Highest do all that for us? I wish then to send him a present by you. Would he accept poor Indian's hunting dog? No Sioux has a finer." The missionary replied that "The Lord Jesus Christ does not need Indian's hunting dogs."

He looked disappointed, but soon recovered himself, and holding out his splendid rifle, everything to an Indian, he said, "Would he accept poor Indian's rifle then?" The missionary answered as before.

Again he looked disappointed. Then stripping himself of his brilliant blanket, bedecked with beads and scalps and trinkets, he said, "Would he accept poor Indian's blanket?" The missionary declined the blanket also for his Master.

Now the chief hung his head as one baffled. Suddenly he flung down the rifle and the blanket by the dog, and stretching forth both his hands, and gazing intently into the blue sky, he said, "Will the Lord Jesus Christ accept the poor Indian himself?" The generous Sioux could not endure to receive so freely and not give as freely. And are children, cared for and blessed with a thousand blessings, to receive and not give?

Anticipations.

No tears shall flow
In all the myriad ages that shall come,
No quivering heart shall sorrow know
In our eternal home.

No sighs shall spring
From the deep fountains of a grief-stirred soul,
But saints shall there in triumph sing,
And notes of gladness roll.

No dying moan,
No bitter sobbing o'er the icy form,
No wailing cry, no piercing groan,
Breaks on the eternal morn.

O, Day, draw near!
Send forth the glory of thy herald star,
Savior, in majesty appear,
Come from afar!

Heal all our grief,
Savior, be thou our comforter divine;
And blest at last with heaven's relief,
O may we shine! H. L. H.

A Plan of Redemption.

A SERMON BY P. B. MORGAN.

"Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world!"—John 1: 29.

In the progress of this investigation we have made a brief inquiry concerning the being and attributes of God. We then noticed in a similar manner the fact that we have a revelation from Him in the volume of the Scriptures of truth. And in the Scriptures we found what in vain we looked elsewhere to find, namely, a consistent account of the origin and present condition of man and the world in which he lives.

We now find everything changed from what it was originally. Paradise no longer the habitation of man, and the earth no longer a paradise. Now "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth together in pain,"—the very ground cursed—and man guilty of rebellion against God, is the subject of death. Surely the woe is enough. The picture is a dark one. Far more dreadful than we could have fancied had we remained ignorant of the former condition, or never had planted in our minds a conviction that there is something higher and better, incomparably better than what we now enjoy. But this conviction we have; may be as a relic spared us in the fall, but doubtless in a merciful ordering of the Lord, that there might be ground for the exercise of faith and hope which we are now called upon to accept.

But what is the better thing desired? Does it consist in the possession of houses and lands? honor or gold? Alas, how many seek to ignore the accumulated facts and denunciations of nearly six thousand years, and yet strive to delude themselves with the belief that the better thing can at last be found here!

Reasoning upon the question in a negative way, we say the good desired can be nothing less than the perfect satisfaction which man can realize only in the entire satisfaction of God. How intimately connected man is with this world, and how dependent upon God, we have already seen. We have seen that when man sinned, instead of being removed to another world as a consequence—with his fall there was effected a corresponding change in the condition of the world. From this fact, aside from many testimonies of Scripture, we conclude that the destiny of each are blended. And as the satisfaction contemplated did exist in the primeval condition of the world, when God pronounced all "very good," so we judge it would be reproduced by bringing back the former state. But the former condition cannot be anticipated until the present evil—sin and its consequences—are removed. But can sin and its consequences be removed? And will they be removed? If so, how? and by what means?

By sin, is meant a transgression of the moral law. Inseparable with our idea of transgression, are intellectual and moral endowment on the part of man, making him necessarily, in the nature of things, a subject of the moral law. Of the law, we conceive transgression would incur no guilt were it not ordained in holiness; or in other words did it not necessarily exist in the well-being of God's universe, and therefore is sanctioned with its rewards and penalties in infinite, eternal justice. When therefore we contemplate the removal of sin, or a remedy for sin, we mean not the sin of Adam only, but the sin of the world; for "all have sinned."—Rom. 5 : 12. In vain we plead the guilt of a federal head, or the native goodness of the human heart. The atonement needed is for ourselves. "If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us."—1 John 1 : 8. "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked."—Jer. 17 : 19. However infelicitous the language, the thing expressed, or intended to be expressed by the doctrine of total depravity, except when confounded with physical depravity,—is essentially true. Or in better words—"The carnal mind is enmity against God."—Rom. 8 : 7. The sin exists; exists to our condemnation. And now, how the positive guilt can be removed, may not be so easy for us to conceive, but thanks be to God! the plan has been devised and sanctioned by Infinite Wisdom.

The one thing deprecated by Adam and Eve, and should have been by all their posterity, is sin. It is sin that has deluged the world with misery and woe, for nearly six thousand years. When the depravity of the human heart was fully seen, the guilt of sin fully felt, it became evident there was no help for man in man. That he could neither efface the guilt of sin, nor rescue from the state of death. Then it was found God had interposed, and undertaken what none else could accomplish. Even when the first terrible malediction fell like a thunder-bolt from the lips of an offended God, mercy was coupled with it. To the serpent it was said—"And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel."—Gen. 3 : 13. In this was contained as in a nut-shell the gospel of Jesus Christ. Multum in parvo. And so it was evidently understood by the first pair; for upon the birth of Cain, Eve said, "I have gotten a man from the Lord." Literally "a Lord's or (Yahveh) man." The same thing was interpreted in the Abrahamic covenant. "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed."—Gen. 22 : 18. It was also sung in prophetic story, and shadowed forth in the bleeding victims immolated for four thousand years upon the altars reared to the honor of Israel's God. All told of sin and death, and of the coming of One who should remove both.

Finally, he came—literally came, a man born of a woman, heralded by angels at his birth, who with hallelujah strains sang—"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will." For it was declared that day there was born in the city of David a Savior.—Luke 2 : 14. "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins."—Matt. 1 : 21. John, the prophetic harbinger and baptizer, cried—"Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world!"—John 1 : 29. It is difficult to conceive of anything as the full realization of this promise, short of the final and utter removal of sin, not only from the burdened conscience of him who shall confess and forsake his sins, and so find mercy, but from the world. As a recent writer—the Rev. F. W. Krummacher, D. D., has said,—"There is consequently nothing more groundless than the fear that the earth may again become in perpetuity a fief of the prince of darkness, or a wilderness and desert of barbarism and sin. The blood of Christ claims its transformation into an abode of righteousness—its renovation to a paradise—its renewed amalgamation with heaven."* But more of this hereafter. "For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."—Luke 19 : 10. "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."—1 Tim. 1 : 15. "For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that CHRIST DIED FOR OUR SINS according to the Scriptures.—1 Cor. 15 : 3. "God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."—Eph. 4 : 32. "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."—Heb. 9 : 28. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John 3 : 8. These passages may be taken as a few of the very many that teach that this work is really taken in hand, and a plan of redemption is provided by God. A plan by which the sin-stricken and weary may find rest. A plan, it may be remarked, eminently suited to the necessities involved. A plan, none the less undertaken, carried on, and perfected by God, though accomplished in the person of a man.

To deny the humanity of the Savior, or that he was most perfectly and literally "the man Christ Jesus," is to question one of the plainest statements of the New Testament. But were he only a man, it were in vain we sought in him the salvation desired. For long since it was discovered that man had no power to remove, or to effectually remedy, the ills that had befallen our race and the world by reason of sin. Therefore it is that to relieve the mind of any apprehensions that after all the salvation proposed through Jesus Christ may be only a farce, and a cheat, we are assured by revelation and many indubitable facts that he is no more human than he is divine. We are informed he was begotten by God, and by virtue of universally acknowledged laws must be partaker of the nature of Him by whom he was begotten. And though there may be something in this not so readily comprehended by ourselves, yet it is a point upon which the Scriptures are very emphatic. And to doubt so plain assertions cannot fail to bring darkness where we need light. "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given. His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."—Isa. 9 : 6. "And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, as of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth."—John 1 : 14. "And without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified of the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.—1 Tim. 3 : 16. "But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, oh God, is forever and ever: a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom.—Heb. 1 : 8. "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them."—2 Pet. 5 : 19.

But with all these divine assurances, upon which faith may lay hold, it may not be seen even then, how if the law was ordained in holiness, in justice, an offender may be pardoned. Yet that God is "just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus" the Scriptures declare and faith rejoices to believe.—Rom. 3 : 26. But upon what principle God forgives, has been a question which it is possible may not be made so apparent to reason as to faith. And yet it is believed there is nothing so unreasonable in this, or that cannot be made apparent to the understanding.

It has sometimes been preached that God forgives sin upon the principle of prerogative, or right; because he is God, whose right none can dispute. But against this view it is argued that beside the arbitrary character attributed to God in such a theory, there is no justness in it capable of being seen in strict reason. It is said if God should so forgive, then the doctrine of the atonement by Jesus Christ were a nullity; that in such a case God might have spared his sufferings, and was unjust and unmerciful in that he did not. And furthermore, it is believed to be difficult upon such a principle to make it appear that God had sufficient deference for his own law, and does not without good and sufficient reason wave its penalty.

But the theory that Christ made an atonement by suffering for and instead of the forgiven, upon the commercial principle, is equally and quite as apparently inconsistent. That "Christ died the just for the unjust," cannot be denied. But to suppose that Christ's sufferings were in exact ratio with the sufferings that would have been due the saved, but which God now exchanges—suffering for suffering, accepting those of his Son's instead of theirs which this view holds—has not for its greatest difficulty the doctrine of universalism, which in such a case necessarily follows, because "Christ died for all"; but the grand difficulty (not to speak of others) is the impossibility of such a thing. For the sufferings involved consists in the final and eternal loss sustained by the finally impenitent; the whole being summed up in death, the penalty of the law. So that in the exchange supposed, Christ must have eternally lost his claim to the glory and favor of God, and must have suffered an eternal death. And not only that, but a death, the agonies of which should have been multiplied by all the agonies of all the saved.

But a more consistent view, is that which supposes God to desire not the death of any, but rather in infinite love to seek the salvation of all whom he can consistently save. And so finds in the sufferings and death of Christ, an atonement by which the demands of public justice are met, the law is honored, and hence it is consistent that God should forgive those who seek forgiveness through Jesus. In this there is what commends itself to our reason. The good of God's universe required the existence of law; and no law could answer the end of law without promising to protect the innocent and inflict a becoming penalty upon the disobedient. Such a law being founded in eternal right, must necessarily be sanctioned by God. As law-giver, he must be expected to evince his sincerity in instituting it for the good of his universe, and his regard for its honor by seeing that its penalty is duly executed upon the disobedient. But being ordained for the public good, if by any means the demands of public justice can as well be met, and the public good be as well, or perhaps better promoted—as is the case in the atonement of Christ—then it is not only right in reason for God to forgive, but wrong in him to refuse forgiveness upon such principles. Hence the benefits growing out of the sufferings of Christ are manifold. Thereby is seen God's hatred of sin; how exceeding sinful sin is. God's determination to sustain the moral government of the universe. His sincerity in professing to care for the well-being of mankink. His willingness and desire to save men,—though fallen, and by reason of the most barefaced and insolent rebellion have forfeited all claim to his salvation—and what must eternally excite the wonder and admiration of a holy universe as a demonstration of his love for his creatures.

It is on such wise that it appears most consistent to reason to believe that God can, as the Scriptures teach, "for Christ's sake, forgive" the sins of such as come unto him with true faith and repentance. With this view, the Scriptures with their sublime enunciations, holy precepts and comforting promises, worthily lays claim to the dignity of a revelation from God, while they make so grand a scheme as the salvation of man through Jesus Christ, the center around which every thing else culminates. And mankind wheresoever that may hear so glorious a proclamation as is contained in the gospel, shall from hence be laid under unceasing obligation to glorify God with their bodies and spirits which are his; to sing, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power and riches, and wisdom and strength, and honor and glory, and blessing."

"Oh! for such love, let rocks and hills
Their lasting silence break,
And all harmonious human tongues
Their Savior's praises speak."

Thus much for the doctrine that in the eternal purpose of God, "which he purposed in Christ Jesus" (Eph. 3 : 11) the positive guilt of sin can be removed.

"All hail the power of Jesus' name."

But more than this is necessary to a full and complete redemption. This is the first and pre-eminently important point, yet only one out of the many. To go no further would be very far from that perfect and complete redemption for which nature groans, and for which we have the most abundant cause in the Scriptures to hope. The reason of this is obvious. While the atonement is the doctrine that stands before all others in its practical character since the fall, yet to stop with the bare statement of this doctrine, would be a most culpable act. And yet how many, it is to be feared, never push on in their investigations to know what the Scriptures and nature both teach is further necessary to a perfect redemption. What man needs and God has been graciously pleased to promise is not forgiveness only, but with this what must logically and scripturally follow, namely, a removal of all the consequences of sin. The consequences are inseparable to the penalty. And reasonably it is to be supposed if there is a remission of the sin, there can of course be no infliction of the penalty. Hence, by determining what were the consequences of sin, we are enabled to determine precisely what is embraced in the plan of redemption. So that as we found not only an unreconciled mind, and a loss of communion with God came in consequence of sin,—but with it, expulsion from Paradise—the loss of dominion, and of right to the tree of life. So it must be expected in a perfect redemption—such as Christ has undertaken for us—all of these must be brought back. In no other sense can we understand the text already referred to,—1 John 1 : 29; or again, 1 John 3 : 8; "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."* But to this are necessary the promises and prophecies of the future—embracing the second advent of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, the day of judgment, the reign of Christ on the earth, the conflagration, and "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, since the world began." Acts 3 : 21. Let the dying sons of Adam then lift their heads. Let the stricken-hearted know there is hope—hope in the infinite salvation wrought out by the Almighty Son of God. Tell the sinner if he will turn to God he may find forgiveness. Tell such as may be appointed to death, that Christ has made a way out of the grave. Salvation is free—rejoice. Sound it. It is the glad news,—it is the Gospel.

"Salvation, O salvation,
The joyful sound proclaim,
Till earth's remotest nation
Has heard Messiah's name!"

Evening Shadows.—No. 1.

In a prospectus issued some time since by a firm in the city of Boston, Mass., we have the following very striking and significant language: "We stand at a great starting point in the history of the world. Old things are about to pass away, and we know not what shall be the new. The continent of Europe, startled by the warning trumpet of 1848, has cowered into silence. And while all faces gather blackness and men's hearts fail them for fear of what is coming upon the earth, the rulers of great nations counsel together how they may consolidate and extend the reign of despotism, keep down the rising tide, and shut out the coming day."

Blessed comfort! heavenly consolation! to the lonely and weary pilgrim, oppressed by the sorrows and wrongs of these last degenerate days, that it is not in the power of all the combined empires, nations, kindred, people, tongues, infidelity, spiritualism and apostate christianity, to keep down the rising tide, and shut out the coming day of our glorious Jubilee of Jubilees. The day, the hour, is marked. The old clock keeps ticking. Our days of exile are swiftly passing by, and soon Omnipotence will toll the knell of earth's departed glory.

The three unclean demoniac spirits that went forth under the sixth vial unto the kings of the earth and the whole world, are, under the auspices of their experienced father and leader, consummating their work with astonishing success. Papacy, once the glory, excellence and arbiter of nations, is now a weakened, bloated relic of a succession of the most cruel tyrants poor mother earth has ever been cursed with. Kingcraft, despotism, has received a deadly wound. It now requires armies of mailed warriors to thrust the laws of crowned dignities down the throats of millions of unwilling subjects, if we may record the reports that reach us from the old world. The nations are boiling and seething like a cauldron. The nations are angry.

Republicanism is now beginning to raise its hydra head and dart its forked tongue. The stagnant pools of corrupt christianity and politics have bred the frogs that croak for blood, blood, blood. Kings have tried their experiments and failed. Popes have tried theirs and failed. Republicanism rigid in pagan Rome has been tried and failed. Modified republicanism has been tried in the land of the stripes and stars and failed. The mushroon falmetto waves in the land of bondage, and the once honored banner of stripes and stars trails in the dust. O earth, earth, earth! hear ye the word of the Lord. Lift thy head, dear brother and sister. Canaan is but little in the future. Earth shall soon smile in gladness. Amen.

"Thy days of grief are numbered all,
Their sum will soon be told,
The joy of youth, the smile of God,
Shall bless thee as of old;
Shall shed a purer, holier light
Upon thy peaceful brow,
Than beamed upon thy morning hour,
Six thousand years ago."

Rejoicing in the glorious hope of soon seeing the kingdom, S. S. Brewer.

Is any part of Man Immortal?

No. 2.

1. Does reason teach man's immortality?

Enlightened reason can determine the truth of all facts it investigates, in so far as investigation is carried, and human knowledge can go. In respect to the science of mathematics, Astronomy, and the leading facts in geology, though still comparitively a new and unexplored science, all intelligent minds agree, and this unanimity and harmony of views is the result of the study of these respective sciences from the true sources of information. The same has been true, and will be true of enlightened reason in respect to Divine revelation. There is the utmost harmony of all the sacred writers of both the Old and New Testaments in reference to all things therein revealed; though they were unrelated, and many of them lived in different ages of the world, and wrote under varied circumstances, and when diverse sentiments and views prevailed in the world in respect to the very things concerning which they wrote; and all because they were guided, and moved upon, and enlightened by the one unerring spirit. 2 Peter 1 : 21. Those who "search the Scriptures" written by these "holy men," and possess the Holy Spirit as their teacher and sanctifier, will attain the same "faith once delivererd" to them, seeing "eye to eye" so far as their respective investigations go or they have opportunities for information. And the time will come ere long when all shall "see as they are seen, and know even as they are known." "For they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion."

Truth is the same at all times and in all ages, and is ever abiding, whether it refers to matters of science or revelation; and that man is both wise and rich that buyeth the truth, and selleth it not. Error is ever changing and uncertain; and those who build their hopes upon it are not wise, being destined to loss and disappointment. The utterance of truth is in the faith of assurance and in meekness; of error, in the unbelief of uncertainty, though declared in self-confident boasting.

In reference to the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, the wise men and philosophers of ages past who taught it, were after all in great uncertainty in respect to its validity; and more modern wise men have reasoned to overthrow their faith. Thus the revelations and utterances of "reason" have been inconstant, changing, and at times in mighty conflict. The Grecian philosophers and statesmen and orators endeavored to teach and believe the soul's immortality. But after many centuries the authors and statesmen of the refined and intellectual nation of France declared the doctrine folly, and repudiating it, wrote their faith over their cemeteries,—"Death an eternal sleep." Greece taught the soul's indestructability, and future rewards, and punishments beyond death, in order to the exaltation and maintainance of public virtue. France taught atheism and annihilation; and denying all future retributions, rejoiced in the breaking of the yoke of despotic fear, and in giving the boon of liberty to the world. The "Godess Reason" was enthroned in the person of a vile female, and nearly the whole nation is seen in adoring prostration and licentiousness. The reason of the philosophers and statesmen of Greece failed to convince the reason of the masses of the people of the doctrine they averred, so that they failed to be virtuous and good. And the reason of the writers and essayists of France, and the members of the French Assembly, only inflamed the minds of the people into a wild and phrenzied faith, until their boasted liberty was converted into the direst anarchy.

Such has been the conflict of "reason" in its endeavor to solve the problem of the ages:—"If a man die, shall he live?" Human reason alone, and unaided by divine revelation, never can determine the question. And we are prepared to show that those philosophers and men of the past who taught the doctrine of the soul's immortality, were unbelieving and doubtful in respect to the doctrine themselves, after all their reasoning. They never could establish its validity, nor be satisfied with its truth, and died perplexed and doubtful. This we will show in our next.

A Word to an Inquirer.

"What can a person do that feels that they do truly repent of sin and loathe and abhor it, and feel that they do love God and delight in his word; who feel willing to take up the cross and follow Jesus, although it may subject them to the ridicule of the world; who love the children of God, and are willing to obey God and do every duty when made known, and yet do not feel satisfied of their acceptance with God?

In this state of mind, several months since, I was buried with Christ in baptism; it was the happiest act of my life. I felt peace such as tongue may not express, and have since then occasionally had sweet peace in Jesus; yet most of the time I feel dark and gloomy, and I often fear that my hope is like the spider's web, and that the tempter is in this way luring me on to destruction. Oh, Bro. H., will you not pray for me, that I may be enabled to see my true situation, and if I have never exercised true repentance for sin, never given my heart wholly to God, that I may have grace given me to do it, and be prepared to hear Jesus say to me when he comes, 'Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world'?

Your Sister looking for Jesus, E——."

I will tell you what such a person can do; they can trust God. You make a great mistake when you put feeling in the place of faith. By grace are ye saved through faith—not through feeling. You do not feel as you want to,—very likely,—well, what of it? You do not feel as if you were a christian. I have seen lots of people who did feel that they were christians, and yet whose lives proved that they were not. Peter felt as if he was all right, and before morning he denied his Lord.

You are to do your duty and trust God to save you, and the less you think of self and the more of God, the better for you. Love Christ because he loved you, and serve him because you love him, and then let the feelings take care of themselves. Christianity is a matter of fact, not of feeling merely. "By this shall ye know that ye have passed from death unto life because ye love the brethren." It is a matter of fact, of knowledge. Many people worry their lives out chasing their feelings, as a dog runs after his tail. They forget God's goodness thinking of their own badness. They drink tea, chew tobacco, take snuff, drink coffee, irritate their whole system with salt and pepper, and spices and condiments, and then get nervous, morbid and sickly, and have lots of "trials." They work too hard to make needless clothes, and cook unhealthy food, and earn money that they do not need; then they take medicine, have a fit of sickness, call the doctor, get miserable, fidgety, cross, nervous and peevish, and then think that the Lord Jesus, who is "the same yesterday, to-day and forever," feels just as cross and contrary and peevish as they do, and ceases to love them because they do not love him. They transmit these feelings to their children, and so entail a curse on them to the third and fourth generation.

All these thoughts are grand mistakes. I trust in God. I strive to do his will. I cast myself upon his mercy—I leave him to fulfill his own word, and I do not worry about the time and manner of his doing it. Then I fear no evil. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? We have not yet apprehended or laid hold on Christ; but we follow on, that we may apprehend that for which we ourselves are apprehended of Christ Jesus. He lays hold on us first, that we may then grasp him. Do not think, sister, because your puny hand unclasps sometimes, that he is as weak as you are. No, his arm is omnipotent, and his love shall hold you secure. Then you may sing in the language of Paul Gerhardt:—

"Is God for me? I fear not, though all against me rise,
When I call on Christ my Savior, the host of evil flies;
My friend, the Lord Almighty, and he who loves me, God,
What enemy shall harm me, though coming like a flood?

There is no condemnation, there is no hell for me,
The torment and the fire my eyes shall never see;
For me there is no sentence, for me death has no sting,
Because the Lord who loves me shall shield me with his wing.

And if in lonely places, a fearful child, I shrink,
He prays the prayers within me I cannot ask or think,—
The deep, unspoken language, known only to that love
Who fathoms the heart's mystery from the throne of light above."

Let your heart rest, trust, confide, not in feelings, but in God's word; casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you. Then study your health, your temper, your moods and conditions, and learn to rejoice in trials and in tears. You will grow up yet, mewling, whining child as you are. You will live, weak, trembling lamb as you are. The little boy who desired to be baptized, and whose father thought him so small that he might backslide, said that if he was a little lamb, it would be so much the easier for the Shepherd to carry him in his arms! And Sammy Hicks said to a poor soul who bewailed his slowness of pace, "Why, bless you, bairn! there were snails in the ark!"

So be of good courage and fight on till the Master comes. Give up whining and go to singing. If you are feeble as Bunyan's "Little faith," or his daughter "Much afraid," you must get into some Great Heart's company, and you will come out all right at the end. God bless you now and evermore is the prayer of your brother in Christ, who has been just as weak as you are, and has no strength but that of God now. H. L. H.

The Word of God abideth forever.

On the door of the old mosque in Damascus, which was once a christian church, but for twelve centuries has ranked among the holiest of the Mohammedan mosques, are inscribed these remarkable words: "Thy kingdom, O Christ, is an everlasting kingdom, and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations." Though the name of Christ has been regularly blasphemed, and the disciples of Christ regularly cursed for twelve hundred years within it, the inscription has nevertheless remained untouched by time, and undisturbed by man. It was unknown during the long reign of Mohammedan intolerance and oppression, but when religious liberty was [illegible] the missionaries [illegible] a christian church in that city, it was again brought to light, encouraging them in their work of faith and labor of love.

Anticipations.

No tears shall flow
In all the myriad ages that shall come,
No quivering heart shall sorrow know
In our eternal home.

No sighs shall spring
From the deep fountains of a grief-stirred soul,
But saints shall there in triumph sing,
And notes of gladness roll.

No dying moan,
No bitter sobbing o'er the icy form,
No wailing cry, no piercing groan,
Breaks on the eternal morn.

O, Day, draw near!
Send forth the glory of thy herald star,
Savior, in majesty appear,
Come from afar!

Heal all our grief,
Savior, be thou our comforter divine,
And blest at last with heaven's relief,
O may we shine!

A Plan of Redemption.

A SERMON BY P. B. MORGAN.

"Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world!"—John 1: 29.

In the progress of this investigation we have made a brief inquiry concerning the being and attributes of God. We then noticed in a similar manner the fact that we have a revelation from Him in the volume of the Scriptures of truth. And in the Scriptures we found what in vain we looked elsewhere to find, namely, a consistent account of the origin and present condition of man and the world in which he lives.

We now find everything changed from what it was originally. Paradise no longer the habitation of man, and the earth no longer a paradise. Now "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth together in pain,"—the very ground cursed—and man guilty of rebellion against God, is the subject of death. Surely the woe is enough. The picture is a dark one. Far more dreadful than we could have fancied had we remained ignorant of the former condition, or never had planted in our minds a conviction that there is something higher and better, incomparably better than what we now enjoy. But this conviction we have; may be as a relic spared us in the fall, but doubtless in a merciful ordering of the Lord, that there might be ground for the exercise of faith and hope which we are now called upon to accept.

But what is the better thing desired? Does it consist in the possession of houses and lands? honor or gold? Alas, how many seek to ignore the accumulated facts and denunciations of nearly six thousand years, and yet strive to delude themselves with the belief that the better thing can at last be found here!

Reasoning upon the question in a negative way, we say the good desired can be nothing less than the perfect satisfaction which man can realize only in the entire satisfaction of God. How intimately connected man is with this world, and how dependent upon God, we have already seen. We have seen that when man sinned, instead of being removed to another world as a consequence—with his fall there was effected a corresponding change in the condition of the world. From this fact, aside from many testimonies of Scripture, we conclude that the destiny of each are blended. And as the satisfaction contemplated did exist in the primeval condition of the world, when God pronounced all "very good," so we judge it would be reproduced by bringing back the former state. But the former condition cannot be anticipated until the present evil—sin and its consequences—are removed. But can sin and its consequences be removed? And will they be removed? If so, how? and by what means?

By sin, is meant a transgression of the moral law. Inseparable with our idea of transgression, are intellectual and moral endowment on the part of man, making him necessarily, in the nature of things, a subject of the moral law. Of the law, we conceive transgression would incur no guilt were it not ordained in holiness; or in other words did it not necessarily exist in the well-being of God's universe, and therefore is sanctioned with its rewards and penalties in infinite, eternal justice. When therefore we contemplate the removal of sin, or a remedy for sin, we mean not the sin of Adam only, but the sin of the world; for "all have sinned."—Rom. 5 : 12. In vain we plead the guilt of a federal head, or the native goodness of the human heart. The atonement needed is for ourselves. "If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us."—1 John 1 : 8. "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked."—Jer. 17 : 19. However infelicitous the language, the thing expressed, or intended to be expressed by the doctrine of total depravity, except when confounded with physical depravity,—is essentially true. Or in better words—"The carnal mind is enmity against God."—Rom. 8 : 7. The sin exists; exists to our condemnation. And now, how the positive guilt can be removed, may not be so easy for us to conceive, but thanks be to God! the plan has been devised and sanctioned by Infinite Wisdom.

The one thing deprecated by Adam and Eve, and should have been by all their posterity, is sin. It is sin that has deluged the world with misery and woe, for nearly six thousand years. When the depravity of the human heart was fully seen, the guilt of sin fully felt, it became evident there was no help for man in man. That he could neither efface the guilt of sin, nor rescue from the state of death. Then it was found God had interposed, and undertaken what none else could accomplish. Even when the first terrible malediction fell like a thunder-bolt from the lips of an offended God, mercy was coupled with it. To the serpent it was said—"And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel."—Gen. 3 : 13. In this was contained as in a nut-shell the gospel of Jesus Christ. Multum in parvo. And so it was evidently understood by the first pair; for upon the birth of Cain, Eve said, "I have gotten a man from the Lord." Literally "a Lord's or (Yahveh) man." The same thing was interpreted in the Abrahamic covenant. "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed."—Gen. 22 : 18. It was also sung in prophetic story, and shadowed forth in the bleeding victims immolated for four thousand years upon the altars reared to the honor of Israel's God. All told of sin and death, and of the coming of One who should remove both.

Finally, he came—literally came, a man born of a woman, heralded by angels at his birth, who with hallelujah strains sang—"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will." For it was declared that day there was born in the city of David a Savior.—Luke 2 : 14. "Thou shalt call his name JESUS, for he shall save his people from their sins."—Matt. 1 : 21. John, the prophetic harbinger and baptizer, cried—"Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world!"—John 1 : 29. It is difficult to conceive of anything as the full realization of this promise, short of the final and utter removal of sin, not only from the burdened conscience of him who shall confess and forsake his sins, and so find mercy, but from the world. As a recent writer—the Rev. F. W. Krummacher, D. D., has said,—"There is consequently nothing more groundless than the fear that the earth may again become in perpetuity a fief of the prince of darkness, or a wilderness and desert of barbarism and sin. The blood of Christ claims its transformation into an abode of righteousness—its renovation to a paradise—its renewed amalgamation with heaven."* But more of this hereafter. "For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."—Luke 19 : 10. "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."—1 Tim. 1 : 15. "For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that CHRIST DIED FOR OUR SINS according to the Scriptures.—1 Cor. 15 : 3. "God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."—Eph. 4 : 32. "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."—Heb. 9 : 28. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John 3 : 8. These passages may be taken as a few of the very many that teach that this work is really taken in hand, and a plan of redemption is provided by God.

* Ep. Churchman, Dec. 8, 1860.

A plan by which the sin-stricken and weary may find rest. A plan, it may be remarked, eminently suited to the necessities involved. A plan, none the less undertaken, carried on, and perfected by God, though accomplished in the person of a man.

To deny the humanity of the Savior, or that he was most perfectly and literally "the man Christ Jesus," is to question one of the plainest statements of the New Testament. But were he only a man, it were in vain we sought in him the salvation desired. For long since it was discovered that man had no power to remove, or to effectually remedy, the ills that had befallen our race and the world by reason of sin. Therefore it is that to relieve the mind of any apprehensions that after all the salvation proposed through Jesus Christ may be only a farce, and a cheat, we are assured by revelation and many indubitable facts that he is no more human than he is divine. We are informed he was begotten by God, and by virtue of universally acknowledged laws must be partaker of the nature of Him by whom he was begotten. And though there may be something in this not so readily comprehended by ourselves, yet it is a point upon which the Scriptures are very emphatic. And to doubt so plain assertions cannot fail to bring darkness where we need light. "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given. His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."—Isa. 9 : 6. "And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, as of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth."—John 1 : 14. "And without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified of the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.—1 Tim. 3 : 16. "But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, oh God, is forever and ever: a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom.—Heb. 1 : 8. "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them."—2 Pet. 5 : 19.

But with all these divine assurances, upon which faith may lay hold, it may not be seen even then, how if the law was ordained in holiness, in justice, an offender may be pardoned. Yet that God is "just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus" the Scriptures declare and faith rejoices to believe.—Rom. 3 : 26. But upon what principle God forgives, has been a question which it is possible may not be made so apparent to reason as to faith. And yet it is believed there is nothing so unreasonable in this, or that cannot be made apparent to the understanding.

It has sometimes been preached that God forgives sin upon the principle of prerogative, or right; because he is God, whose right none can dispute. But against this view it is argued that beside the arbitrary character attributed to God in such a theory, there is no justness in it capable of being seen in strict reason. It is said if God should so forgive, then the doctrine of the atonement by Jesus Christ were a nullity; that in such a case God might have spared his sufferings, and was unjust and unmerciful in that he did not. And furthermore, it is believed to be difficult upon such a principle to make it appear that God had sufficient deference for his own law, and does not without good and sufficient reason wave its penalty.

But the theory that Christ made an atonement by suffering for and instead of the forgiven, upon the commercial principle, is equally and quite as apparently inconsistent. That "Christ died the just for the unjust," cannot be denied. But to suppose that Christ's sufferings were in exact ratio with the sufferings that would have been due the saved, but which God now exchanges—suffering for suffering, accepting those of his Son's instead of theirs which this view holds—has not for its greatest difficulty the doctrine of universalism, which in such a case necessarily follows, because "Christ died for all"; but the grand difficulty (not to speak of others) is the impossibility of such a thing. For the sufferings involved consists in the final and eternal loss sustained by the finally impenitent; the whole being summed up in death, the penalty of the law. So that in the exchange supposed, Christ must have eternally lost his claim to the glory and favor of God, and must have suffered an eternal death. And not only that, but a death, the agonies of which should have been multiplied by all the agonies of all the saved.

But a more consistent view, is that which supposes God to desire not the death of any, but rather in infinite love to seek the salvation of all whom he can consistently save. And so finds in the sufferings and death of Christ, an atonement by which the demands of public justice are met, the law is honored, and hence it is consistent that God should forgive those who seek forgiveness through Jesus. In this there is what commends itself to our reason. The good of God's universe required the existence of law; and no law could answer the end of law without promising to protect the innocent and inflict a becoming penalty upon the disobedient. Such a law being founded in eternal right, must necessarily be sanctioned by God. As law-giver, he must be expected to evince his sincerity in instituting it for the good of his universe, and his regard for its honor by seeing that its penalty is duly executed upon the disobedient. But being ordained for the public good, if by any means the demands of public justice can as well be met, and the public good be as well, or perhaps better promoted—as is the case in the atonement of Christ—then it is not only right in reason for God to forgive, but wrong in him to refuse forgiveness upon such principles. Hence the benefits growing out of the sufferings of Christ are manifold. Thereby is seen God's hatred of sin; how exceeding sinful sin is. God's determination to sustain the moral government of the universe. His sincerity in professing to care for the well-being of mankink. His willingness and desire to save men,—though fallen, and by reason of the most barefaced and insolent rebellion have forfeited all claim to his salvation—and what must eternally excite the wonder and admiration of a holy universe as a demonstration of his love for his creatures.

It is on such wise that it appears most consistent to reason to believe that God can, as the Scriptures teach, "for Christ's sake, forgive" the sins of such as come unto him with true faith and repentance. With this view, the Scriptures with their sublime enunciations, holy precepts and comforting promises, worthily lays claim to the dignity of a revelation from God, while they make so grand a scheme as the salvation of man through Jesus Christ, the center around which every thing else culminates. And mankind wheresoever that may hear so glorious a proclamation as is contained in the gospel, shall from hence be laid under unceasing obligation to glorify God with their bodies and spirits which are his; to sing, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power and riches, and wisdom and strength, and honor and glory, and blessing."

"Oh! for such love, let rocks and hills
Their lasting silence break,
And all harmonious human tongues
Their Savior's praises speak."

Thus much for the doctrine that in the eternal purpose of God, "which he purposed in Christ Jesus" (Eph. 3 : 11) the positive guilt of sin can be removed.

"All hail the power of Jesus' name."

But more than this is necessary to a full and complete redemption. This is the first and pre-eminently important point, yet only one out of the many. To go no further would be very far from that perfect and complete redemption for which nature groans, and for which we have the most abundant cause in the Scriptures to hope. The reason of this is obvious. While the atonement is the doctrine that stands before all others in its practical character since the fall, yet to stop with the bare statement of this doctrine, would be a most culpable act. And yet how many, it is to be feared, never push on in their investigations to know what the Scriptures and nature both teach is further necessary to a perfect redemption. What man needs and God has been graciously pleased to promise is not forgiveness only, but with this what must logically and scripturally follow, namely, a removal of all the consequences of sin. The consequences are inseparable to the penalty. And reasonably it is to be supposed if there is a remission of the sin, there can of course be no infliction of the penalty. Hence, by determining what were the consequences of sin, we are enabled to determine precisely what is embraced in the plan of redemption. So that as we found not only an unreconciled mind, and a loss of communion with God came in consequence of sin,—but with it, expulsion from Paradise—the loss of dominion, and of right to the tree of life. So it must be expected in a perfect redemption—such as Christ has undertaken for us—all of these must be brought back. In no other sense can we understand the text already referred to,—1 John 1 : 29; or again, 1 John 3 : 8; "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."* But to this are necessary the promises and prophecies of the future—embracing the second advent of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, the day of judgment, the reign of Christ on the earth, the conflagration, and "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts 3 : 21. Let the dying sons of Adam then lift their heads. Let the stricken-hearted know there is hope—hope in the infinite salvation wrought out by the Almighty Son of God. Tell the sinner if he will turn to God he may find forgiveness. Tell such as may be appointed to death, that Christ has made a way out of the grave. Salvation is free—rejoice. Sound it. It is the glad news,—it is the Gospel.

"Salvation, O salvation,
The joyful sound proclaim,
Till earth's remotest nation
Has heard Messiah's name!"

Evening Shadows.—No. 1.

In a prospectus issued some time since by a firm in the city of Boston, Mass., we have the following very striking and significant language: "We stand at a great starting point in the history of the world. Old things are about to pass away, and we know not what shall be the new. The continent of Europe, startled by the warning trumpet of 1848, has cowered into silence. And while all faces gather blackness and men's hearts fail them for fear of what is coming upon the earth, the rulers of great nations counsel together how they may consolidate and extend the reign of despotism, keep down the rising tide, and shut out the coming day."

Blessed comfort! heavenly consolation! to the lonely and weary pilgrim, oppressed by the sorrows and wrongs of these last degenerate days, that it is not in the power of all the combined empires, nations, kindred, people, tongues, infidelity, spiritualism and apostate christianity, to keep down the rising tide, and shut out the coming day of our glorious Jubilee of Jubilees. The day, the hour, is marked. The old clock keeps ticking. Our days of exile are swiftly passing by, and soon Omnipotence will toll the knell of earth's departed glory.

The three unclean demoniac spirits that went forth under the sixth vial unto the kings of the earth and the whole world, are, under the auspices of their experienced father and leader, consummating their work with astonishing success. Papacy, once the glory, excellence and arbiter of nations, is now a weakened, bloated relic of a succession of the most cruel tyrants poor mother earth has ever been cursed with. Kingcraft, despotism, has received a deadly wound. It now requires armies of mailed warriors to thrust the laws of crowned dignities down the throats of millions of unwilling subjects, if we may record the reports that reach us from the old world The nations are boiling and seething like a cauldron. The nations are angry.

Republicanism is now beginning to raise its hydra head and dart its forked tongue. The stagnant pools of corrupt christianity and politics have bred the frogs that croak for blood, blood, blood. Kings have tried their experiments and failed. Popes have tried theirs and failed. Republicanism rigid in pagan Rome has been tried and failed. Modified republicanism has been tried in the land of the stripes and stars and failed. The mushroom palmetto waves in the land of bondage, and the once honored banner of stripes and stars trails in the dust. O earth, earth, earth! hear ye the word of the Lord. Lift thy head, dear brother and sister. Canaan is but little in the future. Earth shall soon smile in gladness. Amen.

"Thy days of grief are numbered all,
Their sum will soon be told,
The joy of youth, the smile of God,
Shall bless thee as of old,
Shall shed a purer, holier light
Upon thy peaceful brow,
Than beamed upon thy morning hour,
Six thousand years ago."

Rejoicing in the glorious hope of soon seeing the kingdom, S. S. BREWER.

Is any part of Man Immortal?

No. 2.

1. Does reason teach man's immortality?

Enlightened reason can determine the truth of all facts it investigates, in so far as investigation is carried, and human knowledge can go. In respect to the science of mathematics, Astronomy, and the leading facts in geology, though still comparitively a new and unexplored science, all intelligent minds agree, and this unanimity and harmony of views is the result of the study of these respective sciences from the true sources of information. The same has been true, and will be true of enlightened reason in respect to Divine revelation. There is the utmost harmony of all the sacred writers of both the Old and New Testaments in reference to all things therein revealed; though they were unrelated, and many of them lived in different ages of the world, and wrote under varied circumstances, and when diverse sentiments and views prevailed in the world in respect to the very things concerning which they wrote; and all because [illegible] by the one inspiring spirit. 2 Pet. 1 : 21. These who "search the Scriptures" written by these "holy men," and possess the Holy Spirit as their teacher and sanctifier, will attain the same "faith once delivererd" to them, seeing "eye to eye" so far as their respective investigations go or they have opportunities for information. And the time will come ere long when all shall "see as they are seen, and know even as they are known." "For they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion."

Truth is the same at all times and in all ages, and is ever abiding, whether it refers to matters of science or revelation; and that man is both wise and rich that buyeth the truth, and selleth it not. Error is ever changing and uncertain; and those who build their hopes upon it are not wise, being destined to loss and disappointment. The utterance of truth is in the faith of assurance and in meekness; of error, in the unbelief of uncertainty, though declared in self-confident boasting.

In reference to the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, the wise men and philosophers of ages past who taught it, were after all in great uncertainty in respect to its validity; and more modern wise men have reasoned to overthrow their faith. Thus the revelations and utterances of "reason" have been inconstant, changing, and at times in mighty conflict. The Grecian philosophers and statesmen and orators endeavored to teach and believe the soul's immortality. But after many centuries the authors and statesmen of the refined and intellectual nation of France declared the doctrine folly, and repudiating it, wrote their faith over their cemeteries,—"Death an eternal sleep." Greece taught the soul's indestructability, and future rewards, and punishments beyond death, in order to the exaltation and maintainance of public virtue. France taught atheism and annihilation; and denying all future retributions, rejoiced in the breaking of the yoke of despotic fear, and in giving the boon of liberty to the world. The "Godess Reason" was enthroned in the person of a vile female, and nearly the whole nation is seen in adoring prostration and licentiousness. The reason of the philosophers and statesmen of Greece failed to convince the reason of the masses of the people of the doctrine they averred, so that they failed to be virtuous and good. And the reason of the writers and essayists of France, and the members of the French Assembly, only inflamed the minds of the people into a wild and phrenzied faith, until their boasted liberty was converted into the direst anarchy.

Such has been the conflict of "reason" in its endeavor to solve the problem of the ages:—"If a man die, shall he live?" Human reason alone, and unaided by divine revelation, never can determine the question. And we are prepared to show that those philosophers and men of the past who taught the doctrine of the soul's immortality, were unbelieving and doubtful in respect to the doctrine themselves, after all their reasoning. They never could establish its validity, nor be satisfied with its truth, and died perplexed and doubtful. This we will show in our next.

A Word to an Inquirer.

"What can a person do that feels that they do truly repent of sin and loathe and abhor it, and feel that they do love God and delight in his word; who feel willing to take up the cross and follow Jesus, although it may subject them to the ridicule of the world; who love the children of God, and are willing to obey God and do every duty when made known, and yet do not feel satisfied of their acceptance with God?

In this state of mind, several months since, I was buried with Christ in baptism; it was the happiest act of my life. I felt peace such as tongue may not express, and have since then occasionally had sweet peace in Jesus; yet most of the time I feel dark and gloomy, and I often fear that my hope is like the spider's web, and that the tempter is in this way luring me on to destruction. Oh, Bro. H., will you not pray for me, that I may be enabled to see my true situation, and if I have never exercised true repentance for sin, never given my heart wholly to God, that I may have grace given me to do it, and be prepared to hear Jesus say to me when he comes, 'Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world'?

Your Sister looking for Jesus,

I will tell you what such a person can do; they can trust God. You make a great mistake when you put feeling in the place of faith. By grace are ye saved through faith—not through feeling. You do not feel as you want to,—very likely,—well, what of it? You do not feel as if you were a christian. [illegible] Peter felt as if [illegible] before morning he denied his Lord. [illegible]

You are to do your duty and trust God to save you, and the less you think of self and the more of God, the better for you. Love Christ because he loved you, and serve him because you love him, and then let the feelings take care of themselves. Christianity is a matter of fact, not of feeling merely. "By this shall ye know that ye have passed from death unto life because ye love the brethren." It is a matter of fact, of knowledge. Many people worry their lives out chasing their feelings, as a dog runs after his tail. They forget God's goodness thinking of their own badness. They drink tea, chew tobacco, take snuff, drink coffee, irritate their whole system with salt and pepper, and spices and condiments, and then get nervous, morbid and sickly, and have lots of "trials." They work too hard to make needless clothes, and cook unhealthy food, and earn money that they do not need; then they take medicine, have a fit of sickness, call the doctor, get miserable, fidgety, cross, nervous and peevish, and then think that the Lord Jesus, who is "the same yesterday, to-day and forever," feels just as cross and contrary and peevish as they do, and ceases to love them because they do not love him. They transmit these feelings to their children, and so entail a curse on them to the third and fourth generation.

All these thoughts are grand mistakes. I trust in God. I strive to do his will. I cast myself upon his mercy—I leave him to fulfill his own word, and I do not worry about the time and manner of his doing it. Then I fear no evil. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? We have not yet apprehended or laid hold on Christ; but we follow on, that we may apprehend that for which we ourselves are apprehended of Christ Jesus. He lays hold on us first, that we may then grasp him. Do not think, sister, because your puny hand unclasps sometimes, that he is as weak as you are. No, his arm is omnipotent, and his love shall hold you secure. Then you may sing in the language of PAUL GERHARDT:—

"Is God for me? I fear not, though all against me rise,
When I call on Christ my Savior, the host of evil flies;
My friend, the Lord Almighty, and he who loves me, GOD,
What enemy shall harm me, though coming like a flood?

There is no condemnation, there is no hell for me,
The torment and the fire my eyes shall never see;
For me there is no sentence, for me death has no sting,
Because the Lord who loves me shall shield me with his wing.

And if in lonely places, a fearful child, I shrink,
He prays the prayers within me I cannot ask or think,—
The deep, unspoken language, known only to that love
Who fathoms the heart's mystery from the throne of light above."

Let your heart rest, trust, confide, not in feelings, but in God's word; casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you. Then study your health, your temper, your moods and conditions, and learn to rejoice in trials and in tears. You will grow up yet, mewling, whining child as you are. You will live, weak, trembling lamb as you are. The little boy who desired to be baptized, and whose father thought him so small that he might backslide, said that if he was a little lamb, it would be so much the easier for the Shepherd to carry him in his arms! And Sammy Hicks said to a poor soul who bewailed his slowness of pace, "Why, bless you, bairn! there were snails in the ark!"

So be of good courage and fight on till the Master comes. Give up whining and go to singing. If you are feeble as Bunyan's "Little faith," or his daughter "Much afraid," you must get into some Great Heart's company, and you will come out all right at the end. God bless you now and evermore is the prayer of your brother in Christ, who has been just as weak as you are, and has no strength but that of God now.

The Word of God abideth forever.

On the door of the old mosque in Damascus, which was once a christian church, but for twelve centuries has ranked among the holiest of the Mohammedan sanctuaries, are inscribed these remarkable words: "Thy kingdom, O Christ, is an everlasting kingdom and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations." Though the name of Christ has been regularly blasphemed, and the disciples of Christ regularly cursed for twelve hundred years within it, the inscription has nevertheless remained uninjured by time, and undisturbed by man. Eld. W. Pratt's Reply

To a lecture of Mr. Leo Miller, on "Comparative view of Ancient and Modern Spiritualism," in the temple at Portsmouth, N. H., Sunday evening, March 3d, 1861. Reported by Mr. James Mitchell.

The house was crowded—supposed to be 1400 present. Mr. Pratt commenced by reading from the apostle Paul's second letter to Timothy 3d chap. 8th verse :—

"Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth; men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith."

I will say in relation to this text, it seems to have a chronological bearing upon the times in which we live. The context reads, "In the last days perilous times shall come, men shall be lovers of their own selves," etc. ; and after giving a catalogue of their prominent characteristics, then brings to view those that are called jugglers or sorcerers, and says, "As Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth; men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith."

You can judge when we get through whether the text is properly chosen for the occasion. All understand that I am to review a lecture given in this place a week ago last Wednesday evening, on a "Comparative view of Ancient and Modern Spiritualism." It will be necessary for me to give an outline of ideas then presented. I do this for the benefit of those who were not present on that occasion, that they may understand what I intend to answer tonight. Perhaps I ought to say, the reason I answer it is that I was satisfied it was a perversion of the truth of the Bible, and being thus satisfied, I felt as though I was duty-bound to give a right view of the word of God on this subject. The first of his ideas then presented was, "Spiritualism does not belong to any particular nation." This, with this addition, is true, that it belongs to heathen nations and those only that forsake God. I am speaking of nations.

The second of these reasons was, "We reason from solids to fluids and so on up to Spiritualism." Perhaps I do not fully apprehend the idea contained in that sentence. If I do, it denies a Creator; it denies that God ever created anything, and affirms that man grew the same as a plant. This may be his view; whether it is or not, I shall not stop here to discuss whether man grew up like a mushroom, or whether God created him as the Bible declares.

The third position was, "We have the same evidence now to prove Spiritualism, that they had anciently." I do not doubt that.

The fourth was, "The great mind acts upon finite minds." I cannot conceive how this idea can be correct with the Spiritualists; for as a general thing, they do not believe in a God, unless that God is in everything. This I think I shall prove to you—you may judge whether I do or not.

The fifth position was, "That angels are messengers." (Professor Pick says, they are messengers of God.) "No angel in existence, however high, but what has trodden earth and existed here in the flesh.' Where is the proof? We would like it. "Angels are the spirits of the dead." To prove this the Bible testimony was brought forward on this wise, "Bible calls angels men." This proves too much; for if they are men they are not the spirits of men, for they are recognized as men, appeared in the form of men, visited Lot and Abraham as men; and I ask does this prove they are spirits of men? It proves that they are men in the flesh, if it proves any thing in that direction. There is no proof whatever, in God's word that the angels ever claimed that they lived on this earth, or that they were departed spirits—spirits of the dead. You may have some objections in your mind. I shall notice them when I come to the argument.

ANCIENT SPIRITUALISM.

1st. Dreams. Reference was made to "Joseph, Pharaoh, Jacob, Solomon, and others that had dreams, and spirits came to them." Not a word is there given in the record of all these dreams to prove that there was ever a spirit of the dead came to them. Cannot be found between the lids of the Bible, that the spirit of a dead man came to them in their dreams. In contrast he says, "we now-a-days have dreams," and referred to himself and others as proof, which I shall not bring forward to-night. This remark he made,—"Saul could not get an answer from God because his mind was agitated." This was the reason assigned why God refused him (Saul) an answer. It is strange to me that men can believe the Bible record concerning all his acts here, but cannot believe that part which says "God forsook him." All the rest they can believe, but when you talk of God's forsaking men, they prefer to be excused.

2d. "They saw spirits anciently." For proof of this affirmation, he referred to Abraham, John the Baptist and others, where the Bible speaks of angels. Now angels and modern spirits differ materially. However, I will pass and bring that up in another place. I will just say, however, of the angels recorded in the Old Testament, they ate supper with Lot. The Psalmist informs us that ancient Israel in the wilderness ate angels' food. Are those the kind of modern spirits that visit you? In Chickopee Falls, I am informed, a man sets a plate for the departed spirit of his wife, and says she comes and eats with him at the table. You can have it for what it is worth. Anciently angels had glory, and I apprehend it differs somewhat from the glory of the spirits of the nineteenth century. Those ancient angels never said that they ever lived on earth at all. In the paper called the Banner of Light, you will find in almost every communication they endeavor to tell us where they lived, and what their business was, and how some man cheated them, or misused them, and so on; but not a word do we find in the Bible in relation to angels' treatment or residence on earth.

3d. "They heard voices anciently." He made the remark that these "voices were not audible." It seems to me that cannot be true. Angels talked with Abraham and Lot and Joseph and others. When the disciples were on their way to Emmaus, after Christ's resurrection, he talked and expounded to them the Scriptures, and they (the disciples) said one to another, "Did not our hearts burn within us while he talked with us by the way and opened to us the Scriptures?" The difference in this respect between them is, that while the angels and Christ, after his resurrection, talked with men, like men, the modern spirits sneak round and rap and tip tables. Really, there seems to be quite a difference—angels have not progressed very rapidly in their manner of communication for the last eighteen hundred years, according to the Spiritualists' own view.

4th. "They spoke in unknown tongues on the day of Pentecost." "So do we, the same as the apostles" said he. I ask any man to read the account recorded in the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles and see if it is not a complete refutation of this modern Spiritualist' claim. They say they speak in different languages like the apostles. Here, to-night, would be a good chance to test it if this congregation were composed of people from different nations and tongues. Then they were from every nation assembled, and the apostles, who were ignorant men, arose and spoke the languages of the different nations there assembled to the astonishment of all present. When Spiritualists will come out openly like this, and convince a multitude from different nations, as the apostles did, then they set a claim as having apostolic gifts, and call on us to believe.

5th. He told us, "The sick were healed by Christ and his apostles," but, he said there were "ten miracles wrought by Spiritualists in this age, where there was one wrought in the apostolic age." Why is it that they never come to light? I have traveled from Maine to central Iowa, and I have never seen a single miracle wrought, or found a man that ever claimed he was healed by the spirits of the dead. He said, "Christ opened the eyes of a certain individual who was blind." He explained that miracle as follows: "Christ saw there was virtue in the clay and by an application to the diseased eyes would restore them to sight." I wonder others did not try the experiment. I wonder some of our psychological spirits in this age have not found it out. If there is such virtuous clay in our day, it would save the so-called spirits much labor to inform us where it is, that we might take a quantity of it round with us as a restorer without continually applying to them. Another thing more strange, as Christ was a very good and benevolent man, that he should withhold knowledge from us concerning this all-healing clay.

6th. Comparison :—"There were spiritual lights anciently." Reference was made to the pillar of fire that overshadowed Israel in the wilderness, and the burning bush, as proof. Then remarked, "We see lights in this age also." Hence, you can see what Spiritualists claim in our age. Reading the sacred history of the ancient manifestation, will convince any one that their claim is unfounded.

7th. "They spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." No: he did not say that. He said, "as they were moved." By what? By the spirits of the dead, I suppose he would tell us. There is not a single instance where they ever informed us that they were assisted to speak or write by the aid of the departed spirits.

8th. "Soul reading," as he was pleased to term it. "Christ did tell others' thoughts." Referred to the Samaritan woman as an illustration of the fact, and said "This is brought forward as proof of Christ's divinity." "Now we can read thoughts of others; hence, if that proves him divine, we are as divine as Christ." This clearly shows their claim. Judge ye, how much truth there is in this assertion.

9th. "Spirit rested on Christ like a dove." Referred to Mr. Britain's child, in which he thought there was a similar manifestation.

10th. "Belshazzar wrote," he said, or "saw writing." Read the account and you have a refutation of what he claimed as a precedent for writing mediums of this age.

11th. "Christ walked on the water." I do not know what his idea is of that miracle. The only idea I could gather from his remarks was, that spirits were able to make even fluids solids, and hence that miracle could be accounted for. I have been told that spirits carry men around in rooms. But I apprehend it is like the experiment of Mr. Squire in Boston, throwing a table over his head upon the bed; it was done in the dark. And you know a man can do many things in the dark without much danger of being detected. It appears these modern spirits love darkness exceedingly well.

If it be true that modern spirits have power to make fluids solids, they could have no objection to going to the wharf and testing their faith and removing all doubts from our minds. Such an experiment, however, would be likely to come out like Ann Lee's. A man West told me that "Mother Ann" gave notice at a certain day and place, that she would walk on the water. The multitude assembled at a certain lake according to appointment. "Mother Ann" called the multitude to order, then inquired "Do you believe I can walk on the water?" (in a whining tone.) "No! no! no!" cried the people. "Very well," said she, "I can't do my miracles where there is so much unbelief; hence, I shall not try." After a lapse of time, she sent out a second proclamation that she would make another effort to walk on the water. The people agreed among themselves if the same question was asked again they would all say yes. The time arrived, the people assembled at the lake as before. "Mother Ann" called the multitude to order and again in her whining tone inquired, "Do you now believe I can walk on the water?" "O, yes, yes, yes," was the cry from every quarter. "Very well, if all believe it," said she, "that is just as well as though I did; hence, I dismiss you."

12th. "Spirits can move matter." For proof of this we were referred to the stone being rolled from the tomb of our Lord. Nothing is recorded to intimate the spirits of the dead rolled away the stone. That is a mere assumption; not the first word to prove it. They were angels, not dead men's spirits. In fact, there is not a sentence in the whole Bible from which you can draw a fair inference that the prophets, apostles, and our Savior were aided in any way by the spirits of the dead to perform the works they wrought. I have given the twelve points of comparison made between the "ancient and modern Spiritualism." I will notice some reasons that he said were given in this age to account for modern Spiritualism, and then we will take up the argument. 1, Humbug. 2, Electricity. 3, Psychology. 4, Odd force—fluid in the back part of the brain. 5, Satanic majesty. He said to apply Spiritualism to satanic majesty was blasphemy. Blasphemy against what? Against whom? Mark that and we will see before we get through. Again, he said he "could not believe God had left his children to be deceived by Satan." We intend to show before we get through who these children are that God has such special care for.

Human Destiny.

Dear Editor :—Dr. Sears, one of the editors of the Monthly Religious Magazine, notices "Human Destiny" thus :—"Two things impress us on reading his book, his admirable fairness and candor as a controversialist, and his great power and skill as a logician. His argument is learned, scriptural, and strong, and, from the standpoint of the advocates of endless torture, we do not believe it has ever been answered or ever can be. The Restorationists meet the argument more successfully, standing on the ground of human philosophy; but coming to the matter of exegesis, we think Mr. Hudson has immensely the advantage of them. We do not think his argument exhaustive. There are other views of the destiny of bad men not embraced either in restoration or endless punishment; but the works of this writer, as a treasury of learning, argument, and interpretation, let no one neglect or pass by who has an interest in these momentous themes." Influence.—Every man is a missionary whether he intends or designs it. He may be a blot, radiating his dark influence outward to the very circumference of society; or he may be a blessing, spreading benediction over the length and breadth of the world; but a blank he cannot be. We are either the sower that sows and corrupts, or the light that splendidly illuminates, and the salt that silently operates.

Feed Bones to the Hens.—If you take fresh bones from the kitchen, and with a sledge, on a rock, or any natural or artificial anvil, pound them up into small pieces, hens will eat them ravenously, and not only will they digest the bones and make a better manure of them than can be made in any other way, but they will be themselves greatly benefited by them; they will lay throughout the season with much greater regularity than otherwise, and will fatten on the marrow within, and the fat and muscle will adhere to the bones. Homestead.

Cure for Drunkenness.—It is settled that drunkenness is a physical as well as moral disease, and it is now so treated. The following is the receipt of John Vine Hall, the father of the commander of the Great Eastern, which has enabled so many men to overcome the malady; "Sulphate of iron, 6 grains; magnesia, 10 grains; peppermint water, 11 drachms; spirit of nutmeg, 1 drachm; twice a day."

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 20, 1861.

A Noble Sentiment.

The following noble sentiment commends itself to every candid mind, but it is sometimes hard for poor human nature to submit to this high standard of action. Read it. It is from one of our able contributors. He says:—"On any subject I may write for the Crisis, if, after asking counsel of God, you feel impressed that it is erroneous and hurtful to your charge; I will not censure you for withholding it, nor love you the less; we are all at the best but erring creatures." Who can help admiring this exalted christian principle? If all would heartily adopt it, the worrying anxieties and grievous burdens of an editor would almost cease. We feel quite confident if those who cannot endorse the kind language of our brother, as above expressed, were to act awhile in the editorial capacity, they would never murmur again to increase the heavy load of a burdened one. May we not hope that all the noble hearted ones with whom we have the pleasure to be associated in sounding the last great alarm to a wicked world, will most heartily endorse the sentiment of our brother, and observe it as cheerfully.

"An Hundred-Fold."

A brother inquires, "How are we to understand Mark 10: 29–30? What is the hundred-fold which the follower of Christ receives in the present life?"

The passage reads:—"And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say unto you, there is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake and the gospel's, but he shall receive an hundred-fold now in this time, houses and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life."

The gain, when compared with the loss, is very great. He who makes ten per cent profit is doing a good business. But few make fifty per cent, and only here and there an individual is found who makes an hundred. Such an one soon becomes rich. But one hundred per cent is only one fold, or doubling once. An hundred-fold is ten thousand per cent! What astonishing profit! And all this for serving the Lord in this world.

But how is this promise to be understood? What does the Savior mean? We suppose he means what he says. It is evident, from the connection, that this Scripture is applicable particularly to those who are called to preach the gospel, who must of necessity, like the apostles, leave all, if they give themselves up to the work of the ministry. They may go forth weeping, and leave their loved ones in tears; but, like one now sleeping in Jesus, they are ready to exclaim, "The gospel must be preached." They leave mother, brothers and sisters, children and companions in sadness at home; how then can they have their "hundred-fold now in this time"? It is certain the Savior does not mean to teach that these preachers have a hundred-fold of mothers, brothers, sisters, children and wives, in the absolute sense, for this is impossible; and still every faithful minister of the gospel finds the promise true. The mother, brothers and sisters, companion and children all love to administer to his comfort when at home, but cannot do it when he is away. And yet those who perform those kind offices are to him, as mothers, brothers and sisters, companion and children. When he arrives at his place of labor, he finds the mother, brothers, sisters, wife and children of the family as kind to him as his own, attending to every want with the same anxious care, and doing it with the same motive—love. His clothes are as carefully brushed, washed and ironed and mended as by his own loved wife, and with the same degree of cheerfulness. It is not done grudgingly or for the pay, but with a heartfelt family interest, so that the poor preacher really feels quite at home, and that he is in the midst of brethren and sisters, nearer and dearer to him than any blood relation that do not love Jesus. He finds himself just as welcome to their well spread table as to his own, and if all the premises were absolutely his, he could not use them any more freely. The more he makes himself at home, the better they are pleased. They feel as Bro. Sherman, of Castleton, expressed himself, when he first took us to his delightful home. As we entered his elegant residence, he said, "Now make yourself perfectly at home, and use the whole house as though it were yours, and invite here whoever you please." This was spoken in a manner that made us feel at home at once. Thus we see how we get the hundred-fold of mothers, brothers and sisters, wives and children, "in this time."

But how about the houses and lands? We see no difficulty on this point; for if we actually owned the houses and lands occupied by these dear brethren and sisters, we could not be any more at home, or receive a greater comfort. During the preacher's absence, they take care of them, keeping everything in good order, so that when he returns again, all things are ready for him. The hay and oats are harvested, the stall is prepared for his horse, the apples are gathered, the wood has been cut and drawn, and he again finds himself at home as welcome as in his own family. And the good man of the house says to him, "What is mine is yours, use it freely." Thus we have an hundred-fold of houses and lands "in this time." But it is not so with the men of the world. From them and a backslidden church, we have "persecutions," but as the final result of well-doing, we receive "in the world to come, eternal life."

Information Wanted.—Bro. C. P. Whitton, Lowell, Mass., who makes the "Golden Salve," so justly noted for its healing properties, has received an order from a Bro. in Windsor, Mass., for a quantity of the salve, who did not sign his name. Will he please send it to Bro. Whitten, that he may fill the order?

A Disquisition on the Prophecies.

This is the title of a pamphlet just issued by F. H. Berick, and must prove a valuable reference and text book to the Bible student. The author deals in facts alone, and proves the fulfillment of the prophetic writing by history, sacred and profane. He divides the work under various heads, viz: "Prophecies fulfilled at Christ's first advent," "Prophecies concerning Abraham and his descendants," "Overthrow of the kingdom of Israel," "Prophecies relating to Individuals," "Prophecies concerning Babylon," "Prophecies concerning Tyre," "Prophecies concerning Egypt," "Predictions of Christ concerning Jerusalem and the Jews, and now fulfilled," "Prophecies of Daniel," etc. The words of the prophecies are quoted, and the literal fulfillment of the same from Scripture and history placed beneath. I shall speak of it at more length again, and in the mean time recommend its careful perusal by every one interested in the important subject. Jno. F. Cotton.

We heartily endorse the foregoing notice of Bro. Berick's valuable work, which is for sale at the Crisis office. Price 12 cts. single. 1-4 off per doz. Postage 1 cent. Ed.

Divinity of Jesus.

Lest some should entertain the idea, from Bro. Preble's questions recently given in the Crisis, that he denies the divinity of Christ, he wishes the following extracts published from his tract on the "Two Adams:"

"The Scriptures plainly teach that Jesus Christ, the second Adam, possesses the divine attributes of his Father in that degree which renders him an object of divine worship.

'All men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father which hath sent him.' (John 5: 13.)

Are we to honor the Son, even as we honor the Father? So we are taught. If we honor not the Son, we dishonor the Father which sent him.

'When he bringeth in the first-begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him.' (Heb. 1: 6.)

'Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth. And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.' (Phil. 2: 9–11.)

Let every tongue, then, confess that Jesus Christ is Lord (Kurios,) to the glory of God, (Theos,) the Father. Jesus, 'being in the form of God thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.' (Phi. 2: 38.)

Prayer was also made to him. Acts 7: 59.

If it is idolatry to worship any other than a Divine Being, then it follows that Jesus, the second Adam, was Divine, or the angels of God and the saints were guilty of idolatry! for they worshiped him! He 'is God with us;' (Matt. 1: 23,) for he was God manifest in the flesh; or, as the margin reads,—manifested."

For the Crisis.

"Please buy some Books!"

Reason first, you want the books. Second, I want the money. Third, I want to publish more. Fourth, I want to publish new ones. Fifth, these ought to be circulated. Sixth, I have eight mouths to feed. Seventh, I don't love to beg. Eighth, we have to help the poor. Ninth, we have with some help fitted some sixty children for our Mission Sunday School this winter. Tenth, we want to keep on doing. Eleventh, I have nothing else to sell, no pills, patents or powders, and I will not make merchandise of "the word of God." Twelfth, sick preachers as well as poor people need help, and I had rather earn than beg it. So please buy some books!

Here is "Voice of the Church," by Taylor; price $1; $9 per dozen. Bro. Berick says it is worth $5. Buy it! The author has been sick two or three years, is now at "Our Home," Dansville, resting, and we trust gaining; but it takes a little money to keep him along. I find churches are more willing to work a man when well than to cure him when sick. What then? Shall such a man die for want of $150 or $200? Why, I would'nt hardly have one of his sick headaches for that; they used to be worse than purgatory, I judge—(never tried either)—and he had about two a week. Well, who pays his way? Why, they take him at $3 per week, and then take his wife for nothing, and the Lord provides the $3. Now, rather than beg it, I will give him one hundred "Voice of the Church." Send me the dollars, and you shall have the books, and he shall have the money; or if that wont do, send him the money yourself; or else I will keep the book and send the money too. When he gets out from his year's rest, there will be plenty of churches ready to swallow him. Who wants now to help a "poor old horse"? and who says, "let him die"? So please buy "The Voice of the Church." Read it; lend it to your neighbor, or give it to your minister. If it isn't worth the $1, I will refund the money.

But here are other books, such as "Fables of Infidelity," 75 cts.; "Two hundred Stories for Children," a first rate book, 40 cts.; "The Great Controversy" and "Reasons for my Hope," bound together, 75 cts. "Reasons for my Hope," "Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion," and "The Great Controversy between God and Man,"—each in stiff paper covers, 25 cts.; four copies, post paid, for $1; fifty copies for $8; one hundred for $15. "Pauline Theology," 15 cts.; $10 per hundred. Bound tracts on Prophecy, 50 cts.; on Immortality, 50 cts. Tracts unbound, fifty or sixty kinds; twelve hundred for $1. Have you read the Tract, "Will all men be saved?" That takes the two-edged sword to Universalism in earnest. I preached the other day in a M. E. church. The preacher who now waits for the consolation of Israel, was once a Universalist. His wife came home one night convinced of sin and wanted him to pray for her; he did, and for himself too. Before morning, I believe, God converted them both. In the morning he cooked his breakfast over about $30 worth of Universalist books that he had in his library, and went to preaching the coming and kingdom of God. He said to me, "I read your little tract on Universalism, and thought it was the best little thing I ever read on the subject." Who will send $2 for one hundred of them, and scatter them about? Who will send $15 for one thousand?

SPECIAL NOTICE.

I hear give notice that after long, perplexing and laborious efforts to collect some $400 or $500 due me for books and tracts, east, west, north and south, in sums of from two to fifty dollars, in debts of from one to six years standing, I am in great mercy providentially relieved from all further trouble on that score, having lost my pocket ledger which contained all those old accounts, about the first of last January. To relieve the minds of those of my debtors who have felt any anxiety about the matter, I would say that there is little likelihood that scarcely any one who owed me for books before Jan. 1st, 1861, will ever be dunned by me for the amount any more. No more trouble in your minds on that score. I shall have no more days' works making out accounts, writing duns, and paying postage on them. Blessed relief! I can employ my time more usefully and pleasantly. I have paid for the books and sent them off, and now I have got through with all my troubles about them, unless some one finds the book and returns it, an event not likely to occur. If I had known how easy it was to do it, I might have flung the book into the river long ago, and gone to work and earned more money than I have collected on those accounts, a long time ago. Adieu, my old friends; I shall no longer read the dubious record of your names with mingled pity and reproach, wondering if you live on bran bread and johnny-cake, as I do, or on beef steak and fatted calves, as some of my poor brethren do; whether your coats and garments are as poor, old and patched as mine, or whether you are "clothed in purple and fine linen, and fare sumptuously every day;" whether it is true—as one man says who does not sell books—that to carry books around the country is to take money out of his own pocket, for what the people pay for a book they will not give to him; whether I have not lost some money myself in that way? etc., etc. Peace to all these questionings—the ledger is lost; the books have done good, I trust; the men that had them are poor enough, and the Lord will provide means to publish more; yes, and I have still "a few more left of the same sort."

I shall not be charged with fanaticism any more for requesting the prayers of the faithful who owe me that I may be able to get money to pay my debts. I freely forgive what I cannot collect. It is true the cash would have been convenient; it would have saved borrowing more; and if I had it now I could pay half of my debts; but it will be all the same a hundred years years. Besides, if I can sell what books I have now I will get along. So if you want to buy, send on, or if you want to beg, don't be bashful—walk up; but if you want to get trusted, I had rather you would borrow the money nearer home and send it on, unless you can show that you have bought at least one bill of books and paid for them. No offence intended, dear brother. I will give all I can, and I want to sell all I can too; but I must get part of the pay or my "Publication Society" will collapse by and by, and your honorable president, secretary, business agent, committee, editor, colporteur and collector, will find his "occupation gone," or rather his money gone and his credit in a bad condition.

All this will be avoided if you order books liberally and pay for them, and if you send money you may set your own price. Tracts free for the poor, as usual.

For the Crisis.

Good News from a far Country.

Eight dollars received in gold from California; four for the World's Crisis, and four for the Millennial Harbinger, and precious souls feasting upon those already sent. A most cheering christian letter received Feb. 22d, from our deeply afflicted, yet rejoicing, Bro. Fike, containing all this, and the good news worth more than the gold, even to Bro. Grant and Bro. Newman. Yes, what is the gold that perisheth compared with the precious souls won to Christ by our laborers? Struggle on, dear brethren, your labors are not in vain in the Lord. After saying many precious things he adds, "I have said nothing to you yet in reference to those other two visitors, the 'Harbinger' and 'Crisis.' I entertained them more than thrice welcome. You don't know how hungry I was for some of our good reading. It gives me much comfort to read of the brethren and sisters' belief in the soon coming of the Lord. I told the children a short time ago, that from the present movements of the world, it appeared to me the coming of the Lord is near, and that the brethren and sisters were writing much about it now, and sure enough I found it so after the arrival of those precious papers. I try to have every one read them in my reach, and ask them to subscribe for them. Yesterday, I carried a copy of the Crisis and one of the Harbinger to Mrs. Wilson, four miles distant. She read some in them while I was there and felt so interested in the reading that before I left she concluded to subscribe for one. I wish they could come into circulation here; the true doctrine never has been preached here. I can hear of no brethren, except Mr. Chester, the man I am working for; a member of the Campbellite church; believes, I think, in everything with us. He and his wife appreciate our papers very highly. She is a member of the Baptist church; told me she thought them the best papers she ever read."

To show you what kind of men those are who have sent their gold for the Crisis, I will extract a little further :—"Messrs. Lantze and Chester carry on farming extensively. Chester told me last season they raised 30,000 bushels of wheat and barley. This winter are sowing fourteen hundred acres. Do their ploughing with four men. They use gang ploughs—three ploughs in a gang—each one cuts twelve inches; hitch four or five yoke of cattle, or six horses to a gang. They are now running four of these gangs, one man to each—commenced ploughing about the first of Dec., and continued to plough and sow till the first of March. In harvest they run three reapers; next harvest they intend to use four. They do not bind and shock, but when done cutting, thresh it. This is California farming."

Our dear Bro. Fike and his three children are boarding with Mr. Chester and like them much. Says he gathers his dear children around him on Lord's days and reads and prays with them; on other days he is not with them only on Wednesday evenings, as he works two miles away. Each of the dear children enclosed a letter in their father's. The eldest says, "Indeed, I feel the loss of a good mother. Being in a strange country, young and inexperienced as I am, I know not how to do. There are many inducements to lead astray the most experienced." Then she asks advice. The younger sister about fourteen, says, after speaking of her good hostess and her daughter, about her own age, "But still, there is a dear mother missing, and sweet sister. I keep looking forward to the time when they shall be raised from their lone resting-places and come forth beaming with celestial glory." Dear little George says, "I have seen many fine cities and the barren plains, and I have seen my mother and sister buried. We are left alone only four of us." Ye mothers in Israel, pray for these motherless children, is the prayer of your unworthy sister. E. S. Willard.

P. S. Glory be to God! Bro. Grant, another precious soul hoping in the mercy of Christ, the Anointed. Just as Bible class closed yesterday morning, Feb. 24th, a dear little girl of twelve years, the daughter of Bro. Moses Smiley, formerly of N. England, whispered in my ear, "I have found my Savior." Bless the Lord, said I, and looked around to tell the news to the class that yet remained. I asked her simply to tell us how she found Jesus. We all were seated and she began; "I have been seeking my Savior for some time, finally these words came to my mind with great force,

"Behold a stranger at the door,
He gently knocks, has knocked before;
Has waited long—is waiting still,
You treat no other friend so ill."

Sure, I treat no other friend so ill. I will open my heart and let him in, and he has come in and I am happy in his love." This was said with the utmost composure and firmness, and with a face beaming with intelligence and trust. Some dozen of us

Eld. W. Pratt's Reply

To a lecture of Mr. Leo Miller, on "Comparative view of Ancient and Modern Spiritualism," in the temple at Portsmouth, N. H., Sunday evening, March 3d, 1861. Reported by Mr. James Mitchell.

The house was crowded—supposed to be 1400 present. Mr. Pratt commenced by reading from the apostle Paul's second letter to Timothy 3d chap. 8th verse:—

"Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth; men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith."

I will say, in relation to this text, it seems to have a chronological bearing upon the times in which we live. The context reads, "In the last days perilous times shall come, men shall be lovers of their own selves," etc.; and after giving a catalogue of their prominent characteristics, then brings to view those that are called jugglers or sorcerers, and says, "As Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth; men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith."

You can judge when we get through whether the text is properly chosen for the occasion. All understand that I am to review a lecture given in this place a week ago last Wednesday evening, on a "Comparative view of Ancient and Modern Spiritualism." It will be necessary for me to give an outline of ideas then presented. I do this for the benefit of those who were not present on that occasion, that they may understand what I intend to answer to-night. Perhaps I ought to say, the reason I answer it is that I was satisfied it was a perversion of the truth of the Bible, and being thus satisfied, I felt as though I was duty-bound to give a right view of the word of God on this subject. The first of his ideas then presented was, "Spiritualism does not belong to any particular nation." This, with this addition, is true, that it belongs to heathen nations and those only that forsake God. I am speaking of nations.

The second of these reasons was, "We reason from solids to fluids and so on up to Spiritualism." Perhaps I do not fully apprehend the idea contained in that sentence. If I do, it denies a Creator; it denies that God ever created anything, and affirms that man grew the same as a plant. This may be his view; whether it is or not, I shall not stop here to discuss whether man grew up like a mushroom, or whether God created him as the Bible declares.

The third position was, "We have the same evidence now to prove Spiritualism, that they had anciently." I do not doubt that.

The fourth was, "The great mind acts upon finite minds." I cannot conceive how this idea can be correct with the Spiritualists; for as a general thing, they do not believe in a God, unless that God is in everything. This I think I shall prove to you—you may judge whether I do or not.

The fifth position was, "That angels are messengers." (Professor Pick says, they are messengers of God.) "No angel in existence, however high, but what has trodden earth and existed here in the flesh.' Where is the proof? We would like it. "Angels are the spirits of the dead." To prove this the Bible testimony was brought forward on this wise, "Bible calls angels men." This proves too much; for if they are men they are not the spirits of men, for they are recognized as men, appeared in the form of men, visited Lot and Abraham as men; and I ask does this prove they are spirits of men? It proves that they are men in the flesh, if it proves any thing in that direction. There is no proof whatever, in God's word that the angels ever claimed that they lived on this earth, or that they were departed spirits—spirits of the dead. You may have some objections in your mind. I shall notice them when I come to the argument.

ANCIENT SPIRITUALISM.

1st. Dreams. Reference was made to "Joseph, Pharaoh, Jacob, Solomon, and others that had dreams, and spirits came to them." Not a word is there given in the record of all these dreams to prove that there was ever a spirit of the dead came to them. Cannot be found between the lids of the Bible, that the spirit of a dead man came to them in their dreams. In contrast he says, "we now-a-days have dreams," and referred to himself and others as proof, which I shall not bring forward to-night. This remark he made—"Saul could not get an answer from God because his mind was agitated." This was the reason assigned why God refused him (Saul) an answer. It is strange to me that men can believe the Bible record concerning all his acts [illegible]

[illegible] Psalmist informs us that ancient Israel in the wilderness ate angels' food. Are these the kind of modern spirits that visit you? In Chickopee Falls, I am informed, a man sets a plate for the departed spirit of his wife, and says she comes and eats with him at the table. You can have it for what it is worth. Anciently angels had glory, and I apprehend it differs somewhat from the glory of the spirits of the nineteenth century. Those ancient angels never said that they ever lived on earth at all. In the paper called the Banner of Light, you will find in almost every communication they endeavor to tell us where they lived, and what their business was, and how some man cheated them, or misused them, and so on; but not a word do we find in the Bible in relation to angels' treatment or residence on earth.

3d. "They heard voices anciently." He made the remark that these "voices were not audible." It seems to me that cannot be true. Angels talked with Abraham and Lot and Joseph and others. When the disciples were on their way to Emmaus, after Christ's resurrection, he talked and expounded to them the Scriptures, and they (the disciples) said one to another, "Did not our hearts burn within us while he talked with us by the way and opened to us the Scriptures?" The difference in this respect between them is, that while the angels and Christ, after his resurrection, talked with men, like men, the modern spirits sneak round and rap and tip tables. Really, there seems to be quite a difference—angels have not progressed very rapidly in their manner of communication for the last eighteen hundred years, according to the Spiritualists' own view.

4th. "They spoke in unknown tongues on the day of Pentecost." "So do we, the same as the apostles" said he. I ask any man to read the account recorded in the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles and see if it is not a complete refutation of this modern Spiritualist' claim. They say they speak in different languages like the apostles. Here, to-night, would be a good chance to test it if this congregation were composed of people from different nations and tongues. Then they were from every nationa ssembled, and the apostles, who were ignorant men, arose and spoke the languages of the different nations there assembled to the astonishment of all present. When Spiritualists will come out openly like this, and convince a multitude from different nations, as the apostles did, then they set a claim as having apostolic gifts, and call on us to believe.

5th. He told us, "The sick were healed by Christ and his apostles," but, he said there were "ten miracles wrought by Spiritualists in this age, where there was one wrought in the apostolic age." Why is it that they never come to light? I have traveled from Maine to central Iowa, and I have never seen a single miracle wrought, or found a man that ever claimed he was healed by the spirits of the dead. He said, "Christ opened the eyes of a certain individual who was blind." He explained that miracle as follows: "Christ saw there was virtue in the clay and by an application to the diseased eyes would restore them to sight." I wonder others did not try the experiment. I wonder some of our psychological spirits in this age have not found it out. If there is such virtuous clay in our day, it would save the so-called spirits much labor to inform us where it is, that we might take a quantity of it round with us as a restorer without continually applying to them. Another thing more strange, as Christ was a very good and benevolent man, that he should withhold knowledge from us concerning this all-healing clay.

6th. Comparison:—"There were spiritual lights anciently." Reference was made to the pillar of fire that overshadowed Israel in the wilderness, and the burning bush, as proof. Then remarked, "We see lights in this age also." Hence, you can see what Spiritualists claim in our age. Reading the sacred history of the ancient manifestation, will convince any one that their claim is unfounded.

7th. "They spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." No: he did not say that. He said, "as they were moved." By what? By the spirits of the dead, I suppose he would tell us. There is not a single instance where they ever informed us that they were assisted to speak or write by the aid of the departed spirits.

8th. "Soul reading," as he was pleased to term it. "Christ did tell others' thoughts." Referred to the Samaritan woman as an illustration of the fact, and said "This is my writing." "Now we can read thoughts of others; hence, if that proves him divine, we are as divine as Christ." This clearly shows their claim. Judge ye, how much truth there is in this assertion.

9th. "Spirit rested on Christ like a dove." Referred to Mr. Britain's child, in which he thought there was a similar manifestation. [illegible]

10th. "Belshazzar wrote," he said, or "saw writing." Read the account and you have a refutation of what he claimed as a precedent for writing mediums of this age.

11th. "Christ walked on the water." [illegible]

If it be true that modern spirits have power to make fluids solids, they could have no objection to going to the wharf and testing their faith and removing all doubts from our minds. Such an experiment, however, would be likely to come out like Ann Lee's. A man West told me that "Mother Ann" gave notice at a certain day and place, that she would walk on the water. The multitude assembled at a certain lake according to appointment. "Mother Ann" called the multitude to order, then inquired: "Do you believe I can walk on the water?" (in a whining tone.) "No! no! no!" cried the people. "Very well," said she, "I can't do my miracles where there is so much unbelief; hence, I shall not try." After a lapse of time, she sent out a second proclamation that she would make another effort to walk on the water. The people agreed among themselves if the same question was asked again they would all say yes. The time arrived, the people assembled at the lake as before. "Mother Ann" called the multitude to order and again in her whining tone inquired, "Do you now believe I can walk on the water?" "O, yes, yes, yes," was the cry from every quarter. "Very well, if all believe it," said she, "that is just as well as though I did; hence, I dismiss you."

12th. "Spirits can move matter." For proof of this we were referred to the stone being rolled from the tomb of our Lord. Nothing is recorded to intimate the spirits of the dead rolled away the stone. That is a mere assumption; not the first word to prove it. They were angels, not dead men's spirits. In fact, there is not a sentence in the whole Bible from which you can draw a fair inference that the prophets, a postles, and our Savior were aided in any way by the spirits of the dead to perform the works they wrought. I have given the twelve points of comparison made between the "ancient and modern Spiritualism." I will notice some reasons that he said were given in this age to account for modern Spiritualism, and then we will take up the argument. 1, Humbug. 2, Electricity. 3, Psychology. 4, Odd force—fluid in the back part of the brain. 5, Satanic majesty. He said to apply Spiritualism to satanic majesty was blasphemy. Blasphemy against what? Against whom? Mark that and we will see before we get through. Again, he said he "could not believe God had left his children to be deceived by Satan." We intend to show before we get through who these children are that God has such special care for.

Human Destiny.

DEAR EDITOR:—Dr. Sears, one of the editors of the Monthly Religious Magazine, notices "Human Destiny" thus:—"Two things impress us on reading his book, his admirable fairness and candor as a controversialist, and his great power and skill as a logician. His argument is learned, scriptural, and strong, and, from the standpoint of the advocates of endless torture, we do not believe it has ever been answered or ever can be. The Restorationists meet the argument more successfully, standing on the ground of human philosophy; but coming to the matter of exegesis, we think Mr. Hudson has immensely the advantage of them. We do not think his argument exhaustive. There are other views of the destiny of bad men not embraced either in restoration or endless punishment; but the works of this writer, as a treasury of learning, argument, and interpretation, let no one neglect or pass by who has an interest in these momentous themes." INFLUENCE.—Every man is a missionary whether he intends or designs it. He may be a blot, radiating his dark influence outward to the very circumference of society; or he may be a blessing, spreading benediction over the length and breadth of the world; but a blank he cannot be. We are either the sower that sows and corrupts, or the light that splendidly illuminates, and the salt that silently operates.

FEED BONES TO THE HENS.—If you take fresh bones from the kitchen, and with a sledge, on a rock, or any natural or artificial anvil, pound them up into small pieces, hens will eat them ravenously, and not only will they digest the bones and make a better manure of them than can be made in any other way, but they will be themselves greatly benefited by them; they will lay throughout the season with much greater regularity than otherwise, and will fatten on the marrow within, and the fat and muscle will adhere to the bones. Homestead.

CURE FOR DRUNKENNESS.—It is settled that drunkenness is a physical as well as moral disease, and it is now so treated. The following is the receipt of John Vine Hall, the father of the commander of the Great Eastern, which has enabled so many men to overcome the malady:—"Sulphate of iron 5 grains; magnesia, 10 grains; peppermint water, 11 drachms; spirit of nutmeg, 1 drachm; twice a day."

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 20, 1861.

A Noble Sentiment.

The following noble sentiment commends itself to every candid mind, but it is sometimes hard for poor human nature to submit to this high standard of action. Read it. It is from one of our able contributors. He says:—"On any subject I may write for the Crisis, if, after asking counsel of God, you feel impressed that it is erroneous and hurtful to your charge; I will not censure you for withholding it, nor love you the less; we are all at the best but erring creatures." Who can help admiring this exalted christian principle? If all would heartily adopt it, the worrying anxieties and grievous burdens of an editor would almost cease. We feel quite confident if those who cannot endorse the kind language of our brother, as above expressed, were to act awhile in the editorial capacity, they would never murmur again to increase the heavy load of a burdened one. May we not hope that all the noble hearted ones with whom we have the pleasure to be associated in sounding the last great alarm to a wicked world, will most heartily endorse the sentiment of our brother, and observe it as cheerfully.

"An Hundred-Fold."

A brother inquires, "How are we to understand Mark 10: 29–30? What is the hundred-fold which the follower of Christ receives in the present life?"

The passage reads:—"And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say unto you, there is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake and the gospel's, but he shall receive an hundred-fold now in this time, houses and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life."

The gain, when compared with the loss, is very great. He who makes ten per cent profit is doing a good business. But few make fifty per cent, and only here and there an individual is found who makes an hundred. Such an one soon becomes rich. But one hundred per cent is only one fold, or doubling once. An hundred-fold is ten thousand per cent! What astonishing profit! And all this for serving the Lord in this world.

But how is this promise to be understood? What does the Savior mean? We suppose he means what he says. It is evident, from the connection, that this Scripture is applicable particularly to those who are called to preach the gospel, who must of necessity, like the apostles, leave all, if they give themselves up to the work of the ministry. They may go forth weeping, and leave their loved ones in tears; but, like one now sleeping in Jesus, they are ready to exclaim, "The gospel must be preached." They leave mother, brothers and sisters, children and companions in sadness at home; how then can they have their "hundred-fold now in this time"? It is certain the Savior does not mean to teach that these preachers have a hundred-fold of mothers, brothers, sisters, children and wives, in the absolute sense, for this is impossible; and still every faithful minister of the gospel finds the promise true. The mother, brothers and sisters, companion and children all love to administer to his comfort when at home; but cannot do it when he is away. And yet those who perform those kind offices are to him, as mothers, brothers and sisters, companion and children. When he arrives at his place of labor, he finds the mother, brothers, sisters, wife and children of the family as kind to him as his own, attending to every want with the same anxious care, and doing it with the same motive—love. His clothes are as carefully brushed, washed and ironed and mended as by his own loved wife, and with the same degree of cheerfulness. It is not done grudgingly or for the pay, but with a heartfelt family interest, so that the poor preacher really feels quite at home, and that he is in the midst of brethren and sisters, nearer and dearer to him than any blood relation that do not love Jesus. He finds himself just as welcome to their well spread table as to his own, and if all the premises were absolutely his, he could not use them any more freely. The more he makes himself at home, the better they are pleased. They feel as Bro. Sherman, of Castleton, expressed himself, when he first took us to his delightful home. As we entered his elegant residence, he said, "Now make yourself perfectly at home, and use the whole house as though it were yours, and invite here whoever you please." This was spoken in a manner that made us feel at home at once. Thus we see how we get the hundred-fold of mothers, brothers and sisters, wives and children, "in this time."

But how about the houses and lands? We see no difficulty on this point; for if we actually owned the houses and lands occupied by these dear brethren and sisters, we could not be any more at home, or receive a greater comfort. During the preacher's absence, they take care of them, keeping everything in good order, so that when he returns again, all things are ready for him. [illegible] the stall is prepared for his horse, the apples are gathered, the wood has been cut and drawn, and he again finds himself at home as welcome as in his own family. And the good man of the house says to him, "What is mine is yours, use it freely." Thus we have an hundred-fold of houses and lands "in this time." But it is not so with the men of the world. From them and a backslidden church, we have "persecutions," but as the final result of well-doing, we receive "in the world to come, eternal life."

INFORMATION WANTED.—Bro. C. P. Whitton, Lowell, Mass., who makes the "GOLDEN SALVE," so justly noted for its healing properties, has received an order from a Bro. in Windsor, Mass., for a quantity of the salve, who did not sign his name. Will he please send it to Bro. Whitten, that he may fill the order?

A Disquisition on the Prophecies.

This is the title of a pamphlet just issued by F. H. Berick, and must prove a valuable reference and text book to the Bible student. The author deals in facts alone, and proves the fulfillment of the prophetic writing by history, sacred and profane. He divides the work under various heads, viz: "Prophecies fulfilled at Christ's first advent," "Prophecies concerning Abraham and his descendants," "Overthrow of the kingdom of Israel," "Prophecies relating to Individuals," "Prophecies concerning Babylon," "Prophecies concerning Tyre," "Prophecies concerning Egypt," "Predictions of Christ concerning Jerusalem and the Jews, and now fulfilled," "Prophecies of Daniel," etc. The words of the prophecies are quoted, and the literal fulfillment of the same from Scripture and history placed beneath. I shall speak of it at more length again, and in the mean time recommend its careful perusal by every one interested in the important subject. JNO. F. COTTON.

We heartily endorse the foregoing notice of Bro. Berick's valuable work, which is for sale at the Crisis office. Price 12 cts. single. 1-4 off per doz. Postage 1 cent. ED.

Divinity of Jesus.

Lest some should entertain the idea, from Bro. Preble's questions recently given in the Crisis, that he denies the divinity of Christ, he wishes the following extracts published from his tract on the "Two Adams:"

"The Scriptures plainly teach that Jesus Christ, the second Adam, possesses the divine attributes of his Father in that degree which renders him an object of divine worship.

'All men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father which hath sent him.' (John 5: 13.)

Are we to honor the Son, even as we honor the Father? So we are taught. If we honor not the Son, we dishonor the Father which sent him.

'When he bringeth in the first-begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him.' (Heb. 1: 6.)

'Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name; that at the name of JESUS every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth. And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.' (Phil. 2: 9–11.)

Let every tongue, then, confess that Jesus Christ is Lord (Kurios,) to the glory of God, (Theos,) the Father. Jesus, 'being in the form of God thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.' (Phi. 2: 38.)

Prayer was also made to him. Acts 7: 59.

If it is idolatry to worship any other than a Divine Being, then it follows that Jesus, the second Adam, was Divine, or the angels of God and the saints were guilty of idolatry! for they worshiped him! He 'is God with us;' (Matt. 1: 23,) for he was God manifest in the flesh; or, as the margin reads,—manifested."

For the Crisis.

"Please buy some Books!"

Reason first, you want the books. Second, I want the money. Third, I want to publish more. Fourth, I want to publish new ones. Fifth, these ought to be circulated. Sixth, I have eight mouths to feed. Seventh, I don't love to beg. Eighth, we have to help the poor. Ninth, we have with some help fitted some sixty children for our Mission Sunday School this winter. Tenth, we want to keep on doing. Eleventh, I have nothing else to sell, no pills, patents or powders, and I will not make merchandise of "the word of God." Twelfth, sick preachers as well as poor people need help, and I had rather earn than beg it. So please buy some books!

Here is "Voice of the Church," by Taylor; price $1; $9 per dozen. Bro. Berick says it is worth $5. Buy it! The author has been sick two or three years, is now at "Our Home," Dansville, resting, and we trust gaining; but it takes a little money to keep him along. I find churches are more willing to work a man when well than to care him when sick. What then? Shall such a man die for want of $150 or $200? Why, I would'nt hardly have one of his 'sick headaches' for that; they must be worse than purgatory, I judge—(never tried either)—and he had about two a week. Well, who pays his way? Why, they take him at $3 per week, and then take his wife for nothing, and the Lord provides the $3. Now, rather than beg it, I will give him one hundred "Voice of the Church." Send me the dollars, and you shall have the books, and he shall have the money; or if that wont do, send him the money yourself; or else I will keep the book and send the money too. When he gets out from his year's rest, there will be plenty of churches ready to swallow him. Who wants now to help a "poor old horse"? and who says, "let him die"? So please buy "The Voice of the Church." Read it; lend it to your neighbor, or give it to your minister. If it isn't worth the $1, I will refund the money.

But here are other books, such as "Fables of Infidelity," 75 cts.; "Two hundred Stories for Children," a first rate book, 40 cts.; "The Great Controversy" and "Reasons for my Hope," bound together, 75 cts. "Reasons for my Hope," "Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion," and "The Great Controversy between God and Man,"—each in stiff paper covers, 25 cts.; four copies, post paid, for $1; fifty copies for $8; one hundred for $15. "Pauline Theology," 15 cts.; $10 per hundred. Bound tracts on Prophecy, 50 cts.; on Immortality, 50 cts. Tracts unbound, fifty or sixty kinds; twelve hundred for $1. Have you read the Tract, "Will all men be saved?" That takes the two-edged sword to Universalism in earnest. I preached the other day in a M. E. church. The preacher who now waits for the consolation of Israel, was once a Universalist. His wife came home one night convinced of sin and wanted him to pray for her; he did, and for himself too. Before morning, I believe, God converted them both. In the morning he cooked his breakfast over about $30 worth of Universalist books that he had in his library, and went to preaching the coming and kingdom of God. He said to me, "I read your little tract on Universalism, and thought it was the best little thing I ever read on the subject." Who will send $2 for one hundred of them, and scatter them about? Who will send $15 for one thousand?

SPECIAL NOTICE.

I hear give notice that after long, perplexing and laborious efforts to collect some $400 or $500 due me for books and tracts, east, west, north and south, in sums of from two to fifty dollars, in debts of from one to six years standing, I am in great mercy providentially relieved from all further trouble on that score, having lost my pocket ledger which contained all those old accounts, about the first of last January. To relieve the minds of those of my debtors who have felt any anxiety about the matter, I would say that there is little likelihood that scarcely any one who owed me for books before Jan. 1st, 1861, will ever be dunned by me for the amount any more. No more trouble in your minds on that score. I shall have no more days' works making out accounts, writing duns, and paying postage on them. Blessed relief! I can employ my time more usefully and pleasantly. I have paid for the books and sent them off, and now I have got through with all my troubles about them, unless some one finds the book and returns it, an event not likely to occur. If I had known how easy it was to do it, I might have flung the book into the river long ago, and gone to work and earned more money than I have collected on those accounts, a long time ago. Adieu, my old friends; I shall no longer read the dubious record of your names with mingled pity and reproach, wondering if you live on bran bread and johnny-cake, as I do, or on beef steak and fatted calves, as some of my poor brethren do; whether your coats and garments are as poor, old and patched as mine, or whether you are "clothed in purple and fine linen, and fare sumptuously every day;" whether it is true—as one man says who does not sell books—that to carry books around the country is to take money out of his own pocket, for what the people pay for a book they will not give to him; whether I have not lost some money myself in that way? etc., etc. Peace to all these questionings—the ledger is lost; the books have done good, I trust; the men that had them are poor enough, and the Lord will provide means to publish more; yes, and I have still "a few more left of the same sort."

I shall not be charged with fanaticism any more for requesting the prayers of the faithful who owe me that I may be able to get money to pay my debts. I freely forgive what I cannot collect. It is true the cash would have been convenient; it would have saved borrowing more; and if I had it now I could pay half of my debts; but it will be all the same a hundred years hence. Besides, if I can sell what books I have now, I will get along. So if you want to buy, send on, or if you want to beg, don't be bashful—walk up; but, if you want to get trusted, I had rather you would borrow the money nearer home and send it on, unless you can show that you have bought at least one bill of books and paid for them. No offence intended, dear brethren. I will give all I can, and I want to sell all I can too; but I must get part of the pay or my "Publication Society" will [illegible] and his "occupation gone," or rather his money gone and his credit in a bad condition.

All this will be avoided if you order books liberally and pay for them, and if you send money you may set your own price. Tracts free for the poor, as usual.

For the Crisis.

Good News from a far Country.

Eight dollars received in gold from California; four for the World's Crisis, and four for the Millennial Harbinger, and precious souls feasting upon those already sent. A most cheering christian letter received Feb. 22d, from our deeply afflicted, yet rejoicing, Bro. Fike, containing all this, and the good news worth more than the gold, even to Bro. Grant and Bro. Newman. Yes, what is the gold that perisheth compared with the precious souls won to Christ by our laborers? Struggle on, dear brethren, your labors are not in vain in the Lord. After saying many precious things he adds, "I have said nothing to you yet in reference to those other two visitors, the 'Harbinger' and 'Crisis.' I entertained them more than thrice welcome. You don't know how hungry I was for some of our good reading. It gives me much comfort to read of the brethren and sisters' belief in the soon coming of the Lord. I told the children a short time ago, that from the present movements of the world, it appeared to me the coming of the Lord is near, and that the brethren and sisters were writing much about it now, and sure enough I found it so after the arrival of those precious papers. I try to have every one read them in my reach, and ask them to subscribe for them. Yesterday, I carried a copy of the Crisis and one of the Harbinger to Mrs. Wilson, four miles distant. She read some in them while I was there and felt so interested in the reading that before I left she concluded to subscribe for one. I wish they could come into circulation here; the true doctrine never has been preached here. I can hear of no brethren, except Mr. Chester, the man I am working for; a member of the Campbellite church; believes, I think, in everything with us. He and his wife appreciate our papers very highly. She is a member of the Baptist church; told me she thought them the best papers she ever read."

To show you what kind of men those are who have sent their gold for the Crisis, I will extract a little further:—"Messrs. Lantze and Chester carry on farming extensively. Chester told me last season they raised 30,000 bushels of wheat and barley. This winter are sowing fourteen hundred acres. Do their ploughing with four men. They use gang ploughs—three ploughs in a gang—each one cuts twelve inches; hitch four or five yoke of cattle, or six horses to a gang. They are now running four of these gangs, one man to each—commenced ploughing about the first of Dec., and continued to plough and sow till the first of March. In harvest they run three reapers; next harvest they intend to use four. They do not bind and shock, but when done cutting, thresh it. This is California farming."

Our dear Bro. Fike and his three children are boarding with Mr. Chester and like them much. Says he gathers his dear children around him on Lord's days and reads and prays with them; on other days he is not with them only on Wednesday evenings, as he works two miles away. Each of the dear children enclosed a letter in their father's. The eldest says, "Indeed, I feel the loss of a good mother. Being in a strange country, young and inexperienced as I am, I know not how to do. There are many inducements to lead astray the most experienced." Then she asks advice. The younger sister about fourteen, says, after speaking of her good hostess and her daughter, about her own age, "But still, there is a dear mother missing, and sweet sister. I keep looking forward to the time when they shall be raised from their lone resting-places and come forth beaming with celestial glory." Dear little George says, "I have seen many fine cities and the barren plains, and I have seen my mother and sister buried. We are left alone only four of us." Ye mothers in Israel, pray for these motherless children, is the prayer of your unworthy sister. E. S. WILLARD.

P. S. Glory be to God! Bro. Grant, another precious soul hoping in the mercy of Christ, the Anointed. Just as Bible class closed yesterday morning, Feb. 24th, a dear little girl of twelve years, the daughter of Bro. Moses Smiley, formerly of N. England, whispered in my ear, "I have found my Savior." Bless the Lord, said I, and looked around to tell the news to the class that yet remained. I asked her simply to tell us how she found Jesus. We all were seated and she began; "I have been seeking my Savior for some time, finally these words came to my mind with great force:— [illegible]

Sure, I treat no other friend so ill. I will open my heart and let him in. [illegible] has come in and I am happy in his love." [illegible] knelt and returned thanks to God and were encouraged to ask and expect more. Flora is a child of many prayers. Her dear mother is in very delicate health, and has been for years, but says, when she had no strength to see friends and instruct her only child too, she refused her friends' society, and gave all her strength to her child, expecting soon to have to leave her; and now she is rewarded in returning health to herself since coming here, and with success in her labors with her child. Her devoted and intelligent father is the only full believer in the Bible, as we understand it, that we have become acquainted with since coming here. O brother! pray for Hammonton. We are led here in a way we know not, and only seem to get manna for the day. R. S. W.

Correspondence.

From Eld. S. S. Brewer.

DEARLY BELOVED IN CHRIST:—Although I have been silent with my pen for a long time, I have not been silent concerning the last great dispensational truths—the evidences of the nearness of the judgment, and the preparation for it. This seems to me to be the specific work; and most assuredly, if the testimony of prophets, evangelists, and the Lord Jesus Christ is worthy of confidence. His appearing in his glory to reward his saints and destroy the wicked, is next in the order of God's economy.

I have now sustained an identity with the movement that separated myself and many others from the associations that have directly and indirectly opposed them for nineteen years past; and the precious word of God that has sustained me through scenes dark and drear, is more precious to me as faith in its sacred truth beholds events, long foretold, break forth into living realities. O what a solemn hour we are now permitted to live in! What solemn responsibility is imposed on the ministry! yea, the ministry, and soon it must be met; but responsibilities are personal in this respect. As I have surveyed the distracted condition of many of the once happy little flocks, caused, in the majority of instances, by questions of no positive evidence in God's word, it has made me sad; and all the soft words and fair speeches to win converts to such theories, have, so far as my memory serves me, only tended to strife and division.

Dearly beloved, "suffer a word of exhortation;" let them alone. Engage in the work of saving perishing sinners. Christ is coming. It is positively declared that "the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance ON THEM that know not God and OBEY NOT THE GOSPEL of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power; WHEN HE SHALL COME TO BE GLORIFIED IN HIS SAINTS, and to be admired in all them that believe, because our testimony among you was believed in that day." "The harvest is the end of the world; the reapers are the angels. As, therefore, the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them that do iniquity, and they shall cast them into a furnace of fire. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear let him hear." Amen.

There is no promise of probation beyond that. Preach, pray, toil, labor, and, if need be, suffer to save all you possibly can from the wrath soon to come. Can any one feel disinterested in the saving of the perishing in this eventful day? If you can, let me beseech you to look out upon the condition of the elements. Never did the lightnings' gleam, the thunder heads looming in the distance, and the muttering sounds of the elements bespeak the storm with more precision, than the striking correspondence of the moral, political, religious and natural elements do the nearness of harvest—the day of doom—the perdition of ungodly men. And can you, professed herald of the Bridegroom, turn aside to vain wrangling, scattering the few, and causing the impenitent, the formalist, the opposer of the last solemn message to exclaim, "There, if that's the fruit of your theories, heaven deliver us from it!" Stop it! For Christ's suffering cause, stop it! For poor sinners' sake, stop it! For the injury you have done, stop it! For the good you may by the blessing of God accomplish, turn, turn to the work of saving souls! Think, dear brethren, if you are the humble instrument of saving only one, and save yourself. What consolation through ceaseless glories of eternal life it will afford you. Almighty Parent of good, lead us all into a more close and holy communion with thee. In infinite mercy give us, as ministers, to feel the importance of our calling, the necessity of entire consecration to thee, the worth of those for whom the well beloved Son shed his most precious blood, the shortness of time, the solemnity of the great crisis visibly approaching, and the account we must soon render in thy immaculate presence!

To the brethren and sisters, in deep feeling permit me to say, you must soon give an account for your conduct. Have you carried into the secret place of prayer a sympathy for the preachers? If not, let me entreat you to pray for us, when it goes well with you at the throne of heavenly mercy and grace. I have feared that much that might have been accomplished after preaching, if, when opportunities have been presented, all the church had been in harmony and favor with God, had fallen down on their knees, and in warm, fervent, short petitions watered the seed sown; but, alas! alas! not having an interest in secret, they were in many instances too cold, too dead, too formal; and the poor, weak servant of God has had to seek the closet to comfort himself against sorrow, while his heart has been faint within him. O! dearly beloved, wake up! Minister, wake up! Church of the living God, awake! A summons to render an account of thy stewardship will soon be required of thee.

For my own comfort amid all the discord, strife and abounding iniquity, it is a consolation to know my Savior is mine, and through grace I am his.

From T. W. Smith.

BRO. GRANT:—I suppose you would be pleased to hear occasionally from me, as to my labors in the Master's vineyard. I have been preaching twice each Sabbath, sometimes thrice, and occasionally during the week. I have visited quite a number of churches since I left Philadelphia. I find myself at this time in Vienna, Warren Co., N. J. I spoke here twice last Sunday; and I endeavored to show that Christ will come, and come quickly. The people here have become somewhat prejudiced against Adventists, or at least, do not care to listen to any preaching in reference to the "time." This feeling has been occasioned by the conduct and teachings of a strange being who was about here lately, preaching the second coming of Christ, etc. This, of course, was well enough; but he wanted the people to believe that he was the chosen messenger of God, or one of the seven angels who are to sound the trumpets. He says God is here on this earth in the form of a man, who appears frequently, then disappears. He also affirms that Philadelphia, Penn., is the Philadelphia of the Apocalypse; and that soon a third part of it will be destroyed, etc. He declares he has seen this "God of the earth," who is here in the person of an old man named Dilks, (who I think has been dead several years). He seems to be well versed in the Scriptures; and is calculated to lead weak-minded people astray. I am sorry he has been here, for I cannot for awhile preach strong second advent doctrine, except I want to be considered a disciple of Thomas Davidson. I expect to preach here until the 1st of April and perhaps longer. I try to declare the entire counsel of God. I intend to preach the truth. I wish I had the means to purchase a good quantity of tracts. I think great good might be done here by the circulation of un-evangelical tracts. Can our kind Bro. Hastings afford to send me a few? I ask an interest in brethren and sisters' prayers. If any of the brethren wish to communicate they can address me at Vienna, Warren Co., N. J.

From G. G. Emery.

BRO. GRANT:—I would like to say through the columns of the "Crisis," to the preaching brethren in this State, that there is a little company of believers in this place, who would be glad to hear the good tidings of a soon coming King, from some of the watchmen who are stationed on the walls of Zion. We want to hear from some one who will not "shun to declare the whole counsel of God." Brethren, "Come over and help us;" and we trust your labor will not be in vain. Brn. will inquire for the writer.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in East Hebron, Me., Jan. 23d, 1861, Sister POLLY ROWE, aged thirty-four years and twenty-nine days.

After a sickness of several months, Sister Polly first became interested in the faith of the Lord's soon coming, and its kindred doctrines, in '54, and ever since they have lain near her heart. She never had seen with her natural eyes since she was two years old, but by faith she looked forward to a time, and that not far distant, when she should see as she was seen, and know as she was known. With the loss of her sight, God blessed her with a great memory, so that she would put to silence the greatest of her opponents. It seemed to be her meat and drink to defend the truth of God's word. But Polly has fallen asleep; not without a hope of awaking again soon in the likeness of her Master. Her faith was firm to the end. When asked if she was "willing to fall asleep?" with all that calmness of a christian she exclaimed, "Yes!" Eld. True Jordan, of West Poland, spoke comforting words to the mourning friends, from Rom. 5: 21. He showed them that sin hath reigned unto death, that even (balance) so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord. That the only source of life was through him. He spoke as one having authority, and I trust many were benefited on the occasion. She left many relatives to mourn her loss, but not as those that have no hope. We expect to meet her soon, where sighs and tears will never come, when Jesus our Lord appears to awake the sleeping dead. Lord Jesus, come quickly! In behalf of the friends,

JOHN C. WHEELER.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices to the 3d inst. per the Arabia.]

FRANCE.

M. Thouvenal has officially assured the American Minister at Paris that no delegate from any seceding State has been received by the Emperor or himself.

A committee of the Senate has adopted the project of an address in response to the Emperor's speech fully endorsing the Imperial policy and lauding his protection of the Pope.

The Paris Patrie asserts that instead of the French army being on the point of leaving Rome, the instructions to Gen. Goyon are quite in a contrary sense.

The pastoral letter of the Bishop of Poictiers, in which he compares the Emperor to Pontius Pilate, was attracting great attention, and the Council of State was considering what steps should be taken in the matter.—Count Persigny had issued a circular in denunciation of the letter.

The debate on the address in response to the Emperor's speech was progressing in the Senate. Several members had spoken in favor of the maintainance of the temporal power of the Pope. Senator Pietri, late Imperial Commissioner in Italy, contended that the temporal power of the Pope was lost, and that France should confine herself to the preservation of his spiritual power.

On the 1st, Prince Napoleon spoke upon the subject. He said:

"I am astonished at the violence of the discussion. I leave to liberal opinion in Europe, to the patriotism of the Italians, to the 200,000 soldiers who, with the Emperor at their head, made the campaign of Italy, the task of replying to the insults you have listened to. (Cheers.) The Empire represents modern society, its progressive tendencies, and the liberal principles of 1789. (Loud cheers.) The people are not mistaken if they rely upon Napoleon III., who will not fail in his mission."

ITALY.

The heights commanding the citadel of Messina were occupied by the Sardinian troops. The representatives of foreign powers had protested to the commanders of the citadel against any damage which might be caused in the city.

The Minister of War at Naples had issued a notice that all foreign soldiers who may have belonged to the Bourbon army, or who may have been in the military service of the Pope, and who should join the reactionary bands of Southern Italy, will, if made prisoners, not be treated as soldiers, but will be punished with the greatest severity.

The Italian Senate, by a vote of twelve to two, adopted a project of law conferring the title of King of Italy on Victor Emmanuel and his successors.

The assertion is repeated that the Piedmontese Brigade will soon enter Rome, and that the Romans were secretly preparing to receive Victor Emmanuel.

A serious insurrection had broken out in Scutari, Turkey.

Private letters report that the rebels had taken Woosang and commenced a general massacre. The French interposed on the score of humanity.

Prussia has not yet assented to the French project in reference to the Syrian question.

General Klapka in a conference with the Democrats at Turin, spoke against any revolutionary attempts in Hungary, representing that the country is unprepared.

An insurgent body, numbering 5000, supported by Montenegrins, pillaged and set fire to the village of Bebar, after killing over fifty Mohometans, including several women.

The financial crisis at Constantinople was increasing, and numerous failures were imminent.

The Papal Government was preparing a statement to the effect that all the responsibility for the late events lies with Napoleon.

The Pope, it appears, has no notion of giving up Rome, and the negotiations which a week or two ago were said to be taking place between his Ministers and Count Cavour, with a view to some satisfactory arrangement, seem to have ended in failure. Now that Gaeta has surrendered, preparations have commenced for reducing the citadel of Messina.

FRANCE, AUSTRIA, AND THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION.

A Paris letter mentions as a rumor in accredited quarters that Prince Metternich has just communicated to M. Thouvenal an important note from the court of Vienna. In this note it is asserted the Austrian Government declares that it will never recognize Victor Emmanuel as King of Italy, but if France recalls her troops from Rome, she will immediately replace them by an Austrian army, and that if the revolutionists make the least movement in Venetia or Hungary, she will cross the Mincio.

FROM SYRIA.—Beirut, Feb. 9.—The small pox is prevailing in all parts of Syria. The French general has ordered the vaccination of his whole army. About forty men of the English frigate Doris have been attacked with the disease, and are placed in a hospital on shore The crowded state of the cities and the filthy habits of the refugees, together with the want of their usual household comforts, have rendered the thousands liable to every form of disease.

It is said that the Syrian merchants are hoarding gold, an act which indicates great alarm with regard to the future. It is the custom in Syria, when war is anticipated, for the people to bury their money and jewelry in the ground, so that it not often happens that these hid treasures are found, either being turned up by the plough, or brought to light by excavations for building.

The work of setting the telegraph poles between Beirut and Damascus is entirely interrupted by the heavy fall of snow, and all work on the Damascus carriage road is, for the same reason, suspended. The fact that the French are prosecuting this latter most expensive undertaking with great energy, is significant in a political point of view. No one can believe that shrewd French capitalists would venture so much in Syria, in these uncertain days, unless Napoleon III. had given them clear assurances of some permanent protection.

New York, March 16.—The Times Washington dispatch says the Cabinet has come to no decision on the question of evacuation of Fort Sumter, in opposition to which movement very strong arguments are made. Recent letters from Major Anderson resent with indignation the insinuations against his disposition to hold Fort Sumter to the last extremity.

A prominent secession leader in Charleston has received, during the past week, a letter from a friend of his in Montgomery, in which he stated that he considered the new government almost as bad as the one against which they had rebelled, and there are hundreds and thousands in the neighboring State of Georgia who believe it is a great deal worse, and who will be heard to say so ere March is gone.

The Savannah Republican says the duty of recognizing Southern independence is involved in the evacuation of Fort Sumter. It remarks:

"The event, is itself, is of far less importance than its progressive and evidently final results. It is the peaceful opening wedge that must complete the separation without a resort to arms. Pickens and the other forts of the Gulf must follow the lead of Sumter, and the very act of abandonment involves the necessity of our right to a separate independence, and the duty of the old Union to recognize and respect it. Such recognition at home will fly to the ends of the earth, and in a brief season we shall stand honored and respected amongst the nations."

DOMESTIC.

STRATEGETIC PLANS OF THE ADMINISTRATION.—We are informed upon high authority which is connected with no party, but has unusual means of information, that it is the intention of the administration to withdraw the troops, if necessary, from the forts in the seceded States, and to concentrate them all in the neighborhood of Washington, for the purpose of throwing heavy reinforcements into Old Point, which can be done in in one night from the federal city. It is said by military men that Old Point is completely the key of the position with reference to Virginia, Maryland, and North Carolina; that, when it is once in possession of a large force —no matter what those States separately or collectively may do—they can effect nothing, and are completely at the mercy of the power holding possession of that vast and commanding fortress. With this important purpose in view, the troops from Texas, and other portions of the border are to be concentrated at such a point that they can at once be thrown into Fortress Monroe, whilst at the same time, the border States are thrown off their guard and pacified by the apparent withdrawal of coercive measures from the States of the Southern confederacy.—Richmond Despatch, March 13th.

IMPORTANT STATEMENTS OF THE PRESIDENT.—Washington, March 15, 1861.—A member of the Virginia Convention called upon President Lincoln this morning, and had an exceedingly satisfactory interview. The President assured him that no vessels had been sent South with hostile intentions. The vessels that had been despatched contained only provisions and supplies for troops in Texas, and also for the Home Squadron. He stated, further, that there would be nothing done in regard to affairs in the South for sixty days, and that it was his purpose to restore peace and prevent the shedding of blood.

The Virginian left fully impressed that President Lincoln was a peace man, and would not allow himself to be drawn into adopting a war policy to please a few radical republicans.

RESISTANCE TO THE FEDERAL AUTHORITY IN BALTIMORE.—Washington, March 15.—From intelligence received here this morning it is highly probable that the first resistance to federal authority will take place in the city of Baltimore. It appears that those men who favor secession have determined that in the event of the appointment of any one of those who voted the republican ticket to any permanent office, such as Collector, Postmaster or Naval Office, they shall not take possession of the office, and that they will resist them to the last Their purpose is to bring on an "irrepressible conflict."

It is understood that the President has been informed of this determination.

IMPORTANT FROM TEXAS.—Galveston, March 15th.—Steamer Rusk has returned from Brazos with three hundred State troops on board. The Federal troops evacuated Fort Brown on the 12th, and left on the steamer Daniel Webster for Key West and Tortugas.

WASHINGTON, March 16.—Dispatches from Pensacola to the secessionists state that the captain of the Brooklyn has been notified that if he attempts to land provisions at Fort Pickens he will be fired into. An engagement is anticipated.

General Conference in Boston.

A General Religious Conference will be held in Chapman Hall, Boston, commencing Tuesday evening, at 7 o'clock, April 9th, and continuing each day and evening through the week and over the Lord's day.

The object and design of this meeting is not so much for the passing of resolutions or the transaction of ecclesiastical business, as for the advancement of pure christianity among us in true revival and reformation. What we as a body want and need, is not disputation or hobbies, but earnest, direct labor for the immediate promotion of the work of God in awakening the careless and indifferent, stirring up the luke-warm, and quickening into life and activity the too sluggish energies of the whole church in the personal work of preparation to meet the Master, who is before the door. In fact, we are too dull, too barren, and want more faith, zeal, love—more religion. And not only is it to be hoped that our meeting may prove a great means of grace to the waiting saints, but our hearts' desire is to see sinners converted to God, and thus made ready for the approaching great day of doom. Let those, then, who are asleep, awake and be strong. Let the righteous gird on their armor. Let sinful men be alarmed. All signs point to the speedy coming of the Lord, and it is high time that those who look for him be up and doing with their might their last solemn work. Let earnest and faithful prayer go up to heaven for the success of this conference. Ministers of Christ, plead with him for the spiritual interest of the meeting, and come to it in humility and faith, that our God who is now working among our churches in various places, may also pour his Spirit upon the worshipers at Chapman Hall. We invite our dear brethren and sisters from abroad to come. Come, all who can. Provision will be made by the friends for all needful entertainment.

To the Churches.

☞ Let the churches everywhere BEWARE of a "Ministerial Rascal" who has been a "Mormon Elder," a play actor, manager of a theatre, a drunkard, and several other characters, among which is that of a professed minister of Christ, all at the same time, all of which he has faithfully performed, except the last, in which he has miserably failed. The said character, who styles himself the "Rev. George Jones Adams," alias "Rev. J. A. Jones," alias "George Washington Jones Adams," has been quartered among us in Springfield for the past three or four months, and before his character became known, put on a very good exterior of honesty and piety, but has proved himself to be the most corrupt, lying impostor and hypocrite with whom it has ever been our misfortune to become acquainted. Do not admit him into your houses, neither bid him "God speed"; for he preaches not the doctrine of Christ.

knelt and returned thanks to God and were encouraged to ask and expect more. Flora is a child of many prayers. Her dear mother is in very delicate health, and has been for years, but says, when she had no strength to see friends and instruct her only child too, she refused her friends' society, and gave all her strength to her child, expecting soon to have to leave her; and now she is rewarded in returning health to herself since coming here, and with success in her labors with her child. Her devoted and intelligent father is the only full believer in the Bible, as we understand it, that we have become acquainted with since coming here. O brother! pray for Hammonton. Correspondence.

From Eld. S. S. Brewer.

Dearly beloved in Christ:—Although I have been silent with my pen for a long time, I have not been silent concerning the last great dispensational truths—the evidences of the nearness of the judgment, and the preparation for it. This seems to me to be the specific work; and most assuredly, if the testimony of prophets, evangelists, and the Lord Jesus Christ is worthy of confidence. His appearing in his glory to reward his saints and destroy the wicked, is next in the order of God's economy.

I have now sustained an identity with the movement that separated myself and many others from the associations that have directly and indirectly opposed them for nineteen years past; and the precious word of God that has sustained me through scenes dark and drear, is more precious to me as faith in its sacred truth beholds events, long foretold, break forth into living realities. O what a solemn hour we are now permitted to live in! What solemn responsibility is imposed on the ministry! yea, the ministry, and soon it must be met; but responsibilities are personal in this respect. As I have surveyed the distracted condition of many of the once happy little flocks, caused, in the majority of instances, by questions of no positive evidence in God's word, it has made me sad; and all the soft words and fair speeches to win converts to such theories, have, so far as my memory serves me, only tended to strife and division.

Dearly beloved, "suffer a word of exhortation;" let them alone. Engage in the work of saving perishing sinners. Christ is coming. It is positively declared that "the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance ON THEM that know not God and OBEY NOT THE GOSPEL of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power; WHEN HE SHALL COME TO BE GLORIFIED IN HIS SAINTS, and to be admired in all them that believe, because our testimony among you was believed in that day." "The harvest is the end of the world; the reapers are the angels. As, therefore, the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them that do iniquity, and they shall cast them into a furnace of fire. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear let him hear." Amen.

There is no promise of probation beyond that. Preach, pray, toil, labor, and, if need be, suffer to save all you possibly can from the wrath soon to come. Can any one feel disinterested in the saving of the perishing in this eventful day? If you can, let me beseech you to look out upon the condition of the elements. Never did the lightnings' gleam, the thunder heads looming in the distance, and the muttering sounds of the elements bespeak the storm with more precision, than the striking correspondence of the moral, political, religious and natural elements do the nearness of harvest—the day of doom—the perdition of ungodly men. And can you, professed herald of the Bridegroom, turn aside to vain wrangling, scattering the few, and causing the impenitent, the formalist, the opposer of the last solemn message to exclaim, "There, if that's the fruit of your theories, heaven deliver us from it!" Stop it! For Christ's suffering cause, stop it! For poor sinners' sake, stop it! For the injury you have done, stop it! For the good you may by the blessing of God accomplish, turn, turn to the work of saving souls! Think, dear brethren, if you are the humble instrument of saving only one, and save yourself. What consolation through ceaseless glories of eternal life it will afford you. Almighty Parent of good, lead us all into a more close and holy communion with thee. In infinite mercy give us, as ministers, to feel the importance of our calling, the necessity of entire consecration to thee, the worth of those for whom the well beloved Son shed his most precious blood, the shortness of time, the solemnity of the great crisis visibly approaching, and the account we must soon render in thy immaculate presence!

To the brethren and sisters, in deep feeling permit me to say, you must soon give an account for your conduct. Have you carried into the secret place of prayer a sympathy for the preachers? If not, let me entreat you to pray for us, when it goes well with you at the throne of heavenly mercy and grace. I have feared that much that might have been accomplished after preaching, if, when opportunities have been presented, all the church had been in harmony and favor with God, had fallen down on their knees, and in warm, fervent, short petitions watered the seed sown; but, alas! alas! not having an interest in secret, they were in many instances too cold, too dead, too formal; and the poor, weak servant of God has had to seek the closet to comfort himself against sorrow, while his heart has been faint within him. O! dearly beloved, wake up! Minister, wake up! Church of the living God, awake! A summons to render an account of thy stewardship will soon be required of thee.

For my own comfort amid all the discord, strife and abounding iniquity, it is a consolation to know my Savior is mine, and through grace I am his.

"Whatever ills the world befall,
A pledge of endless good we call,
A sign of Jesus near.
His chariot will not long delay,
We hear the rumbling wheels and pray—
"Triumphant Lord, appear!"

From T. W. Smith.

Bro. Grant:—I suppose you would be pleased to hear occasionally from me, as to my labors in the Master's vineyard. I have been preaching twice each Sabbath, sometimes thrice, and occasionally during the week. I have visited quite a number of churches since I left Philadelphia. I find myself at this time in Vienna, Warren Co., N. J. I spoke here twice last Sunday; and I endeavored to show that Christ will come, and come quickly. The people here have become somewhat prejudiced against Adventists, or at least, do not care to listen to any preaching in reference to the "time." This feeling has been occasioned by the conduct and teachings of a strange being who was about here lately, preaching the second coming of Christ, etc. This, of course, was well enough; but he wanted the people to believe that he was the chosen messenger of God, or one of the seven angels who are to sound the trumpets. He says God is here on this earth in the form of a man, who appears frequently, then disappears. He also affirms that Philadelphia, Penn., is the Philadelphia of the Apocalypse; and that soon a third part of it will be destroyed, etc. He declares he has seen this "God of the earth," who is here in the person of an old man named Dilks, (who I think has been dead several years). He seems to be well versed in the Scriptures; and is calculated to lead weak-minded people astray. I am sorry he has been here, for I cannot for awhile preach strong second advent doctrine, except I want to be considered a disciple of Thomas Davidson. I expect to preach here until the 1st of April and perhaps longer. I try to declare the entire counsel of God. I intend to preach the truth. I wish I had the means to purchase a good quantity of tracts. I think great good might be done here by the circulation of un-evangelical tracts. Can our kind Bro. Hastings afford to send me a few? I ask an interest in brethren and sisters' prayers. If any of the brethren wish to communicate they can address me at Vienna, Warren Co., N. J.

From G. G. Emery.

Bro. Grant:—I would like to say through the columns of the "Crisis," to the preaching brethren in this State, that there is a little company of believers in this place, who would be glad to hear the good tidings of a soon coming King, from some of the watchmen who are stationed on the walls of Zion. We want to hear from some one who will not "shun to declare the whole counsel of God." Brethren, "Come over and help us;" and we trust your labor will not be in vain. Brn. will inquire for the writer.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in East Hebron, Me., Jan. 23d, 1861, Sister Polly Rowe, aged thirty-four years and twenty-nine days.

After a sickness of several months, Sister Polly first became interested in the faith of the Lord's soon coming, and its kindred doctrines, in '54, and ever since they have lain near her heart. She never had seen with her natural eyes since she was two years old, but by faith she looked forward to a time, and that not far distant, when she should see as she was seen, and know as she was known. With the loss of her sight, God blessed her with a great memory, so that she would put to silence the greatest of her opponents. It seemed to be her meat and drink to defend the truth of God's word. But Polly has fallen asleep; not without a hope of awaking again soon in the likeness of her Master. Her faith was firm to the end. When asked if she was "willing to fall asleep?" with all that calmness of a christian she exclaimed, "Yes!" Eld. True Jordan, of West Poland, spoke comforting words to the mourning friends, from Rom. 5: 21. He showed them that sin hath reigned unto death, that even (balance) so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord. That the only source of life was through him. He spoke as one having authority, and I [illegible] many were benefited on the occasion. She left many relatives to mourn her loss, but not as those that have no hope. We expect to meet her soon, where sighs and tears will never come, when Jesus our Lord appears to awake the sleeping dead. Lord Jesus, come quickly! In behalf of the friends,

John C. Wheeler.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices to the 2d inst. per the Arabia.]

FRANCE.

M. Thouvenal has officially assured the American Minister at Paris that no delegate from any seceding State has been received by the Emperor or himself.

A committee of the Senate has adopted the project of an address in response to the Emperor's speech fully endorsing the Imperial policy and lauding his protection of the Pope.

The Paris Patrie asserts that instead of the French army being on the point of leaving Rome, the instructions to Gen. Goyon are quite in a contrary sense.

The pastoral letter of the Bishop of Poictiers, in which he compares the Emperor to Pontius Pilate, was attracting great attention, and the Council of State was considering what steps should be taken in the matter.—Count Persigny had issued a circular in denunciation of the letter.

The debate on the address in response to the Emperor's speech was progressing in the Senate. Several members had spoken in favor of the maintainance of the temporal power of the Pope. Senator Pietri, late Imperial Commissioner in Italy, contended that the temporal power of the Pope was lost, and that France should confine herself to the preservation of his spiritual power.

On the 1st, Prince Napoleon spoke upon the subject. He said:

"I am astonished at the violence of the discussion. I leave to liberal opinion in Europe, to the patriotism of the Italians, to the 200,000 soldiers who, with the Emperor at their head, made the campaign of Italy, the task of replying to the insults you have listened to. (Cheers.) The Empire represents modern society, its progressive tendencies, and the liberal principles of 1789. (Loud cheers.) The people are not mistaken if they rely upon Napoleon III., who will not fail in his mission."

ITALY.

The heights commanding the citadel of Messina were occupied by the Sardinian troops. The representatives of foreign powers had protested to the commanders of the citadel against any damage which might be caused in the city.

The Minister of War at Naples had issued a notice that all foreign soldiers who may have belonged to the Bourbon army, or who may have been in the military service of the Pope, and who should join the reactionary bands of Southern Italy, will, if made prisoners, not be treated as soldiers, but will be punished with the greatest severity.

The Italian Senate, by a vote of twelve to two, adopted a project of law conferring the title of King of Italy on Victor Emmanuel and his successors.

The assertion is repeated that the Piedmontese Brigade will soon enter Rome, and that the Romans were secretly preparing to receive Victor Emmanuel.

A serious insurrection had broken out in Scutari, Turkey.

Private letters report that the rebels had taken Woosang and commenced a general massacre. The French interposed on the score of humanity.

Prussia has not yet assented to the French project in reference to the Syrian question.

General Klapka in a conference with the Democrats at Turin, spoke against any revolutionary attempts in Hungary, representing that the country is unprepared.

An insurgent body, numbering 5000, supported by Montenegrins, pillaged and set fire to the village of Bebar, after killing over fifty Mohometans, including several women.

The financial crisis at Constantinople was increasing, and numerous failures were imminent.

The Papal Government was preparing a statement to the effect that all the responsibility for the late events lies with Napoleon.

The Pope, it appears, has no notion of giving up Rome, and the negotiations which a week or two ago were said to be taking place between his Ministers and Count Cavour, with a view to some satisfactory arrangement, seem to have ended in failure. Now that Gaeta has surrendered, preparations have commenced for reducing the citadel of Messina.

FRANCE, AUSTRIA, AND THE ITALIAN REVOLUTION.

A Paris letter mentions as a rumor in accredited quarters that Prince Metternich has just communicated to M. Thouvenal an important note from the court of Vienna. In this note it is asserted the Austrian Government declares that it will never recognize Victor Emmanuel as King of Italy, but if France recalls her troops from Rome, she will immediately replace them by an Austrian army, and that if the revolutionists make the least movement in Venetia or Hungary, she will cross the Mincio.

From Syria.—Beirut, Feb. 9.—The small pox is prevailing in all parts of Syria. The French general has ordered the vaccination of his whole army. About forty men of the English frigate Doris have been attacked with the disease, and are placed in a hospital on shore. The crowded state of the cities and the filthy habits of the refugees, together with the want of their usual household comforts, have rendered the thousands liable to every form of disease.

It is said that the Syrian merchants are hoarding gold, an act which indicates great alarm with regard to the future. It is the custom in Syria, when war is anticipated, for the people to bury their money and jewelry in the ground, so that it not often happens that these hid treasures are found, either being turned up by the plough, or brought to light by excavations for building.

The work of setting the telegraph poles between Beirut and Damascus is entirely interrupted by the heavy fall of snow, and all work on the Damascus carriage road is, for the same reason, suspended. The fact that the French are prosecuting this latter most expensive undertaking with great energy, is significant in a political point of view. No one can believe that shrewd French capitalists would venture so much in Syria, in these uncertain days, unless Napoleon III. had given them clear assurances of some permanent protection.

New York, March 16.—The Times Washington dispatch says the Cabinet has come to no decision on the question of evacuation of Fort Sumter, in opposition to which movement very strong arguments are made. Recent letters from Major Anderson resent with indignation the insinuations against his disposition to hold Fort Sumter to the last extremity.

A prominent secession leader in Charleston has received, during the past week, a letter from a friend of his in Montgomery, in which he stated that he considered the new government almost as bad as the one against which they had rebelled, and there are hundreds and thousands in the neighboring State of Georgia, who believe it is a great deal worse, and who will be heard to say so ere March is gone.

The Savannah Republican says the duty of recognizing Southern independence is involved in the evacuation of Fort Sumter. It remarks:

"The event, in itself, is of far less importance than its progressive and evidently final results. It is the peaceful opening wedge that must complete the separation without a resort to arms. Pickens and the other forts of the Gulf must follow the lead of Sumter, and the very act of abandonment involves the necessity of our right to a separate independence, and the duty of the old Union to recognize and respect it. Such recognition at home will fly to the ends of the earth, and in a brief season we shall stand honored and respected amongst the nations."

DOMESTIC.

Strategetic Plans of the Administration.—We are informed upon high authority which is connected with no party, but has unusual means of information, that it is the intention of the administration to withdraw the troops, if necessary, from the forts in the seceded States, and to concentrate them all in the neighborhood of Washington, for the purpose of throwing heavy reinforcements into Old Point, which can be done in in one night from the federal city. It is said by military men that Old Point is completely the key of the position with reference to Virginia, Maryland, and North Carolina; that, when it is once in possession of a large force—no matter what those States separately or collectively may do—they can effect nothing, and are completely at the mercy of the power holding possession of that vast and commanding fortress. With this important purpose in view, the troops from Texas, and other portions of the border are to be concentrated at such a point that they can at once be thrown into Fortress Monroe, whilst at the same time, the border States are thrown off their guard and pacified by the apparent withdrawal of coercive measures from the States of the Southern confederacy.—Richmond Despatch, March 13th.

Important Statements of the President.—Washington, March 15, 1861.—A member of the Virginia Convention called upon President Lincoln this morning, and had an exceedingly satisfactory interview. The President assured him that no vessels had been sent South with hostile intentions. The vessels that had been despatched contained only provisions and supplies for troops in Texas, and also for the Home Squadron. He stated, further, that there would be nothing done in regard to affairs in the South for sixty days, and that it was his purpose to restore peace and prevent the shedding of blood.

The Virginian left fully impressed that President Lincoln was a peace man, and would not allow himself to be drawn into adopting a war policy to please a few radical republicans.

Resistance to the Federal Authority in Baltimore.—Washington, March 15.—From intelligence received here this morning it is highly probable that the first resistance to federal authority will take place in the city of Baltimore. It appears that those men who favor secession have determined that in the event of the appointment of any one of those who voted the republican ticket to any permanent office, such as Collector, Postmaster or Naval Office, they shall not take possession of the office, and that they will resist them to the last. Their purpose is to bring on an "irrepressible conflict."

It is understood that the President has been informed of this determination.

Important from Texas.—Galveston, March 15th.—Steamer Rusk has returned from Brazos with three hundred State troops on board. The Federal troops evacuated Fort Brown on the 12th, and left on the steamer Daniel Webster for Key West and Tortugas.

Washington, March 16.—Dispatches from Pensacola to the secessionists state that the captain of the Brooklyn has been notified that if he attempts to land provisions at Fort Pickens he will be fired into. An engagement is anticipated.

General Conference in Boston.

A General Religious Conference will be held in Chapman Hall, Boston, commencing Tuesday evening, at 7 o'clock, April 9th, and continuing each day and evening through the week and over the Lord's day.

The object and design of this meeting is not so much for the passing of resolutions or the transaction of ecclesiastical business, as for the advancement of pure christianity among us in true revival and reformation. What we as a body want and need, is not disputation or hobbies, but earnest, direct labor for the immediate promotion of the work of God in awakening the careless and indifferent, stirring up the luke-warm, and quickening into life and activity the too sluggish energies of the whole church in the personal work of preparation to meet the Master, who is before the door. In fact, we are too dull, too barren, and want more faith, zeal, love—more religion. And not only is it to be hoped that our meeting may prove a great means of grace to the waiting saints, but our hearts' desire is to see sinners converted to God, and thus made ready for the approaching great day of doom. Let those, then, who are asleep, awake and be strong. Let the righteous gird on their armor. Let sinful men be alarmed. All signs point to the speedy coming of the Lord, and it is high time that those who look for him be up and doing with their might their last solemn work. Let earnest and faithful prayer go up to heaven for the success of this conference. Ministers of Christ, plead with him for the spiritual interest of the meeting, and come to it in humility and faith, that our God who is now working among our churches in various places, may also pour his Spirit upon the worshipers at Chapman Hall. We invite our dear brethren and sisters from abroad to come. Come, all who can. Provision will be made by the friends for all needful entertainment.

To the Churches.

☞ Let the churches everywhere beware of a "Ministerial Rascal" who has been a "Mormon Elder," a play actor, manager of a theatre, a drunkard, and several other characters, among which is that of a professed minister of Christ, all at the same time, all of which he has faithfully performed, except the last, in which he has miserably failed. The said character, who styles himself the "Rev. George Jones Adams," alias "Rev. J. A. Jones," alias "George Washington Jones Adams," has been quartered among us in Springfield for the past three or four months, and before his character became known, put on a very good exterior of honesty and piety, but has proved himself to be the most corrupt, lying impostor and hypocrite with whom it has ever been our misfortune to become acquainted. Do not admit him into your houses, neither bid him "God speed"; for he preaches not the doctrine of Christ.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

For the Crisis.

Dear Brother:—A short time since I received the enclosed lines of poetry from a dear old pilgrim sister on her way to Mt. Zion, (there living rather of a secluded life outward). They seemed very precious to me because expressive of real heart experience; and the thought suggested itself to my mind, send them to the "Crisis" for insertion, that they may call forth a response from other hearts than my own, for I know of no treasure equal to "a quiet mind,"—a mind quieted by the influence and power of truth as it is revealed in the spirit and testimony of Him who was dead, but is alive—yea, and alive forevermore, Christ Jesus the Lord, the only real source of life, love and immortality. My heart claims a kindred with those that are in Him, "members of his body," known and unknown; feeling to realize a greater increase of understanding relative to his blessed will concerning me, and grace sufficient for the full demand, I desire ever to abide in thankfulness and patient waiting on the Lord.

A Quiet Mind.

"My peace I give unto you."

I have a treasure which I prize,
Its like I cannot find;
'Tis far beyond what earth can give:
'Tis this—a quiet mind.

But 'tis not that I'm stupefied,
Or senseless, dull, or blind;
'Tis God's own peace that reigns within,
Which forms my quiet mind.

I found this treasure at the cross;
And there to every kind
Of weary, heavy-laden souls,
Christ gives a quiet mind.

My Savior's death and risen life,
To give it were designed;
His love's the never-failing spring
Of this, my quiet mind.

The love of God within my breast
My heart to him doth bind;
This is the peace of heaven on earth,
This is my quiet mind.

I've many a cross to take up now,
And many left behind;
But present troubles move me not,
Nor shake my quiet mind.

And what may be to-morrow's cross
I never seek to find;
My Savior says, "Leave that to me,
And keep a quiet mind."

And well I know the Lord hath said,
To make my heart resigned,
That mercy still shall follow those
Who have this quiet mind.

I meet with pride of wit and wealth,
And scorn and looks unkind;
It matters not, I envy none
While I've a quiet mind.

I'm waiting now to see the Lord,
Who's been to me so kind;
I want to thank him face to face,
For this my quiet mind.

THE COMING STRUGGLE Between the Church and the Powers of Darkness:

SHOWING THE MISSION AND DESTINY OF SPIRITUALISM.

No. 6.

THE MEN OF CORRUPT MINDS.

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come, for men shall be lovers of their own selves, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure more (or rather, as Dr. Clarke says) than lovers of God, having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof: from such turn away. For of this sort are they who creep into houses and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, ever learning and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth. Now as Jannus and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. But they shall proceed no further, for their folly shall be manifest to all men as theirs also was."—2 Tim. 3: 1—9.

Here also we have an allusion to a display of miracle-working power whose operation and associate influences against the truth, Paul calls the "perilous times" of the last days. But I will notice more particularly. From this scripture we learn:—

1. That the "perilous times" of "the last days" will be marked by a resistance to the truth.

2. We are told how it shall be resisted—"as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses," that is, by working miracles in defence of another religion with a special design to bring the truth into disrepute.

3. We learn by whom it shall be resisted—by men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith.

The perils of the last days are manifest in other passages already noticed, but here the perils are particularly specified as a resistance to the truth by men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. Who, though they have a form (not the form) of godliness are still unholy, blasphemers, fierce, incontinent despisers of those that are good, etc. They have also a plausible support for their recklessness in that they are attended with a striking display of supernatural power. When we consider with these, their "free love" feature declaring that "they creep into houses and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts," we find the prominent features of Spiritualism described unmistakably.

Their resistance to the truth is as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses. It is evident that Jannes and Jambres were those Egyptian magicians who wrought miracles before Pharaoh when Moses appeared before him for the release of the children of Israel.—Ex. 7th and 8th chaps. Paul alludes to them as something they were familiar with and not demanding an explanation, and I have seen two or three authorities that such were the names of those magicians, but am unable to quote them now. Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses by working miracles in defence of their mission against the mission and miracles of Moses; hence: these last day miracle-workers may be expected to resist the truth by working miracles in support of their errors as a substitue for the truth. Do not all advanced Spiritualists deny the Bible? and do they not also claim that their miracles give authority to their teachings as the only religion worthy of our acceptance in these days? Hence, this scripture can but belong to Spiritualism. We will now consider the two-horned beast of Rev. 13th.

THE TWO-HORNED BEAST.

"And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast whose deadly wound was healed. And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth that they should make an image to the beast which had the wound by a sword and did live. And he had power to give life to the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed. And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads: that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name. Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast, for it is the number of a man, and his number is six hundred, threescore and six. And I looked and lo, a Lamb stood on Mount Zion, and with him an hundred and forty, and four thousand, having His Father's name written in their foreheads. And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder."—Rev. 13: 11—18, and 14: 1, 2.

This two-horned beast has been formerly supposed by most brethren to have had its fulfillment in the past, though not so much so now. I do not discover, however, that this disposition to put its work in the past, arose from any well settled or harmonious application of the prophecy among those who believed it in the past, but rather from a disposition to believe that "all is in the past" in view of the nearness of Christ's coming. I can see, however, that this eagerness to put it in the past without any clear application there, has given rise, as Bro. Litch says, to "as many views as to the beast, who he is, as there are writers on the subject."

These various theories, putting this beast in the past, have had their admirers, but none have been generally accepted. Whether the application was to the Czar of Russia, with his double title, or Napoleon, without such title, or to England and little Wales as the two-horned beast, the theory seemed equally acceptable in view of the difficulties since it put "all in the past." All this instability and catching "at a straw" has, I apprehend, grown out of the general repugnance to the inquiry whether these things may not be in the future. This idea, that "all is in the past," was firmly and very naturally believed by those who thought the Lord's coming immediately impending as in "43"; but seventeen years have since passed developing certain things not then in the past, as Spiritualism, which all agree has fulfilled certain prophecies otherwise applied at that time. Hence, as it was not correct to say at that time, "all is in the past," we should be more guarded about allowing such things to come upon us unawares, and should approach the future with our eyes open.

Some think it unsafe to regard these things as having their fulfillment in the future, as though it would be putting "far off the evil day." I am as anxious to know the nearness of Christ's coming as any one, but nothing will throw light upon this point but the truth, which I dare not satisfy myself must be found by putting into the past things which manifestly belong in the future. But we will now notice the prophecy of the two-horned beast, and see where it does belong. We will first consider the meaning of some of these terms as we are now in symbolic prophecy and determine what power is here alluded to as "the first beast." A beast, or more properly "wild beast," in prophecy symbolizes a kingdom.—Dan. 7: 17, 23, and Rev. 17th chap. This beast is said to have "two horns" which represents a union of two distinct regalities under one head, as was the case with Media and Persia.—Dan. 8: 3, 20. This first beast and his career are introduced into the 13th chap. carrying us down till we come to the two-horned beast. He is represented here as speaking great things and blasphemies. It is said that "he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name and his tabernacle and them that dwell in heaven. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them, and power was given him over all kindreds, tongues, and nations."

All Protestant interpreters agree that this "first beast" is that power which grew out of a union of the Catholic Church with the State in its past history as a persecuting power. Then "power was given him over all nations," insomuch that the Pope claimed the right to make and unmake kings at his pleasure, and frequently exercised it. At this time it "made war with the saints," also, when forty or fifty millions were put to death for their adherence to the truth. It continued its course also "for forty and two months," literally, 1260 years. And now having fulfilled these things and lost its power over the nations, and also its power to put the saints to death, it has gone into captivity according to the prediction, "he that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity, he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword."

Whether we regard his oppressive career of forty-two months which should terminate by his going into captivity, as closing in 1787, when the Pope lost all political influence in Europe; in 179–, when Gen. Berthier carried the Pope captive to France where he died in exile; in 1809, when the Pope was taken captive by Gen. Radet, under Bonaparte and carried to France in company with Cardinal Pacca; or in the present distressed condition of the Papacy, it does not affect the point under consideration, since we have only to show that she has gone into captivity, and that, since her oppressive persecution in the past. I think, however, that she was reduced and punished more during the French Revolution than at any other period. Goodrich, in his History of the Church, in speaking of the effects of this revolution says:—"The revolutionary torrent which was thus set in motion, destroyed law, government and religion in France, and laid waste the Roman Church, both there and in neighboring countries. Her priests were massacred. . . . From the Atlantic to the Adriatic, she presented but one appalling spectacle. She had shed the blood of saints and prophets, and God now gave her blood to drink."—p. 184. Says Montalambert, a Catholic, speaking of the Papacy at that time:—"All the world looked upon it as a corpse which it only remained to bury." It was to be in this helpless condition when the two-horned beast comes up, whose rise and work we will now consider.

This two-horned beast is said to "speak as a dragon," that is, "furious, fiery, fierce." He is said to exercise "all the power of the first beast before him and therefore "over all kindreds, tongues and nations." This two-horned beast's exercising all the power of the first beast, shows that it did not come up till the first beast had lost its power, as this power over all nations could not be held by two parties at the same time. And it is further evident that this two-horned beast comes up when the first beast had no power, from the fact that all the power used in causing the earth to worship the first beast is attributed to the two-horned beast. And lastly, it must be found in its humiliation when this beast comes up and causes the earth to worship it, for during the forty-two months it has the worship of all that dwell upon the earth, whose names are not written in the book of life.

This beast is said to do great wonders. He even makes fire come down from heaven on earth in the sight of men. "He deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast." That this deception will become general through this miraculous display of power is manifest from the passages,—"He causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship," etc., and "He deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do," etc.

It has been said that a beast cannot symbolize one man, merely, but always a kingdom and "whatever we may interpret this power to be, we may rest assured that it is a body politic, a government or kingdom, as much so as Babylon, or Grecia, or any kingdom that has or does exist." This language was used in an article designed to prove that Spiritualism neither has, nor will fulfill the prophecy of the two-horned beast, and urging that it is already fulfilled by some other power. But if a beast represents a kingdom always, and in this case in particular, then this two-horned beast cannot point to "one man, merely," having power to do "great wonders," but to a body of miracle-workers organized as a "kingdom, as much so as Babylon, Grecia, or any kingdom that has or does exist." Here would be a difficulty for the advocates of this idea to find such a kingdom in the past and doing the work attributed to the two-horned beast. I conclude, however, that though a beast in prophecy points generally to a kingdom, and in this case in particular, yet the miraculous power of the two-horned beast is not attributed so much to the mass composing the kingdom, as to one man at its head.

It is further said that "he deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast, saying unto them that dwell on the earth that they should make an image to the beast which had the wound by a sword and did live." He first deceives them and gains their confidence in his being directed from the invisible world, by his manifestations of supernatural power in causing fire to come down from heaven on earth in the sight of men, and doing other great wonders and miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast. When he has laid this foundation for the confidence of his admirers in his direction and mission from the invisible world, perhaps as the forerunner of the "Coming Man," who shall bring about the "good time coming," he cannot fail of success in "saying to them that dwell on the earth that they should make an image to the beast which had the wound by a sword and did live."

Now since a beast, or wild beast, represents a kingdom, and an image is a resemblance or likeness; therefore, an image to the first beast, power, or kingdom, must be a power or kingdom resembling that first in its peculiar features. But its peculiar features were a union of church and state, forbidding all worship without their authority; therefore, the image to the beast must be the same. And since he causes them that dwell on the earth to worship the first beast, and performs his miracles in the sight or presence of the beast, and finally causes an image to be made to the beast, it seems that he courts the favor of the first, or Papal beast, which becomes a supporter of the image to the beast.

That this image to the beast embraces a union of church and state, it is further evident from its demanding worship of all and enforcing these demands by putting to death, so far as may be, which requires the arm of state, all who refuse to worship as they direct. It not only provides that as many as will not worship the image of the beast, shall be killed, but also requires of all who do worship that they shall receive a mark in their right hand or in their foreheads, in order, probably, that those who do not worship may be the more readily detected. And determined by all means to compel those who cannot be persuaded, they attempt to starve to terms those who would still worship God according to their own consciences, providing that "none shall buy nor sell save those who have the mark of the beast." Here, then, in this two-horned beast we have:—

1. A kingdom between the downfall of the Papacy which has happened within the past eighty years and the coming of Christ in the future, whose head displays a wonderful power in working miracles.

2. He persuades the world through the influence of his miracles in giving apparent evidence of divine authority to his mission to worship or respect the Papacy again.

3. He obtains the co-operation of the Papacy whose united efforts are now put forth for the subjection of the world generally unto their religion, when those who will not accept are put to death as rebels to the ruling powers.

4. Their authority in making their demands on all to submit to their worship, is generally admitted by the world in view of their support from the invisible world; having the power to make fire come down on earth in the sight of men, and do other great wonders at pleasure in which they are manifestly assisted from the invisible powers.

5. Those who accept of their worship are required to bear a distinguishing mark in their right hand or forehead.

6. None shall be suffered to buy nor sell save those who have this mark. But none of these things have as yet taken place. This kingdom does not yet exist, neither as a body of miracle-workers nor as having such miraculous power in its head; nor has the Papacy been saved from its humiliation and obtained the respect of the world again; much less do we see the world respecting the Papacy through the miraculous feats attributed to the two-horned beast; nor do we see the union of church and state embracing as its chief elements the Papacy and this miracle-working power, putting to death those who refuse to worship it, and providing, that all who worship shall bear a mark of loyality in their right hand or forehead, while none others are suffered to buy or sell. If the two-horned beast is developed, the humiliation of the Papacy has ceased, the second union of church and state is manifest in its persecuting character, and all the above items may be recognized as fulfilled or in progress. But our best efforts to put these things in the past can prove no more than that they have been done in a corner.

For the Crisis.

What we Need.

Down here in the last days, where it is impossible to live without the Spirit's influence, we all need to walk in the unity of the Spirit, to hold close communion with God. We need men of prayer, holy, zealous and true. People have got such narrow ideas of zeal that saints have forgotten to shout and sing, and "be joyful in the Lord." We want ministers who are willing to be anything, to be called everything, to endure all things, to suffer, to weep, to be obliged to pray "give us this day our daily bread;"—we want ministers who are humble, meek, Christ-like, anxious to pull sinners as brands from the burning, who will work without gloves, to glorify God and not honor self. We want shepherds who care for the flock more than for the fleece. We want those who are small enough to feed the lambs. The old sheep may have D.D.'s and LL.D.'s to feed them, but the little ones want to be fed by some child of God. We want the TRUTH preached,—not a part of it, but all truth. We want it preached "in season" especially. We not only ask for explanations of man, Daniel's visions, John's sights and wonders, with interpretations thereof; but we want the love of Christ revealed. We want that applied to the head,—this to the heart. Some think it is sufficient to believe the prophets,—to rightly understand all about the "seven heads and ten horns," etc. etc. But even Satan believes and trembles, which is more than some men do. I admit that a right faith tends to regulate the whole life; but still there are many who can give you link after link of the plan of salvation, who never had any part in it. These are converted to the truth, but not to the Lord.

Above all good things we want peace, not only with God, but with one another. We want the whole world of tongues bridled. We want less backbiting, slandering, reproaching, and far more praying. O we do want more honesty, more love, that thinketh no evil. We want more union. We want less looking at bonnets, and more self-examination. Then we want plainer bonnets, so that we shall not notice them so readily. And if we want the presence of God in our meetings, we want humility. We want to be low enough to kneel, to bow down before Jehovah, considering ourselves but dust in the presence of a great and eternal God.

Brethren, shall our wants be supplied? Shall we leave all the burden on a few, who have to carry our cross and theirs too,—and then because they get better pay than we do, get blessed happy, and shout and roar over it, shall we lazy drones get in a line and call them fanatics? Let us each bear his own burden, get his own blessing, wear his own crown. O let us be awake. Time flies fast. What we do must be done soon. Souls are perishing, the church is sleeping, the Lord is coming, and we ought to be working. I'm going to work,—who'll go with me? Come, scores of you.

Selections.

What of Christ?

It was a few years ago that a church and congregation which had long been dead and barren, began to show signs of the reviving influences of the Holy Spirit. With the deepest interest the pastor watched the increasing solemnity and seriousness manifested by all classes. A spirit of prayer was poured out on God's children, and the impenitent were deeply impressed with a sense of the importance of spiritual and eternal things. The work was deep and powerful.

In the congregation was a young man who had never had any religious instruction or christian influence. His father, some years before, on finding one of his daughters anxious in regard to her eternal interests, tried, by making parties of pleasure on the Sabbath, and drawing her gay companions around her, to divert her mind, stifle conscience, and prevent her stealing away to church. But that father had died, the children had been induced to attend public worship on the Sabbath, and now all of them were interested in their eternal salvation.

The pastor saw the struggles of this young man; and one evening, at the close of the services, sought an interview with him. In the kindest manner he showed him his situation as a transgressor of God's holy law, the condemnation he was under, and his utter helplessness to save himself or work out his own righteousness. He then asked him what he was going to do, or how escape eternal death, and left him to his own reflections.

The next day, with the greatest despondency and anguish depicted on his countenance, he came to his pastor, asking, "What must I do to be saved?" He could find no way of escape. His pastor asked him if he had thought of Christ. He replied, "No; but WHAT OF CHRIST?" His pastor then opened up to him the glorious plan of salvation; showed him how Christ, moved with compassion for our misery and ruin, suffered for us, offering up his life a sacrifice to divine justice, and now lives to intercede for us; how God could be just, and the justifier of him who believeth; how he is waiting to welcome and adopt us into his family, washing out our sins in the blood of Jesus, and clothing us in his righteousness; and how he sends his Spirit to strive with us and draw us to himself and sanctifies us.

It was a new and wonderful revelation to him; and with all the love and confidence and trust of a little child he welcomed it, rejoiced in it, accepted this precious Savior as his own, and consecrated himself to his service.

Some years have since passed, and he remains steadfast, surrounding his children with christian influences, and training them up in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord."—Amer. Messenger.

Divine Providence.

God governs in the affairs of men, though we do not see him. God watches the flow of daily life. He stands in the market; he walks in the street; he beholds the ways of business, the paths of temptation, the lanes of pleasure, the sinks of evil,—in all places where men are tasked and tried, and made temptable, there stands God looking, taking account; and not only beholding, but encouraging, cheering, and saying, if men would but hear his voice, "It is always safe to be right; there is always reward in virtue; there is always solid foundation in righteousness." Everywhere the voice of God to men is, "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness"—that is, seek, as the best and highest end of desire, my kingdom and my righteousness—and it shall take nothing from, but shall add all things to you.—Beecher.

☞ Keep good company or none.

True Religion.

A true religion, then, never is in the way of anything which a man ought to desire. It undertakes to give a man more, in every way, than in his ignorance he could have had. It teaches him restraint in one place, only to enable him to reach forth to liberty in another. It undertakes to give a man the whole of himself. When a man would rob himself by taking undue liberties with one part, leaving all the other parts unoccupied, religion teaches him a higher and a better use of all his powers. It undertakes to give a man the most that can be harmoniously educed from every faculty of his nature, and therefore refuses to let him overtax some, and underuse other parts of his being. Its very end is to give men salvation in the life to come, by making them better men in the life that now is. It seeks to make a man happier; it seeks to give him liberty, and power, and superior quality, in every faculty of his nature. When, therefore, men enter upon a christian life in this large and generous method, God stands and declares that such a course, while it secures, ultimately, the high ends of eternal salvation, shall also secure secular good. "Godliness is profitable unto all things having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." Religion shall bless a man both in this life and in the life that is hereafter.—Beecher.

Waking Thoughts.

With what a glory wakes this Sabbath morn!
What sudden splendors gild the Eastern skies!
How swiftly from the shrouded valleys borne,
The mists dispel and vanish from our eyes!

The lichened rocks and leafless groves awake,
And e'en these winter hills, so brown and bare,
Back from their barren brows the shadows shake,
And this new sheen of golden promise wear.

So, when the Eternal Sabbath morn shall bring
Its full release from all of Earth's control,
Those purer rays which gild each seraph's wing,
With light and warmth shall bathe each ransomed soul.

No sterile waste is there, no night of sin;
No clouds may gather, no rude winds may blow;
There God shall welcome each new comer in
To pastures green, where living waters flow.

Oh when, sweet Sabbath, shall thy morning break,
Down the far summits of heaven's hills of gold?
When, when shall we from life's poor dream awake,
And God's Eternal Heritage behold?

Bits of Gold.

I never find, Blessed be the rich, or blessed be the noble; but, Blessed be the meek, blessed be the poor, blessed be the mourners. And yet, O God, most carry themselves as if they not only not desired, but even feared to be blessed.—George Herbert, died 1632.

Full oft time I read, that no man trust in his own perfection, be he stronger than Sampson, or holier than David, or wiser than Solomon.—Chaucer, died 1400.

A christian should look upon himself as sacred and devoted. For that which involves but an ordinary degree of criminality in others, in him partakes of the nature of sacrilege; what is a breach of trust in others, is, in him, the profanation of a temple.—Robert Hall.

Prayer touches the only spring that can insure success. By speaking we move man; but by prayer, we move God.—Ibid.

It is the Cross.

It is the cross that tells us most of the evil of sin; for it shows us the Son of God punished for our sin.

It is the cross that tells us of the free grace of God to sinners; for it shows us that rather than let us die God gave his Son to die for us.

It is the cross that tells us the sin that is in man's heart, and how man hates God; there we see man killing the Son of God.

It is the cross that tells us the love of Jesus; for it shows Jesus dying for those that hated and killed him.

Brevity.—A writer in the Christian Secretary thinks that much might be gained if speakers in prayer and conference meetings would "observe the miller's creed—always shut the gate when the grist is cut."

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

Throat Ail.

The first symptoms of throat-ail, or Chronic Laryngitis, or Clergymen's Sore Throat, are usually a frequent hemming and hacking, in order to clear the voice or throat; this is slight and seldom at first, and may not be noticed for weeks; but then, it is so decided, that it forces itself upon the attention, either by its frequency, or by the force required to clear the throat sufficiently to speak with distinctness. After a while, it requires such an effort to enunciate plainly, that the patient for the first time becomes aware of a certain feeling of tiredness about the throat or neck; most generally it is a dull hurting; or he finds there is a kind of lumpish feeling in the throat, and he attempts to swallow it away, and it does seem to go down, but it does not stay down, and he swallows again, and soon he finds himself swallowing all the time; occasionally there is a different cause for swallowing, the throat appears to be dry, and swallowing for a time seems to moisten it; finally the swallowing is almost incessant, especially if the mind is directed to it. For a time, nothing is brought away; gradually a little pearly or whitish or cottony-like phlegm is brought up, and the patient becomes hoarse. In the progress of things this phlegm becomes dryish, and so tough, that it clings to the inside of the throat, and can only be dislodged by a decided effort at clearing, with a dipping forward of the head. The voice next becomes husky; at last a positive cough is necessary to dislodge the phlegm, and consumption soon follows.

The symptoms detailed are present in the history of every case I have known. Accompanying these, there are occasional additional symptoms. A kind of pain, sharp or hurting, runs up the side of the neck towards the ear. Some complain of a burning feeling now and then at the little hollow at the bottom of the neck; or up and down the breast bone in the centre, or at the pit of the stomach. These burning sensations are not felt continuously in any case, but at certain times during the day.

CAUSES OF THROAT-AIL.

I cannot here state them all, nor at length, only the principal ones, and them succinctly.

I have now these many years confined my attention rigidly and exclusively to throat and lung diseases. I think I was the first physician in the United States to do so, as rigidly. I know not that there is any one besides myself in this country, who dismisses every case as invariably, in which the air passages are not involved. I make this statement for the purpose of enabling the reader to place the deserved estimate at the assertion I am going to make, to wit:

Three cases out of every four coming to me for throat-ail, have it as the result of improper eating and drinking.

* * * *

A proper use of the voice strengthens the throat, and gives it a capability of resisting disease, just as a judicious use of any other muscles of the body increase their strength and health. But improper use, as just stated, by weakening, renders them more susceptible of disease of any kind, and specially of the stomach, in consequence of the nervous connection before described.

* * * *

AN INSTRUCTIVE WARNING TO CLERGYMEN.

In illustration of the principles stated, I will record here a fact.

A very eminent D. D. within a year has given up the charge of his congregation from a complaint in the throat; his parishioners, in parting with him, presented him with a farm, and now, he is lecturing over the country, and nothing is heard about his throat complaint, except when he leaves his wife at home; when that is the case, he is laid up instanter. As long as she is at his side to watch over what he eats as to quality and amount, he keeps well; when he transgresses, the food sours on the stomach, the throat burns, gets clogged up, he is hoarse and useless.

Throat-ail then being generally located in the stomach—what is the use of gargling the throat with acids and metallic preparations, which destroy the teeth? and what is the use of swabbing out the throat with nitrate of silver, when the source of the disease is elsewhere. It does I know sometimes give relief, but it is not permanent, it cannot be, for it is merely covering a black spot on the wall with whitewash; the spot is not seen, but it is there still; but unlike the black spot, which is statu quo, the disease, though covered, is burrowing and spreading still. If again, the disease is really in the stomach, it is a useless waste of time, it is unphilosophical, to tell a clergyman who has throat-ail, that he must abandon preaching; because the voice muscles must be treated like any other muscle of the body which is debilitated, their energies must be invited back by judicious forms of exercise, just as in recovering from a fever, we increase our strength by exercising carefully and gradually, and safely increasing that exercise.—Dr. Hall.

How to preserve the Teeth.

The mouth is a very warm place—98 degrees Fahrenheit. In this northern climate we never have a temperature so high, in the shade. Even at ninety beef will begin to decompose in twenty-four hours. The particles of beef and other food which are left betwee the teeth at dinner, begin to putrefy before dinner the next day. If you then pick the teeth, the odor of the breath testifies to decomposition.

With this management we ought not to be surprised that the gums and teeth should become the subjects of disease.

What is to be done?

1st. Use the tooth-pick (goose quill) after each meal. Follow with a mouthful or two of water, to remove the particles the tooth-pick may have left behind.

2d. Every morning, on rising, use the brush and castile soap.

With these simple things thoroughly done, you will preserve the teeth to old age.—Dr. Lewis's Boston Journal of Physical Culture.

For the Crisis.

Dear Brethren:—A short time since I received the enclosed lines of poetry from a dear old pilgrim sister on her way to Mt. Zion, (though living rather of a secluded life outward). They seemed very precious to me being expressive of real heart experience; and the thought suggested itself to my mind to send them to the "Crisis" for insertion that they may call forth a response from other hearts than my own, for I know of no treasure equal to "a quiet mind,"—a mind quieted by the influence and power of truth as it is revealed in the spirit and testimony of Him who was dead, but is alive—yea, and alive forevermore, Christ Jesus the Lord, the only real source of life, love and immortality. My heart claims a kindred with those that are in Him, "members of his body," known and unknown; seeking to realize a greater increase of understanding relative to his blessed will concerning me, and grace sufficient for the full demand, I desire ever to abide in thankfulness and patient waiting on the Lord.

A Quiet Mind.

"My peace I give unto you."

I have a treasure which I prize,
Its like I cannot find;
'Tis far beyond what earth can give:
'Tis this—a quiet mind.

But 'tis not that I'm stupefied,
Or senseless, dull, or blind;
'Tis God's own peace that reigns within,
Which forms my quiet mind.

I found this treasure at the cross;
And there to every kind
Of weary, heavy-laden souls,
Christ gives a quiet mind.

My Savior's death and risen life,
To give it were designed;
His love 's the never-failing spring
Of this, my quiet mind.

The love of God within my breast
My heart to him doth bind;
This is the peace of heaven on earth,
This is my quiet mind.

I've many a cross to take up now,
And many left behind;
But present troubles move me not,
Nor shake my quiet mind.

And what may be to-morrow's cross
I never seek to find;
My Savior says, "Leave that to me,
And keep a quiet mind."

And well I know the Lord hath said,
To make my heart resigned,
That mercy still shall follow those
Who have this quiet mind.

I meet with pride of wit and wealth,
And scorn and looks unkind;
It matters not, I envy none
While I've a quiet mind.

I'm waiting now to see the Lord,
Who's been to me so kind;
I want to thank him face to face,
For this my quiet mind.

THE MEN OF CORRUPT MINDS.

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come, for men shall be lovers of their own selves, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure more (or rather, as Dr. Clarke says) than lovers of God, having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof: from such turn away. For of this sort are they who creep into houses and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, ever learning and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth. Now as Jannus and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. But they shall proceed no further, for their folly shall be manifest to all men as theirs also was."—2 Tim. 3: 1—9.

Here also we have an allusion to a display of miracle-working power whose operation and associate influences against the truth, Paul calls the "perilous times" of the last days. But I will notice more particularly. From this scripture we learn:—

1. That the "perilous times" of "the last days" will be marked by a resistance to the truth.

2. We are told how it shall be resisted —"as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses," that is, by working miracles in defence of another religion with a special design to bring the truth into disrepute.

3. We learn by whom it shall be resisted—by men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith.

The perils of the last days are manifest in other passages already noticed, but here the perils are particularly specified as a resistance to the truth by men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. Who, though they have a form (not the form) of godliness are still unholy, blasphemers, fierce, incontinent despisers of those that are good, etc. They have also a plausible support for their recklessness in that they are attended with a striking display of supernatural power. When we consider with these, their "free love" feature declaring that "they creep into houses and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts," we find the prominent features of Spiritualism described unmistakably.

Their resistance to the truth is as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses. It is evident [illegible] Jannes and Jambres were those [illegible] magicians who wrought miracles before Pharaoh when Moses appeared before him for the release of the children of Israel.—Ex. 7th and 8th chaps. Paul alludes to them as something they were familiar with and not demanding an explanation, and I have seen two or three authorities that such were the names of those magicians, but am unable to quote them now. Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses by working miracles in defence of their mission against the mission and miracles of Moses; hence: these last day miracle-workers may be expected to resist the truth by working miracles in support of their errors as a substitue for the truth. Do not all advanced Spiritualists deny the Bible? and do they not also claim that their miracles give authority to their teachings as the only religion worthy of our acceptance in these days? Hence, this scripture can but belong to Spiritualism. We will now consider the two-horned beast of Rev. 13th.

THE TWO-HORNED BEAST.

"And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast whose deadly wound was healed. And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth that they should make an image to the beast which had the wound by a sword and did live. And he had power to give life to the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed. And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads: that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name. Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast, for it is the number of a man, and his number is six hundred, threescore and six. And I looked and lo, a Lamb stood on Mount Zion, and with him an hundred and forty, and four thousand, having His Father's name written in their foreheads. And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder."—Rev. 13: 11—18, and 14: 1, 2.

This two-horned beast has been formerly supposed by most brethren to have had its fulfillment in the past, though not so much so now. I do not discover, however, that this disposition to put its work in the past, arose from any well settled or harmonious application of the prophecy among those who believed it in the past, but rather from a disposition to believe that "all is in the past" in view of the nearness of Christ's coming. I can see, however, that this eagerness to put it in the past without any clear application there, has given rise, as Bro. Litch says, to "as many views as to the beast, who he is, as there are writers on the subject."

These various theories, putting this beast in the past, have had their admirers, but none have been generally accepted. Whether the application was to the Czar of Russia, with his double title, or Napoleon, without such title, or to England and little Wales as the two-horned beast, the theory seemed equally acceptable in view of the difficulties since it put "all in the past." All this instability and catching "at a straw" has, I apprehend, grown out of the general repugnance to the inquiry whether these things may not be in the future. This idea, that "all is in the past," was firmly and very naturally believed by those who thought the Lord's coming immediately impending as in "43"; but seventeen years have since passed developing certain things not then in the past, as Spiritualism, which all agree has fulfilled certain prophecies otherwise applied at that time. Hence, as it was not correct to say at that time, "all is in the past," we should be more guarded about allowing such things to come upon us unawares, and should approach the future with our eyes open.

Some think it unsafe to regard these things as having their fulfillment in the future, as though it would be putting "far off the evil day." I am as anxious to know the nearness of Christ's coming as any one, but nothing will throw light upon this point but the truth, which I dare not satisfy myself must be found by putting into the past things which manifestly belong in the future. But we will now notice the prophecy of the two-horned beast, and see where it does belong. We will first consider the meaning of some of these terms as we are now in symbolic prophecy and determine what power is here alluded to as "the first beast." A beast, or more properly "wild beast," in prophecy symbolizes a kingdom. —Dan. 7: 17, 23, and Rev. 17th chap. This beast is said to have "two horns" which represents a union of two distinct regalities under one head, as was the case with Media and Persia.—Dan. 8: 3, 20. This first beast and his career are introduced into the 13th chap. carrying us down till we come to the two-horned beast. He is represented here as speaking great things and blasphemies. It is said that "he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name and his tabernacle and them that dwell in heaven. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them, and power was given him over all kindreds, tongues, and nations."

All Protestant interpreters agree that this "first beast" is that power which grew out of a union of the Catholic Church with the State in its past history as a persecuting power. Then "power was given him over all nations," insomuch that the Pope claimed the right to make and unmake kings at his pleasure, and frequently exercised it. At this time it "made war with the saints," also, when forty or fifty millions were put to death for their adherence to the truth. It continued its course also "for forty and two months," literally, 1260 years. And now having fulfilled these things and lost its power over the nations, and also its power to put the saints to death, it has gone into captivity according to the prediction, "he that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity, he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword."

Whether we regard his oppressive career of forty-two months which should terminate by his going into captivity, as closing in 1787, when the Pope lost all political influence in Europe; in 179–, when Gen. Berthier carried the Pope captive to France where he died in exile; in 1809, when the Pope was taken captive by Gen. Radet, under Bonaparte and carried to France in company with Cardinal Pacca; or in the present distressed condition of the Papacy, it does not affect the point under consideration, since we have only to show that she has gone into captivity, and that, since her oppressive persecution in the past. I think, however, that she was reduced and punished more during the French Revolution than at any other period. Goodrich, in his History of the Church, in speaking of the effects of this revolution says:—"The revolutionary torrent which was thus set in motion, destroyed law, government and religion in France, and laid waste the Roman Church, both there and in neighboring countries. Her priests were massacred. . . . From the Atlantic to the Adriatic, she presented but one appalling spectacle. She had shed the blood of saints and prophets, and God now gave her blood to drink."—p. 184. Says Montalambert, a Catholic, speaking of the Papacy at that time:—"All the world looked upon it as a corpse which it only remained to bury." It was to be in this helpless condition when the two-horned beast comes up, whose rise and work we will now consider.

This two-horned beast is said to "speak as a dragon," that is, "furious, fiery, fierce." He is said to exercise "all the power of the first beast before him and therefore "over all kindreds, tongues and nations." This two-horned beast's exercising all the power of the first beast, shows that it did not come up till the first beast had lost its power, as this power over all nations could not be held by two parties at the same time. And it is further evident that this two-horned beast comes up when the first beast had no power, from the fact that all the power used in causing the earth to worship the first beast is attributed to the two-horned beast. And lastly, it must be found in its humiliation when this beast comes up and causes the earth to worship it, for during the forty-two months it has the worship of all that dwell upon the earth, whose names are not written in the book of life.

This beast is said to do great wonders. He even makes fire come down from heaven on earth in the sight of men. "He deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast." That this deception will become general through this miraculous display of power is manifest from the passages,—"He causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship," etc., and "He deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do," etc.

It has been said that a beast cannot symbolize one man, merely, but always a kingdom and "whatever we may interpret this power to be, we may rest assured that it is a body politic, a government or kingdom, as much so as Babylon, or Grecia, or any kingdom that has or does exist." This language was used in an article designed to prove that Spiritualism neither has, nor will fulfill the prophecy of the two-horned beast, and urging that it is already fulfilled by some other power. But if a beast represents a kingdom always, and in this case in particular, then this two-horned beast cannot point to "one man, merely," having power to do "great wonders," but to a body of miracle-workers organized as a "kingdom, as much so as Babylon, Grecia, or any kingdom that has or does exist." Here would be a difficulty for the advocates of this idea to find such a kingdom in the past and doing the work attributed to the two-horned beast. I conclude, however, that though a beast in prophecy points generally to a kingdom, and in this case in particular, yet the miraculous power of the two-horned beast is not attributed so much to the mass composing the kingdom, as to one man at its head.

It is further said that "he deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast, saying unto them that dwell on the earth that they should make an image to the beast which had the wound by a sword and did live." He first deceives them and gains their confidence in his being directed from the invisible world, by his manifestations of supernatural power in causing fire to come down from heaven on earth in the sight of men, and doing other great wonders and miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast. When he has laid this foundation for the confidence of his admirers in his direction and mission from the invisible world, perhaps as the forerunner of the "Coming Man," who shall bring about the "good time coming," he cannot fail of success in "saying to them that dwell on the earth that they should make an image to the beast which had the wound by a sword and did live."

Now since a beast, or wild beast, represents a kingdom, and an image is a resemblance or likeness; therefore, an image to the first beast, power, or kingdom, must be a power or kingdom resembling that first in its peculiar features. But its peculiar features were a union of church and state, forbidding all worship without their authority; therefore, the image to the beast must be the same. And since he causes them that dwell on the earth to worship the first beast, and performs his miracles in the sight or presence of the beast, and finally causes an image to be made to the beast, it seems that he courts the favor of the first, or Papal beast, which becomes a supporter of the image to the beast.

That this image to the beast embraces a union of church and state, it is further evident from its demanding worship of all and enforcing these demands by putting to death, so far as may be, which requires the arm of state, all who refuse to worship as they direct. It not only provides that as many as will not worship the image of the beast, shall be killed, but also requires of all who do worship that they shall receive a mark in their right hand or in their foreheads, in order, probably, that those who do not worship may be the more readily detected. And determined by all means to compel those who cannot be persuaded, they attempt to starve to terms those who would still worship God according to their own consciences, providing that "none shall buy nor sell save those who have the mark of the beast." Here, then, in this two-horned beast we have:—

1. A kingdom between the downfall of the Papacy which has happened within the past eighty years and the coming of Christ in the future, whose head displays a wonderful power in working miracles.

2. He persuades the world through the influence of his miracles in giving apparent evidence of divine authority to his mission to worship or respect the Papacy again.

3. He obtains the co-operation of the Papacy whose united efforts are now put forth for the subjection of the world generally unto their religion, when those who will not accept are put to death as rebels to the ruling powers.

4. Their authority in making their demands on all to submit to their worship, is generally admitted by the world in view of their support from the invisible world; having the power to make fire come down on earth in the sight of men, and do other great wonders at pleasure in which they are manifestly assisted from the invisible powers.

5. Those who accept of their worship are required to bear a distinguishing mark in their right hand or forehead.

6. None shall be suffered to buy nor sell save those who have this mark. But none of these things have as yet taken place. This kingdom does not yet exist, neither as a body of miracle-workers nor as having such miraculous power in its head; nor has the Papacy been saved from its humiliation and obtained the respect of the world again; much less do we see the world respecting the Papacy through the miraculous feats attributed to the two-horned beast; nor do we see the union of church and state embracing as its chief elements the Papacy and this miracle-working power, putting to death those who refuse to worship it, and providing, that all who worship shall bear a mark of loyalty in their right hand or forehead, while none others are suffered to buy or sell. If the two-horned beast is developed, the humiliation of the Papacy has ceased, the second union of church and state is manifest in its persecuting character, and all the above items may be recognised as fulfilled or in progress. But our best efforts to put these things in the past can prove no more than that they have been done in a corner.

For the Crisis.

What we Need.

Down here in the last days, where it is impossible to live without the Spirit's influence, we all need to walk in the unity of the Spirit, to hold close communion with God. We need men of prayer, holy, zealous and true. People have got such narrow ideas of zeal that saints have forgotten to shout and sing, and "be joyful in the Lord." We want ministers who are willing to be anything, to be called everything, to endure all things, to suffer, to weep, to be obliged to pray "give us this day our daily bread;"—we want ministers who are humble, meek, Christ-like, anxious to pull sinners as brands from the burning, who will work without gloves, to glorify God and not honor self. We want shepherds who care for the flock more than for the fleece. We want those who are small enough to feed the lambs. The old sheep may have D.D.'s and LL.D.'s to feed them, but the little ones want to be fed by some child of God. We want the TRUTH preached,—not a part of it, but all truth. We want it preached "in season" especially. We not only ask for explanations of man, Daniel's visions, John's sights and wonders, with interpretations thereof; but we want the love of Christ revealed. We want that applied to the head,—this to the heart. Some think it is sufficient to believe the prophets,—to rightly understand all about the "seven heads and ten horns," etc. etc. But even Satan believes and trembles, which is more than some men do. I admit that a right faith tends to regulate the whole life; but still there are many who can give you link after link of the plan of salvation, who never had any part in it. These are converted to the truth, but not to the Lord.

Above all good things we want peace, not only with God, but with one another. We want the whole world of tongues bridled. We want less backbiting, slandering, reproaching, and far more praying. O we do want more honesty, more love, that thinketh no evil. We want more union. We want less looking at bonnets, and more self-examination. Then we want plainer bonnets, so that we shall not notice them so readily. And if we want the presence of God in our meetings, we want humility. We want to be low enough to kneel, to bow down before Jehovah, considering ourselves but dust in the presence of a great and eternal God.

Brethren, shall our wants be supplied? Shall we leave all the burden on a few, who have to carry our cross and theirs too,—and then because they get better pay than we do, get blessed happy, and shout and roar over it, shall we lazy drones get in a line and call them fanatics? Let us each bear his own burden, get his own blessing, wear his own crown. O let us be awake. Time flies fast. What we do must be done soon. Souls are perishing, the church is sleeping, the Lord is coming, and we ought to be working. I'm going to work,—who'll go with me? Come, scores of you.

Selections.

What of Christ?

It was a few years ago that a church and congregation which had long been dead and barren, began to show signs of the reviving influences of the Holy Spirit. With the deepest interest the pastor watched the increasing solemnity and seriousness manifested by all classes. A spirit of prayer was poured out on God's children, and the impenitent were deeply impressed with a sense of the importance of spiritual and eternal things. The work was deep and powerful.

In the congregation was a young man who had never had any religious instruction or christian influence. His father, some years before, on finding one of his daughters anxious in regard to her eternal interests, tried, by making parties of pleasure on the Sabbath, and drawing her gay companions around her, to divert her mind, stifle conscience, and prevent her stealing away to church. But that father had died, the children had been induced to attend public worship on the Sabbath, and now all of them were interested in their eternal salvation.

The pastor saw the struggles of this young man; and one evening, at the close of the services, sought an interview with him. In the kindest manner he showed him his situation as a transgressor of God's holy law, the condemnation he was under, and his utter helplessness to save himself or work out his own righteousness. He then asked him what he was going to do, or how escape eternal death, and left him to his own reflections.

The next day, with the greatest despondency and anguish depicted on his countenance, he came to his pastor, asking, "What must I do to be saved?" He could find no way of escape. His pastor asked him if he had thought of Christ. He replied, "No; but WHAT OF CHRIST?" His pastor then opened up to him the glorious plan of salvation; showed him how Christ, moved with compassion for our misery and ruin, suffered for us, offering up his life a sacrifice to divine justice, and now lives to intercede for us; how God could be just, and the justifier of him who believeth; how he is waiting to welcome and adopt us into his family, washing out our sins in the blood of Jesus, and clothing us in his righteousness; and how he sends his Spirit to strive with us and draw us to himself and sanctifies us.

It was a new and wonderful revelation to him; and with all the love and confidence and trust of a little child he welcomed it, rejoiced in it, accepted this precious Savior as his own, and consecrated himself to his service.

Some years have since passed, and he remains steadfast, surrounding his children with christian influences, and training them up in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord."—Amer. Messenger.

Divine Providence.

God governs in the affairs of men, though we do not see him. God watches the flow of daily life. He stands in the market; he walks in the street; he beholds the ways of business, the paths of temptation, the lanes of pleasure, the sinks of evil,—in all places where men are tasked and tried, and made temptable, there stands God looking, taking account; and not only beholding, but encouraging, cheering, and saying, if men would but hear his voice, "It is always safe to be right; there is always reward in virtue; there is always solid foundation in righteousness." Everywhere the voice of God to men is, "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness"— that is, seek, as the best and highest end of desire, my kingdom and my righteousness—and it shall take nothing from, but shall add all things to you.—Beecher.

☞ Keep good company or none.

True Religion.

A true religion, then, never is in the way of anything which a man ought to desire. It undertakes to give a man more, in every way, than in his ignorance he could have had. It teaches him restraint in one place, only to enable him to reach forth to liberty in another. It undertakes to give a man the whole of himself. When a man would rob himself by taking undue liberties with one part, leaving all the other parts unoccupied, religion teaches him a higher and a better use of all his powers. It undertakes to give a man the most that can be harmoniously educed from every faculty of his nature, and therefore refuses to let him overtax some, and underuse other parts of his being. Its very end is to give men salvation in the life to come, by making them better men in the life that now is. It seeks to make a man happier; it seeks to give him liberty, and power, and superior quality, in every faculty of his nature. When, therefore, men enter upon a christian life in this large and generous method, God stands and declares that such a course, while it secures, ultimately, the high ends of eternal salvation, shall also secure secular good. "Godliness is profitable unto all things having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." Religion shall bless a man both in this life and in the life that is hereafter.—Beecher.

Waking Thoughts.

With what a glory wakes this Sabbath morn!
What sudden splendors gild the Eastern skies!
How swiftly from the shrouded valleys borne,
The mists dispel and vanish from our eyes!

The lichened rocks and leafless groves awake,
And e'en these winter hills, so brown and bare,
Back from their barren brows the shadows shake,
And this new sheen of golden promise wear.

So, when the Eternal Sabbath morn shall bring
Its full release from all of Earth's control,
Those purer rays which gild each seraph's wing,
With light and warmth shall bathe each ransomed soul.

No sterile waste is there, no night of sin;
No clouds may gather, no rude winds may blow;
There God shall welcome each new comer in
To pastures green, where living waters flow.

Oh when, sweet Sabbath, shall thy morning break,
Down the far summits of heaven's hills of gold?
When, when shall we from life's poor dream awake,
And God's Eternal Heritage behold?

Bits of Gold.

I never find, Blessed be the rich, or blessed be the noble; but, Blessed be the meek, blessed be the poor, blessed be the mourners. And yet, O God, most carry themselves as if they not only not desired, but even feared to be blessed.—George Herbert, died 1632.

Full oft time I read, that no man trust in his own perfection, be he stronger than Sampson, or holier than David, or wiser than Solomon.—Chaucer, died 1400.

A christian should look upon himself as sacred and devoted. For that which involves but an ordinary degree of criminality in others, in him partakes of the nature of sacrilege; what is a breach of trust in others, is, in him, the profanation of a temple.—Robert Hall.

Prayer touches the only spring that can insure success. By speaking we move man; but by prayer, we move God.—Ibid.

It is the Cross.

It is the cross that tells us most of the evil of sin; for it shows us the Son of God punished for our sin.

It is the cross that tells us of the free grace of God to sinners; for it shows us that rather than let us die God gave his Son to die for us.

It is the cross that tells us the sin that is in man's heart, and how man hates God; there we see man killing the Son of God.

It is the cross that tells us the love of Jesus; for it shows Jesus dying for those that hated and killed him.

BREVITY.—A writer in the Christian Secretary thinks that much might be gained if speakers in prayer and conference meetings would "observe the miller's creed—always shut the gate when the grist is out."

Hygiene.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Throat Ail.

The first symptoms of throat-ail, or Chronic Laryngitis, or Clergymen's Sore Throat, are usually a frequent hemming and hacking, in order to clear the voice or throat; this is slight and seldom at first, and may not be noticed for weeks; but then, it is so decided, that it forces itself upon the attention, either by its frequency, or by the force required to clear the throat sufficiently to speak with distinctness. After a while, it requires such an effort to enunciate plainly, that the patient for the first time becomes aware of a certain feeling of tiredness about the throat or neck; most generally it is a dull hurting; or he finds there is a kind of lumpish feeling in the throat, and he attempts to swallow it away, and it does seem to go down, but it does not stay down, and he swallows again, and soon he finds himself swallowing all the time; occasionally there is a different cause for swallowing, the throat appears to be dry, and swallowing for a time seems to moisten it; finally the swallowing is almost incessant, especially if the mind is directed to it. For a time, nothing is brought away; gradually a little pearly or whitish or cottony-like phlegm is brought up, and the patient becomes hoarse. In the progress of things this phlegm becomes dryish, and so tough, that it clings to the inside of the throat, and can only be dislodged by a decided effort at clearing, with a dipping forward of the head. The voice next becomes husky; at last a positive cough is necessary to dislodge the phlegm, and consumption soon follows.

The symptoms detailed are present in the history of every case I have known. Accompanying these, there are occasional additional symptoms. A kind of pain, choking or hurting; some complain of a burning towards the top of the breast bone, or a hurting feeling, [illegible] hollow at the bottom of the neck; or up and down [illegible] at the pit of the stomach. These burning sensations are not felt continuously in any case, but at certain times during the day.

CAUSES OF THROAT-AIL.

I cannot here state them all, nor at length, only the principal ones, and those succinctly.

I have now these many years confined my attention rigidly and exclusively to throat and lung diseases. I think I was the first physician in the United States to do so, as rigidly. I know not that there is any one besides myself in this country, who dismisses every case as invariably, in which the air passages are not involved. I make this statement for the purpose of enabling the reader to place the deserved estimate at the assertion I am going to make, to wit:

Three cases out of every four coming to me for throat-ail, have it as the result of improper eating and drinking.

A proper use of the voice strengthens the throat, and gives it a capability of resisting disease, just as a judicious use of any other muscles of the body increase their strength and health. But improper use, as just stated, by weakening, renders them more susceptible of disease of any kind, and specially of the stomach, in consequence of the nervous connection before described.

AN INSTRUCTIVE WARNING TO CLERGYMEN.

In illustration of the principles stated, I will record here a fact.

A very eminent D. D. within a year has given up the charge of his congregation from a complaint in the throat: his parishioners, in parting with him, presented him with a farm, and now he is lecturing over the country, and nothing is heard about his throat complaint, except when he leaves his wife at home; when that is the case, he is laid up instanter. As long as she is at his side to watch over what he eats as to quality and amount, he keeps well; when he transgresses, the food sours on the stomach, the throat burns, gets clogged up, he is hoarse and useless.

* * * * * * *

Throat-ail then being generally located in the stomach—what is the use of gargling the throat with acids and metallic preparations, which destroy the teeth? and what is the use of swabbing out the throat with nitrate of silver, when the source of the disease is elsewhere. It does I know sometimes give relief, but it is not permanent, it cannot be, for it is merely covering a black spot on the wall with whitewash; the spot is not seen, but it is there still; but unlike the black spot, which is statu quo, the disease, though covered, is burrowing and spreading still. If again, the disease is really in the stomach, it is a useless waste of time, it is unphilosophical, to tell a clergyman who has throat-ail, that he must abandon preaching; because the voice muscles must be treated like any other muscle of the body which is debilitated, their energies must be invited back by judicious forms of exercise, just as in recovering from a fever, we increase our strength by exercising carefully and gradually, and safely increasing that exercise. —Dr. Hall.

How to preserve the Teeth.

The mouth is a very warm place—98 degrees Fahrenheit. In this northern climate we never have a temperature so high, in the shade. Even at ninety beef will begin to decompose in twenty-four hours. The particles of beef and other food which are left betwee the teeth at dinner, begin to putrefy before dinner the next day. If you then pick the teeth, the odor of the breath testifies to decomposition.

With this management we ought not to be surprised that the gums and teeth should become the subjects of disease.

What is to be done?

1st. Use the tooth-pick (goose quill) after each meal. Follow with a mouthful or two of water, to remove the particles the tooth-pick may have left behind.

2d. Every morning, on rising, use the brush and castile soap.

With these simple things thoroughly done, you will preserve the teeth to old age.—Dr. Lewis's Boston Journal of Physical Culture.

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for three months for 50 cents, which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of brethren, they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the name of other subscribers, should send as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Look to Jesus.

Weary one, 'neath the clouds of darkness
That o'erhang this vale of wo—
In the hour of bitter anguish,
To the dear Redeemer go!
He has crossed the raging billow,
He has marked the way with blood,
He will succor all that follow
In the path He nobly trod.

Satan, with his mighty forces,
Cannot conquer where He reigns:
Fear not, though thine own resources
Fail, He'll help thee stem the main;
He will cherish and support thee,
Though the billows round thee foam;
O'er life's ocean He will guide thee
Safe to thine eternal home.

A Sunday Morning's Talk,

AT NEWMARKET HALL, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

BY H. L. HASTINGS.*

"And whatsoever ye do, in word or in deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him."—COL. 3: 17.

Do it "in the name of Jesus," the Master, the Lord. Do it "giving thanks to God and the Father through Him." There is a great deal in serving God besides what people do when they go to meeting, though the fact seems to be very imperfectly understood. There are some, indeed, who think their work is pretty much done when they make a "profession of religion," as it is termed, and "join the church," and then go on paying their pew rent, giving something to "support the gospel" when they are dunned sufficiently for it, putting a cent or two into the contribution box, going to meeting pretty regularly, keeping out of jail, and not getting drunk, or doing anything that would disgrace them particularly, and so by-and-by dying "resigned," (when the Doctor tells them they can't get well,) and going to glory at last. Such people regard their religious exercises as pertaining mainly to Sunday, and the greater part of their work is done by the preacher, they paying him for it.

Now Jesus Christ taught no such kind of religion as this. And in the Bible we find no trace of it. In the New Testament there is nothing which indicates that the serving of God was the special work of a class of christian men set apart for that purpose. There are special duties pertaining to the church of God, which may for a time be in the hands of certain persons to attend to. But the man who gives himself "to prayer, and the ministry of the Word," is no more required to be a good man, than every other man who has named the name of Christ. He is no more required to obey God, to trust in God, to serve God, to honor God, than any other one. He has his duty, namely, to do all he can; everybody else has the same duty. The difference between the work of him to whom the Master gave the one talent, and him to whom he gave five, is not a difference in the kind of business, so much as in the amount of business. The one with the five talents goes into the "wholesale business," and the other with his one talent, (if he is not too proud or too lazy,) goes into the "retail business." One does what he can with the much, the other does what he can with the little. And so each one has his appointed work. The man who can do much, is bound to do all he can; the man who can do but a little, is bound to do that little, small though it may seem to him to be. For in all departments of life there is this division of labor, according to the capacity. On board a ship there is perhaps only one man who understands navigation; only two who can guide the course of the vessel. Now the cabin boy has his work to do, even if he is not able to command the vessel. And so every man "before the mast" has his work to do, and none of them have the privilege of saying, "Because I am not the Captain I will do nothing." So Jesus Christ speaks of his people as one body; and in a healthy body, a living body, there is not a limb, nor a joint, nor a tendon, nor an organ of any kind, nor a blood-vessel, nor an artery, nor a tissue, nor a bone; not a particle in the whole but what has its use, and is brought into use at some time or other. The larger and the smaller portions, each have their work, and whenever one portion of the body is inactive and dormant, there is, as a result, ill-health running through the whole body; and it works its way till at length through the dormancy of one single portion the whole becomes diseased. Through some ill-kept entrance the very citadel of life is stormed and the man dies. So the church of Christ as a body has its work to do, not for one day, not for two days; not for once in a lifetime, but for all the lifetime. And each member of the body has its work, according to its ability.

* Reported by Mr. E. P. Woodward.

A man who went away on his journey, and left his money with his servants, distributed to every one according to his ability. A man stands up sometimes and says, "If I only had talents like such an one, I would do this or that." Now the Lord knew how much it was safe to trust a man with when he gave it to him. He gave him all it was safe. And the man who, when he has one talent, will not improve it because he has not more, would not do any more if he had ten. The principle is, "He that is unfaithful in the least, is unfaithful also in much." The man who will not say one word for Christ because he can't say ten, if he could say ten would not say one of them because he could not say an hundred. Because the principle on which he holds himself is essentially wrong, which is, that he can do as he pleases about it, instead of doing as Christ requires of him. Now Paul, in the words that I have read, lays out the principles of the gospel of Christ just as long and as broad as a man's whole life. He stretches them till they reach over, not one day, or two days, but every day; he makes them stretch from the first day of January to the last day of December. He spreads them so that they cover a man's action in his house, around his table, by his fireside, at his work, in his shop, in the street, in the prayer-meeting, in the church, in planning business, in performing and executing plans, in everything, in word or in work, which a man purposes, promises, or performs; everything comes under this requirement.

The apostle Peter gives us the same kind of doctrine in one of his epistles. And so does the apostle Paul in another epistle instruct us in the same way. Peter says, "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another as good stewards of the manifold grace of God." The favor of God is manifold, diverse; and in one way or another God has made each of us stewards of his grace. "If any man speak let him speak as the oracles of God." That is one way. "If any man minister,"—(to minister is not to be a minister, according to the modern technical sense of the term, but to minister to the necessities of those that have need to serve,)—"If any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth, that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ." Then the apostle Paul in his writing speaks on this wise, "And whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." I presume there are many persons who do not do that. I need not say that there are many people who do not make calculation to do it, who do not undertake to do it, who do not purpose to do it, who do not want to do it. If you talk to them about eating and drinking, that is no part of their religion. The god that they worship at their table is not the God of heaven; it is "their belly," the same which the Philippians used to worship. Their god in their business is not the God of heaven; it is old Mammon, that the Syrians worshiped in ages past. The god that they worship when they get out among men, is not God Almighty, but the god of praise and honor, such as the world bestows upon men. On Sunday, in meeting, they worship God; in the week time, they worship mammon; at the table, their belly; and so their time becomes divided, and to them there are Lords many, and gods many, and rulers many, that pull, and haul, and rule them in every direction.

The apostle Paul says, "We judge that if one died for all, then were all dead." All mankind were gone, were lost, and He died for all, that henceforth "we should not live unto ourselves, but to Him that died and rose again." And so he says we are to yield ourselves unto Him "as those that are alive from the dead." We are to present our bodies "living sacrifices, holy, acceptable in His sight." The line of argument is this, "If you give life to any being, you have a right to control that being." If you could go and raise a man from the dead, it would be no more than reasonable that when you had done it, he should devote his life to you so far as you require. Christ gave his life that he might give us life, and now our lives are not our own. "Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your bodies." "Whatsoever ye do, whether in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." To do anything in the name of the Lord Jesus, is to do it by the authority of the Lord Jesus, in honor of the Lord Jesus. When a thing is done in the name of the commonwealth, it is done by the authority, and in accordance with the will, of the executive of that commonwealth. So when a thing is done in the name of the Lord, it is done according to the will of the Lord, done by the commandment of the Lord, by the authority of the Lord; and as such it has a binding force, and is the will of God, as much as though it were performed by an angel. The Lord sends us to do his work in the world. We are not to do it for ourselves, not in our own name, not because we are something or somebody, but because Christ requires it. When we bring our hearts to consider this, when we are touched by thoughts of God's grace, when we learn how much Christ gave for us, and how full and perfect, and unalienable is his title to us, then we should learn to devote ourselves to him. And so in word or in work, we should do all things in his name.

No man in the name of Jesus Christ can do a thing which is positively opposed to any command of Christ. That is plain. Consequently no man can do any sin, or anything which lies in the direction of sin, which has the "appearance of evil" justly attaching itself to it, in the name of Christ, for Christ forbids it. Now it cannot be said that we can do a thing in the name of this commonwealth, which this commonwealth expressly forbids. Of course not. We do things in the name of the commonwealth which the commonwealth requires. No man can do anything in the name of Christ, the natural tendency of which is to dishonor Christ, to disgrace him in the eyes of the world, and to cause his name to be blasphemed among the people. No man can do anything in the name of Christ which has for its natural tendency doing wrong to others,—injuring them in any way, whether spiritually, mentally, or physically; for Christ went about doing good, and he commands us to be followers of him in these things; and what we do in the name of Christ must be done as he did his work, for the good of mankind. We cannot do that in the name of Christ which has for its object our own personal aggrandizement merely. For instance, no man in the name of Christ can set himself to work deliberately and determinedly to get rich. No man can do that in the name of Christ, for he positively declares that riches are dangerous, that "it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven." What man who believes that—who credits Christ's words, can "in the name of Christ" go to seek those things of which the apostle says, "while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows"? He cannot serve mammon, and thus seek unrighteous wealth in the name of Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ does not give any such orders.

No man can in the name of Christ set out to gain and enjoy a life of luxury, ease, and selfish repose. This is the purpose of many people who set out to get rich. They want to be wealthy so that they can be at ease. They mean to work ten or twenty years, with all their might, (twice as hard as they ought to,) and then at the end of that time they intend to retire from business and live "easy"; and living easy, signifies living in a great house, having a fine carriage, a great deal to eat and drink, and finally dying of the apoplexy! That is the amount of it; the sum and substance of men's purposes in getting rich,—to be at ease. This is entirely contrary to the spirit of Christ. He never set a man to such greedy grasping,—running himself into every snare of the devil to get wealth, that he may retire one of these days, and like some great serpent, which has swallowed its tiger, lie down and sleep away the rest of his mortal existence. The work of Christ is to "occupy till he comes"; to be "not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord"; to be doing good; to labor, working with the hands; to have to give to him that hath need; and it is not in accordance with his will for a man to build a great dam, and make a kind of fish-pond, into which he can put and hoard all he gathers in his time. It is the requirement of Christ that he work steadily, with a view to glorify him, remembering that it is more blessed to give than it is to receive. When a man has that principle in his mind, when he has settled it, when he believes it, when he remembers the words of the Lord Jesus, as the apostle gives them, that "it is more blessed to give than to receive," it will be very hard work to get such a man rich. Sometimes the Lord tries to get such a man rich. I have heard of such a case, where it seemed as if the Lord was working very hard to make him rich, but it was only to fill the pond, while he kept the gates all open and the current running "full head" all the time. Sometimes when God finds a faithful man, he pours wealth into his hands so that he can pour it out again. I have read of some men who settled it before God that they never would be rich, anyway; and as God poured in wealth upon them, they let it slide. Now a man can do that in the name of Jesus Christ. But a man that goes to work, digs a den for his riches, a place to pack his plunder, and then goes out ravaging and devouring in every direction to get it, taking a widow's house here, an orphan's crust of bread there, God will never acknowledge such a man as a servant of his, working in his name.

Working in the name of Jesus Christ must be a kind of work in which a man would never be ashamed to have Jesus find him. Of course, if you send a man to work for you, that man works in your name. You take a job, you tell him what to do, and you have the honor of doing it. You employed him, and he does it. If you find him doing what you did not tell him to do, he is ashamed to be seen when you come in view, and is disposed to get out of your sight if possible. You can make this illustration forcible by considering how men would act if they really supposed that the Lord was to appear to-morrow. What do you suppose they would be doing? I think it would make such an overturning in the business of Providence, that if the Lord Jesus Christ did not come, there would be a perfect panic by day after to-morrow. If everybody in the city could be made to believe that he was coming, they would be in a great hurry to attend to their journals, right up their balances, look after their rent-rolls, and everything of that kind. I tell you the panic of '57 would not be a circumstance compared with the complete upturning you would have in such a case. They would all want to be changing their affairs somewhat. One man and another would be selling out, and find no one to buy. A great many kinds of profitable business would be given up in a minute. There would be a great many kinds of uncertain work which would go by the board in a minute. Let them but just believe that Jesus Christ was coming, and it would work a complete revolution. Now the humble, faithful christian, doing his duty, minding his own business, would not need to alter his affairs at all—not at all. We have seen how this has worked in days gone by. Some people have made up their minds that the Lord Jesus Christ was coming to attend to their business. It made a wonderful change in their affairs. It upset their whole arrangements frequently. Many a man who thought he was doing well, and who supposed that he was very comfortably situated, found his treasures on the wrong side of the river. A great many men have done like this:—They had gold that burned their fingers, and their pockets, and would burn their souls, and they knew it, and so they wanted to hustle it out of the way when He came, as thieves fling stolen goods away when the sheriff is after them; and so when the alarm was over, the gold began to chink in the box again. Now you see that is not a kind of work to be done in the name of Jesus. Not at all.

Jesus wants his men to work, whether they are mending nets, as were the sons of Zebedee, or making tents like Paul, or working round at odd jobs, as Barnabas used to, so that when he looks on their work they will not be in confusion. Let a mother who has been away from home two or three weeks, and has half a dozen grown up children, return suddenly, and you see this one tucking away this thing, another hiding that, and you know there is something out of order. And she wants to know what is the matter, and finds there is some craft or deviltry going on. So when the Lord Jesus Christ comes to this world and finds men with a great deal in their hands that they want to drop, it is a sure sign that they are not doing just what he set them at. But if a man is doing what the Lord would have him do, if he is accomplishing the Master's purposes, doing "all in the name of Jesus," whether in word or in work; why, he wants to see his Lord. He says, "I am only sorry I have not done more. I have done the best I could. I am an unprofitable servant." So he gives up his charge, and the Lord says to him, "Come, thou blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you."

We need to banish forever from our minds this idea of shutting up religion in one seventh part of a man's time—this idea that a man has a right to serve himself six days if he will serve God the other day—this idea that christian duty is performed by singing psalms, making prayers, going to meeting, and all that sort of thing. That is not the real work after all. This is only the "drill room" where you come to be trained, (and I am doing it now as well as I can,) and you are here to go through your various evolutions; you are to learn to confess Christ before men, and then go out and do it every day in the week. Here you learn the duties. Then you are to practice them all the time. You come here as boys go to school to study navigation. They study and learn about all there is in the books. Well, that does not make sailors of them. They may have learned a great deal about it, but you next send them to sea to learn it. Let them be rocked on the cradle of the deep, and sung to by the hurricanes, till they learn something about the real work there is to do. A man does not learn to run up the rigging like a squirrel when he is studying navigation in school. He has got to learn by experience, where it is life or death to him, where he will drown if he don't learn, where there is no other way for him but to learn, and then he will learn to some purpose. You can no more learn to do the whole of the christian's work here, than you can learn to swim on the floor by spreading your arms and imitating the movements of a frog. You must learn in the water, pulling for life. When you have learned in that way, you are ready to swim when you want to. Planks don't answer the purpose. You have got to strike out alone, and if your head does get under, fetch it up, and so keep on till you have accomplished something. I could not learn to swim with my head above water, and so I learned to swim under water, and brought my head up afterwards. A good many men learn christian duty in that way. But let them take time and they will learn to do what God tells them to do, slowly but surely.

Those things that are done in the name of Jesus Christ, are to be done with constant reference to him. Though he has gone away and left general directions for his people, yet he gives special directions when they need them. He has left his Spirit to show unto us the things of God. As says the apostle, "Ye have an unction from the Holy One." Now we are to prize this instruction. We are to remember that "as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." And we are to seek continually that God may guide us by his counsel, and afterward receive us to glory. A great many times just what the Lord would have us do, may seem to us to be of little importance. It may seem to you a small matter whether you turn this way, that way, or the other. The other day a person was killed in this city, and if she had turned another corner, she would have lived. So a thousand times the destiny of a man depends on the turning of a corner, or the taking of a step. And there is no place, no time, for a man to be careless in this world.

Napoleon once went into a school and said to them, "Remember, boys, that every hour in your life is a chance for misfortune, mistake and failure." That may well be remembered by the christian. Every hour in your life is a chance for something to go wrong that will ruin life. You go on a voyage to sea. There is hardly an hour, perhaps no hour in the whole voyage, where there is not a chance for something to occur that will render the whole a failure. There is a chance everywhere and at all times for a man's making shipwreck or meeting loss. So in serving God. Numerous wily foes surround us, and we are to look up to Him who is mightier than they all, place our trust in the friendship of Christ, in the grace of God, in the love and mercy of the Most High, and so go on to perfection.

Whether ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, whether in word or in work, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Take this message—take it for to-day and for to-morrow. Square your lives by it. And so when you work, do your business, make your plans, earn your money, do your trading for the Lord; and when self clamors for this or that, say, "I am the servant of the Lord." When selfishness would rise up and control your will, say, "I am a servant of the Lord." When father and mother, wife and children seek to turn you from the path of duty, just let the answer be, "I am bought with a great price; I belong to Jesus Christ, and I must listen to him." If we do this, our business will be holy. Our daily toil will be as acceptable to God as singing psalms, or offering prayers. Our work shall be sanctified in the eyes of the Most High. Every thing we do shall reflect the image of Christ, and honor his name. We shall find that the gospel can be made of practical value; and in no way so effectually to a man shivering with cold, as with a blanket, a barrel of coal, or a load of wood. We shall find that the gospel comes to hungry folks in the shape of loaves of bread, to the naked in the shape of raiment. And when we have done what God has appointed in this way, then we can bring to them the unsearchable riches of Christ. When we have given the cup of cold water to the thirsty, we can tell them of the water of which if a man drink, he shall never thirst. When we have given bread to the hungry, we can tell them of the bread which cometh down from heaven. When we have gone and ministered unto the sick and distressed, we can tell them of the Son of man who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many. They can do these things, and let it be understood that they are done for Christ's sake, in the name of Christ, for the glory and honor of Him who bought us with his blood.

Let us think of these things. Let us gird ourselves for a whole-souled life-work in the cause of God. Not for a spasm; not for a mere start or fit of excitement; but for "a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all alone," every one of us; for this pulling "all together" does not work at all. You cannot get half of them to do it. Then work with your own eye on the work, and God's eye on you, and you will do something, and get others to do something too. I pray God to make us diligent, and so at last say to us, "Well done." Amen.

For the Crisis.

Eld. W. Pratt's Reply

To a lecture of Mr. Leo Miller, on "Comparative view of Ancient and Modern Spiritualism," in the Temple at Portsmouth, N. H., Sunday evening, March 3d, 1861. Reported by Mr. James Mitchell.

No. 2.

Perhaps I ought to notice some questions and answers. Question by one of the congregation:—"How can you tell good spirits from bad?" Answer. "The same as you tell good and bad men in this life." According to their own statistics you cannot credit more than 20 per cent of their communications. Observe, they test the character of spirits the same as we do men here in this life. There are hypocrites here, and it appears there are hypocrites among their spirits; and it is not impossible that the Spiritualists have been deceived by these hypocritical spirits ever since they have had any thing to do with them. Bad spirits, they tell us, cannot transform themselves into an angel of light. Paul, the apostle, thought differently; and if we can judge from communication, and the acts of modern spirits, we are compelled to favor the apostle's decision, saying nothing of his inspiration.

Another remark;—"I read the Bible as I do history, sifting the wheat from the chaff." This shows how much faith he has in the Bible. All that is in harmony with his idea of things, I suppose he receives. This is a fair specimen of the Spiritualists' Bible faith. He rejected the Bible account of the sun and moon standing still, also the record concerning Jonah. I wish to give Professor Pick's criticism on the first mentioned text: "There are two different words used in the Hebrew for the word sun in the English version; viz., kaammoh, the sun; shemesh, the light of the sun; also, for the one word moon; viz., levonoh, the moon; yoraiakh, the light of the moon. . . . . Thus, when Joshua said (12: 12.) 'Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon, and thou moon, in the valley of Ajalon,' the words in the original are shemesh and yoraiakh; but in Isa. 24: 23, they are different. Then the moon (levonoh) shall be confounded and the sun (kaammoh) ashamed." This shows us the literal rendering and removes all difficulty; "light of the sun remain"; so with the moon; which might easily be accounted for on natural principles.

In relation to Jonah he does not understand that Jonah was swallowed by a whale; but the ship in which they were sailing was probably "named whale," and Jonah was cast down into the hole in the fore part of the ship." Well, this is rather a novel idea and caused our Savior to make a sad mistake, if true, for he says: "As Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." He should have said "Three days and nights in the hole of the ship as Jonah was." If our friend's view is correct, the ship must have run ashore and burst open her bow, and thrown Jonah out on the beach or dry land.

I have given you a sketch of the lecture, and now you can understand what I am to answer this evening. First, I remark, this lecture is based on three assumptions:

I. The spirits of the dead are the only angels in existence.

II. The spirits of men are the men proper, and when the body dies they (the spirits) can and do commune with men on earth.

III. The prophets, apostles, and Jesus Christ, their dreams, visions, prophecies, spirit that moved them, miracles wrought, were all done by the agency of dead men's spirits, or spirits of the dead. We will notice these assumptions in their order, and,

I. "The spirits of the dead are the only angels in existence." If angels are the spirits of the dead, they (the angels) in every instance studiously avoided letting it be known. The objector may refer to Rev. 19: 10; and 22: 9, and the mount of transfiguration, to disprove this position. We will notice these objections in the onset. There is no mystery in this text (in Rev.), even if the angel that visited John was one of the prophets. There is no necessity of inferring that it was the spirit of one of the dead prophets (for it must be an inference, as there is not a word in the text about the spirit of the prophets), for Elijah and Enoch were translated, and could come as tangible beings and prophets that were changed to immortality and translated, that they should not see death. Hence, either of them might have visited John. This, however, I do not conceive to be the meaning of the text. "I am thy servant, John, as I was to the prophets"; or, "I serve you, John, as I served the prophets." Critics tell us this is the true idea. Mr. Barnes favors it.

In relation to Moses and Elias on the mount of transfiguration, I will state briefly, that Elijah was translated. Hence, if he was there, he was there bodily. There was a dispute about the body of Moses, Jude tells us; hence, it is not impossible that dispute was in consequence of the Lord's resurrecting Moses; for it appears that Moses was just as really there as Elijah. This, however, is said to be a vision. If so, then we have a miniature of the kingdom of God which is yet future. This seems to be the true idea from the context, and the apostle Peter's comment on this text. I will briefly state some features of this miniature. First. Our Lord who was there transfigured represents the king. Second. Moses and Elias represent the subjects: Moses represents those in the graves that will be resurrected to life eternal, and Elijah those saints living on the earth when the Lord comes, who will be changed and translated like Elijah, without tasting death's bitter cup. The glory that surrounded and overshadowed, was a grand representation of the glory that will fill the earth when the kingdom of God comes. This I conceive to be the right view of the text and gives a harmony with all other Scripture.

We are now prepared to go on with our subject. The position taken in relation to the "angels being the spirits of the dead, who once lived on the earth," places the angels in a sad and unenviable position. This position makes the angels of God hypocrites. Now for proof. In all their visits to earth they studiously avoided informing us of their true relation. They never told where they lived on the earth. They never told any one that they ever lived on the earth at all. They never have told us they died or were ever clothed with mortality. They have never given us any intimation what their business was on earth or how they were used. They have never informed us they were the spirits of any hero or prophet that had died; hence, we must conclude if they were the spirits of the departed they intended to deceive the holy prophets and apostles, and did deceive them; and can we call them anything less than hypocrites? The angels of the Bible differ in all these particulars from the so-called modern spirits. I have been reading communications from these latter angels from the Banner of Light for the last six months, and (1) they pretend to tell you where they lived on the earth. (2) They were really inhabitants of this earth; and (3) they died with such a disease. (4) How bad they were treated by some individual and what they did for a livelihood; and, (5) they are the spirits of some hero, warrior, prophet or friend. Now every one can see these modern spirits hold no relation to angels; if they do, then there is no avoiding the conclusion that the angels spoken of in the Bible are base hypocrites.

Look to Jesus.

Weary one, 'neath the clouds of darkness
That o'erhang this vale of wo—
In the hour of bitter anguish,
To the dear Redeemer go!
He has crossed the raging billow,
He has marked the way with blood,
He will succor all that follow
In the path He nobly trod.

Satan, with his mighty forces,
Cannot conquer where He reigns:
Fear not, though thine own resources
Fail, He'll help thee stem the main;
He will cherish and support thee,
Though the billows round thee foam;
O'er life's ocean He will guide thee
Safe to thine eternal home.

"And whatsoever ye do, in word or in deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him."—COL. 3: 17.

Do it "in the name of Jesus," the Master, the Lord. Do it "giving thanks to God and the Father through Him." There is a great deal in serving God besides what people do when they go to meeting, though the fact seems to be very imperfectly understood. There are some, indeed, who think their work is pretty much done when they make a "profession of religion," as it is termed, and "join the church," and then go on paying their pew rent, giving something to "support the gospel" when they are dunned sufficiently for it, putting a cent or two into the contribution box, going to meeting pretty regularly, keeping out of jail, and not getting drunk, or doing anything that would disgrace them particularly, and so by-and-by dying "resigned," (when the Doctor tells them they can't get well,) and going to glory at last. Such people regard their religious exercises as pertaining mainly to Sunday, and the greater part of their work is done by the preacher, they paying him for it.

Now Jesus Christ taught no such kind of religion as this. And in the Bible we find no trace of it. In the New Testament there is nothing which indicates that the serving of God was the special work of a class of christian men set apart for that purpose. There are special duties pertaining to the church of God, which may for a time be in the hands of certain persons to attend to. But the man who gives himself "to prayer, and the ministry of the Word," is no more required to be a good man, than every other man who has named the name of Christ. He is no more required to obey God, to trust in God, to serve God, to honor God, than any other one. He has his duty, namely, to do all he can; everybody else has the same duty. The difference between the work of him to whom the Master gave the one talent, and him to whom he gave five, is not a difference in the kind of business, so much as in the amount of business. The one with the five talents goes into the "wholesale business," and the other with his one talent, (if he is not too proud or too lazy,) goes into the "retail business." One does what he can with the much, the other does what he can with the little. And so each one has his appointed work. The man who can do much, is bound to do all he can; the man who can do but a little, is bound to do that little, small though it may seem to him to be. For in all departments of life there is this division of labor, according to the capacity. On board a ship there is perhaps only one man who understands navigation; only two who can guide the course of the vessel. Now the cabin boy has his work to do, even if he is not able to command the vessel. And so every man "before the mast" has his work to do, and none of them have the privilege of saying, "Because I am not the Captain I will do nothing." So Jesus Christ speaks of his people as one body; and in a healthy body, a living body, there is not a limb, nor a joint, nor a tendon, nor an organ of any kind, nor a blood-vessel, nor an artery, nor a tissue, nor a bone; not a particle in the whole but what has its use, and is brought into use at some time or other. The larger and the smaller portions, each have their work, and whenever one portion of the body is inactive and dormant, there is, as a result, ill-health running through the whole body; and it works its way till at length through the dormancy of one single portion the whole becomes diseased. Through some ill-kept entrance the very citadel of life is stormed and the man dies. So the church of Christ as a body has its work to do, not for one day, not for two days; not for once in a lifetime, but for all the lifetime. And each member of the body has its work, according to its ability.

A man who went away on his journey, and left his money with his servants, distributed to every one according to his ability. A man stands up sometimes and says, "If I only had talents like such an one, I would do this or that." Now the Lord knew how much it was safe to trust a man with when he gave it to him. He gave him all it was safe. And the man who, when he has one talent, will not improve it because he has not more, would not do any more if he had ten. The principle is, "He that is unfaithful in the least, is unfaithful also in much." The man who will not say one word for Christ because he can't say ten, if he could say ten would not say one of them because he could not say an hundred. Because the principle on which he holds himself is essentially wrong, which is, that he can do as he pleases about it, instead of doing as Christ requires of him. Now Paul, in the words that I have read, lays out the principles of the gospel of Christ just as long and as broad as a man's whole life. He stretches them till they reach over, not one day, or two days, but every day; he makes them stretch from the first day of January to the last day of December. He spreads them so that they cover a man's action in his house, around his table, by his fireside, at his work, in his shop, in the street, in the prayer-meeting, in the church, in planning business, in performing and executing plans, in everything, in word or in work, which a man purposes, promises, or performs; everything comes under this requirement.

The apostle Peter gives us the same kind of doctrine in one of his epistles. And so does the apostle Paul in another epistle instruct us in the same way. Peter says, "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another as good stewards of the manifold grace of God." The favor of God is manifold, diverse; and in one way or another God has made each of us stewards of his grace. "If any man speak let him speak as the oracles of God." That is one way. "If any man minister," —(to minister is not to be a minister, according to the modern technical sense of the term, but to minister to the necessities of those that have need to serve,)—"If any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth, that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ." Then the apostle Paul in his writing speaks on this wise, "And whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." I presume there are many persons who do not do that. I need not say that there are many people who do not make calculation to do it, who do not undertake to do it, who do not purpose to do it, who do not want to do it. If you talk to them about eating and drinking, that is no part of their religion. The god that they worship at their table is not the God of heaven; it is "their belly," the same which the Philippians used to worship. Their god in their business is not the God of heaven; it is old Mammon, that the Syrians worshiped in ages past. The god that they worship when they get out among men, is not God Almighty, but the god of praise and honor, such as the world bestows upon men. On Sunday, in meeting, they worship God; in the week time, they worship mammon; at the table, their belly; and so their time becomes divided, and to them there are Lords many, and gods many, and rulers many, that pull, and haul, and rule them in every direction.

The apostle Paul says, "We judge that if one died for all, then were all dead." All mankind were gone, were lost, and He died for all, that henceforth "we should not live unto ourselves, but to Him that died and rose again." And so he says we are to yield ourselves unto Him "as those that are alive from the dead." We are to present our bodies "living sacrifices, holy, acceptable in His sight." The line of argument is this, "If you give life to any being, you have a right to control that being." If you could go and raise a man from the dead, it would be no more than reasonable that when you had done it, he should devote his life to you so far as you require. Christ gave his life that he might give us life, and now our lives are not our own. "Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your bodies." "Whatsoever ye do, whether in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." To do anything in the name of the Lord Jesus, is to do it by the authority of the Lord Jesus, in honor of the Lord Jesus. When a thing is done in the name of the commonwealth, it is done by the authority, and in accordance with the will, of the executive of that commonwealth. So when a thing is done in the name of the Lord, it is done according to the will of the Lord, done by the commandment of the Lord, by the authority of the Lord; and as such it has a binding force, and is the will of God, as much as though it were performed by an angel. The Lord sends us to do his work in the world. We are not to do it for ourselves, not in our own name, not because we are something or somebody, but because Christ requires it. When we bring our hearts to consider this, when we are touched by thoughts of God's grace, when we learn how much Christ gave for us, and how full and perfect, and unalienable is his title to us, then we should learn to devote ourselves to him. And so in word or in work, we should do all things in his name.

No man in the name of Jesus Christ can do a thing which is positively opposed to any command of Christ. That is plain. Consequently no man can do any sin, or anything which lies in the direction of sin, which has the "appearance of evil" justly attaching itself to it, in the name of Christ, for Christ forbids it. Now it cannot be said that we can do a thing in the name of this commonwealth, which this commonwealth expressly forbids. Of course not. We do things in the name of the commonwealth which the commonwealth requires. No man can do anything in the name of Christ, the natural tendency of which is to dishonor Christ, to disgrace him in the eyes of the world, and to cause his name to be blasphemed among the people. No man can do anything in the name of Christ which has for its natural tendency doing wrong to others,—injuring them in any way, whether spiritually, mentally, or physically; for Christ went about doing good, and he commands us to be followers of him in these things; and what we do in the name of Christ must be done as he did his work, for the good of mankind. We cannot do that in the name of Christ which has for its object our own personal aggrandizement merely. For instance, no man in the name of Christ can set himself to work deliberately and determinedly to get rich. No man can do that in the name of Christ, for he positively declares that riches are dangerous, that "it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven." What man who believes that—who credits Christ's words, can "in the name of Christ" go to seek those things of which the apostle says, "while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows"? He cannot serve mammon, and thus seek unrighteous wealth in the name of Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ does not give any such orders.

No man can in the name of Christ set out to gain and enjoy a life of luxury, ease, and selfish repose. This is the purpose of many people who set out to get rich. They want to be wealthy so that they can be at ease. They mean to work ten or twenty years, with all their might, (twice as hard as they ought to,) and then at the end of that time they intend to retire from business and live "easy"; and living easy, signifies living in a great house, having a fine carriage, a great deal to eat and drink, and finally dying of the apoplexy! That is the amount of it; the sum and substance of men's purposes in getting rich,—to be at ease. This is entirely contrary to the spirit of Christ. He never set a man to such greedy grasping,—running himself into every snare of the devil to get wealth, that he may retire one of these days, and like some great serpent, which has swallowed its tiger, lie down and sleep away the rest of his mortal existence. The work of Christ is to "occupy till he comes"; to be "not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord"; to be doing good; to labor, working with the hands; to have to give to him that hath need; and it is not in accordance with his will for a man to build a great dam, and make a kind of fish-pond, into which he can put and hoard all he gathers in his time. It is the requirement of Christ that he work steadily, with a view to glorify him, remembering that it is more blessed to give than it is to receive. When a man has that principle in his mind, when he has settled it, when he believes it, when he remembers the words of the Lord Jesus, as the apostle gives them, that "it is more blessed to give than to receive," it will be very hard work to get such a man rich. Sometimes the Lord tries to get such a man rich. I have heard of such a case, where it seemed as if the Lord was working very hard to make him rich, but it was only to fill the pond, while he kept the gates all open and the current running "full head" all the time. Sometimes when God finds a faithful man, he pours wealth into his hands so that he can pour it out again. I have read of some men who settled it before God that they never would be rich, anyway; and as God poured in wealth upon them, they let it slide. Now a man can do that in the name of Jesus Christ. But a man that goes to work, digs a den for his riches, a place to pack his plunder, and then goes out ravaging and devouring in every direction to get it, taking a widow's house here, an orphan's crust of bread there, God will never acknowledge such a man as a servant of his, working in his name.

Working in the name of Jesus Christ must be a kind of work in which a man would never be ashamed to have Jesus find him. Of course, if you send a man to work for you, that man works in your name. You take a job, you tell him what to do, and you have the honor of doing it. You employed him, and he does it. If you find him doing what you did not tell him to do, he is ashamed to be seen when you come in view, and is disposed to get out of your sight if possible. You can make this illustration forcible by considering how men would act if they really supposed that the Lord was to appear to-morrow. What do you suppose they would be doing? I think it would make such an overturning in the business of Providence, that if the Lord Jesus Christ did not come, there would be a perfect panic by day after to-morrow. If everybody in the city could be made to believe that he was coming, they would be in a great hurry to attend to their journals, right up their balances, look after their rent-rolls, and everything of that kind. I tell you the panic of '57 would not be a circumstance compared with the complete upturning you would have in such a case. They would all want to be changing their affairs somewhat. One man and another would be selling out, and find no one to buy. A great many kinds of profitable business would be given up in a minute. There would be a great many kinds of uncertain work which would go by the board in a minute. Let them but just believe that Jesus Christ was coming, and it would work a complete revolution. Now the humble, faithful christian, doing his duty, minding his own business, would not need to alter his affairs at all—not at all. We have seen how this has worked in days gone by. Some people have made up their minds that the Lord Jesus Christ was coming to attend to their business. It made a wonderful change in their affairs. It upset their whole arrangements frequently. Many a man who thought he was doing well, and who supposed that he was very comfortably situated, found his treasures on the wrong side of the river. A great many men have done like this:—They had gold that burned their fingers, and their pockets, and would burn their souls, and they knew it, and so they wanted to bustle it out of the way when He came, as thieves fling stolen goods away when the sheriff is after them; and so when the alarm was over, the gold began to chink in the box again. Now you see that is not a kind of work to be done in the name of Jesus. Not at all.

Jesus wants his men to work, whether they are mending nets, as were the sons of Zebedee, or making tents like Paul, or working round at odd jobs, as Barnabas used to, so that when he looks on their work they will not be in confusion. Let a mother who has been away from home two or three weeks, and has half a dozen grown up children, return suddenly, and you see this one tucking away this thing, another hiding that, and you know there is something out of order. And she wants to know what is the matter, and finds there is some craft or deviltry going on. So when the Lord Jesus Christ comes to this world and finds men with a great deal in their hands that they want to drop, it is a sure sign that they are not doing just what he set them at. But if a man is doing what the Lord would have him do, if he is accomplishing the Master's purposes, doing "all in the name of Jesus," whether in word or in work, why, he wants to see his Lord. He says, "I am only sorry I have not done more. I have done the best I could. I am an unprofitable servant." So he gives up his charge, and the Lord says to him, "Come, thou blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you."

We need to banish forever from our minds this idea of shutting up religion in one seventh part of a man's time—this idea that a man has a right to serve himself six days if he will serve God the other day—this idea that christian duty is performed by singing psalms, making prayers, going to meeting, and all that sort of thing. That is not the real work after all. This is only the "drill room" where you come to be trained, (and I am doing it now as well as I can,) and you are here to go through your various evolutions; you are to learn to confess Christ before men, and then go out and do it every day in the week. Here you learn the duties. Then you are to practice them all the time. You come here as boys go to school to study navigation. They study and learn about all there is in the books. Well, that does not make sailors of them. They may have learned a great deal about it, but you next send them to sea to learn it. Let them be rocked on the cradle of the deep, and sung to by the hurricanes, till they learn something about the real work there is to do. A man does not learn to run up the rigging like a squirrel when he is studying navigation in school. He has got to learn by experience, where it is life or death to him, where he will drown if he don't learn, where there is no other way for him but to learn, and then he will learn to some purpose. You can no more learn to do the whole of the christian's work here, than you can learn to swim on the floor by spreading your arms and imitating the movements of a frog. You must learn in the water, pulling for life. When you have learned in that way, you are ready to swim when you want to. Planks don't answer the purpose. You have got to strike out alone, and if your head does get under, fetch it up, and so keep on till you have accomplished something. I could not learn to swim with my head above water, and so I learned to swim under water, and brought my head up afterwards. A good many men learn christian duty in that way. But let them take time and they will learn to do what God tells them to do, slowly but surely.

Those things that are done in the name of Jesus Christ, are to be done with constant reference to him. Though he has gone away and left general directions for his people, yet he gives special directions when they need them. He has left his Spirit to show unto us the things of God. As says the apostle, "Ye have an unction from the Holy One." Now we are to prize this instruction. We are to remember that "as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." And we are to seek continually that God may guide us by his counsel, and afterward receive us to glory. A great many times just what the Lord would have us do, may seem to us to be of little importance. It may seem to you a small matter whether you turn this way, that way, or the other. The other day a person was killed in this city, and if she had turned another corner, she would have lived. So a thousand times the destiny of a man depends on the turning of a corner, or the taking of a step. And there is no place, no time, for a man to be careless in this world.

Napoleon once went into a school and said to them, "Remember, boys, that every hour in your life is a chance for misfortune, mistake and failure." That may well be remembered by the christian. Every hour in your life is a chance for something to go wrong that will ruin life. You go on a voyage to sea. There is hardly an hour, perhaps no hour in the whole voyage, where there is not a chance for something to occur that will render the whole a failure. There is a chance everywhere and at all times for a man's making shipwreck or meeting loss. So in serving God. Numerous wily foes surround us, and we are to look up to Him who is mightier than they all, place our trust in the friendship of Christ, in the grace of God, in the love and mercy of the Most High, and so go on to perfection.

Whether ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, whether in word or in work, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Take this message—take it for to-day and for to-morrow. Square your lives by it. And so when you work, do your business, make your plans, earn your money, do your trading for the Lord; and when self clamors for this or that, say, "I am the servant of the Lord." When selfishness would rise up and control your will, say, "I am a servant of the Lord." When father and mother, wife and children seek to turn you from the path of duty, just let the answer be, "I am bought with a great price; I belong to Jesus Christ, and I must listen to him." If we do this, our business will be holy. Our daily toil will be as acceptable to God as singing psalms, or offering prayers. Our work shall be sanctified in the eyes of the Most High. Every thing we do shall reflect the image of Christ, and honor his name. We shall find that the gospel can be made of practical value; and in no way so effectually to a man shivering with cold, as with a blanket, a barrel of coal, or a load of wood. We shall find that the gospel comes to hungry folks in the shape of loaves of bread, to the naked in the shape of raiment. And when we have done what God has appointed in this way, then we can bring to them the unsearchable riches of Christ. When we have given the cup of cold water to the thirsty, we can tell them of the water of which if a man drink, he shall never thirst. When we have given bread to the hungry, we can tell them of the bread which cometh down from heaven. When we have gone and ministered unto the sick and distressed, we can tell them of the Son of man who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many. They can do these things, and let it be understood that they are done for Christ's sake, in the name of Christ, for the glory and honor of Him who bought us with his blood.

Let us think of these things. Let us gird ourselves for a whole-souled life-work in the cause of God. Not for a spasm; not for a mere start or fit of excitement; but for "a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all alone," every one of us; for this pulling "all together" does not work at all. You cannot get half of them to do it. Then work with your own eye on the work, and God's eye on you, and you will do something, and get others to do something too. I pray God to make us diligent, and so at last say to us, "Well done." Amen.

Eld. W. Pratt's Reply

To a lecture of Mr. Leo Miller, on "Comparative view of Ancient and Modern Spiritualism," in the Temple at Portsmouth, N. H., Sunday evening, March 3d, 1861. Reported by Mr. James Mitchell.

No. 2.

Perhaps I ought to notice some questions and answers. Question by one of the congregation:—"How can you tell good spirits from bad?" Answer. "The same as you tell good and bad men in this life." According to their own statistics you cannot credit more than 20 per cent of their communications. Observe, they test the character of spirits the same as we do men here in this life. There are hypocrites here, and it appears there are hypocrites among their spirits; and it is not impossible that the Spiritualists have been deceived by these hypocritical spirits ever since they have had any thing to do with them. Bad spirits, they tell us, cannot transform themselves into an angel of light. Paul, the apostle, thought differently; and if we can judge from communication, and the acts of modern spirits, we are compelled to favor the apostle's decision, saying nothing of his inspiration.

Another remark;—"I read the Bible as I do history, sifting the wheat from the chaff." This shows how much faith he has in the Bible. All that is in harmony with his idea of things, I suppose he receives. This is a fair specimen of the Spiritualists' Bible faith. He rejected the Bible account of the sun and moon standing still, also the record concerning Jonah. I wish to give Professor Pick's criticism on the first mentioned text: "There are two different words used in the Hebrew for the word sun in the English version; viz., kaammoh, the sun; shemesh, the light of the sun; also, for the one word moon; viz., levonoh, the moon; yoraiakh, the light of the moon. . . . . . Thus, when Joshua said (12: 12.) 'Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon, and thou moon, in the valley of Ajalon,' the words in the original are shemesh and yoraiakh; but in Isa. 24: 23, they are different. Then the moon (levonoh) shall be confounded and the sun (kaammoh) ashamed." This shows us the literal rendering and removes all difficulty; "light of the sun remain"; so with the moon; which might easily be accounted for on natural principles.

In relation to Jonah he does not understand that Jonah was swallowed by a whale; but the ship in which they were sailing was probably "named whale," and Jonah was cast down into the hole in the fore part of the ship." Well, this is rather a novel idea and caused our Savior to make a sad mistake, if true, for he says: "As Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." He should have said "Three days and nights in the hole of the ship as Jonah was." If our friend's view is correct, the ship must have run ashore, and burst open her bow, and thrown Jonah out on the beach or dry land.

I have given you a sketch of the lecture, and now you can understand what I am to answer this evening. First, I remark, this lecture is based on three assumptions:

I. The spirits of the dead are the only angels in existence.

II. The spirits of men are the men proper, and when the body dies they (the spirits) can and do commune with men on earth.

III. The prophets, apostles, and Jesus Christ, their dreams, visions, prophecies, spirit that moved them, miracles wrought, were all done by the agency of dead men's spirits, or spirits of the dead. We will notice these assumptions in their order, and,

I. "The spirits of the dead are the only angels in existence." If angels are the spirits of the dead, they (the angels) in every instance studiously avoided letting it be known. The objector may refer to Rev. 19: 10; and 22: 9, and the mount of transfiguration, to disprove this position. We will notice these objections in the onset. There is no mystery in this text (in Rev.), even if the angel that visited John was one of the prophets. There is no necessity of inferring that it was the spirit of one of the dead prophets (for it must be an inference, as there is not a word in the text about the spirit of the prophets), for Elijah and Enoch were translated, and could come as tangible beings and prophets that were changed to immortality and translated, that they should not see death. Hence, either of them might have visited John. This, however, I do not conceive to be the meaning of the text. "I am thy servant, John, as I was to the prophets"; or, "I serve you, John, as I served the prophets." Critics tell us this is the true idea. Mr. Barnes favors it.

In relation to Moses and Elias on the mount of transfiguration, I will state briefly, that Elijah was translated. Hence, if he was there, he was there bodily. There was a dispute about the body of Moses, Jude tells us; hence, it is not impossible that dispute was in consequence of the Lord's resurrecting Moses; for it appears that Moses was just as really there as Elijah. This, however, is said to be a vision. If so, then we have a miniature of the kingdom of God which is yet future. This seems to be the true idea from the context, and the apostle Peter's comment on this text. I will briefly state some features of this miniature. First. Our Lord who was there transfigured represents the king. Second. Moses and Elias represent the subjects: Moses represents those in the graves that will be resurrected to life eternal, and Elijah those saints living on the earth when the Lord comes, who will be changed and translated like Elijah, without tasting death's bitter cup. The glory that surrounded and overshadowed, was a grand representation of the glory that will fill the earth when the kingdom of God comes. This I conceive to be the right view of the text and gives a harmony with all other Scripture.

We are now prepared to go on with our subject. The position taken in relation to the "angels being the spirits of the dead, who once lived on the earth," places the angels in a sad and unenviable position. This position makes the angels of God hypocrites. Now for proof. In all their visits to earth they studiously avoided informing us of their true relation. They never [illegible] where they lived on the earth. They never told any one that they ever lived on the earth at all. They never have told us they died or were ever clothed with mortality. They have never given us any intimation what their business was on earth or how they were used. They have never informed us they were the spirits of any hero or prophet that had died; hence, we must conclude if they were the spirits of the departed they intended to deceive the holy prophets and apostles, and did deceive them; and can we call them anything less than hypocrites? The angels of the Bible differ in all these particulars from the so-called modern spirits. I have been reading communications from these latter angels from the Banner of Light for the last six months, and (1) they pretend to tell you where they lived on the earth. (2) They were really inhabitants of this earth; and (3) they died with such a disease. (4) How bad they were treated by some individual and what they did for a livelihood; and, (5) they are the spirits of some hero, warrior, prophet or friend. Now every one can see these modern spirits hold no relation to angels; if they do, then there is no avoiding the conclusion that the angels spoken of in the Bible are base hypocrites.

II. The assumption of the natural immortality of man. This is the basis of all Spiritualism. As it does not however have a direct bearing upon the subject before us I shall throw out a few facts for your consideration and pass on to the next. [illegible] word immortal is only used [illegible] ble and then applied to God [illegible] 17. 2. The word [illegible]

times. 3. It is not applied to man, either soul, body or spirit, in this life. 4. It is brought to light by the gospel of Jesus Christ.—2 Tim. 1: 10. 5. It is placed before the church as an object of hope.—Rom. 2: 7. 6. Can only be gained through Jesus Christ. 7. For God only hath it (1 Tim. 6: 16), and promises it through his beloved Son, Jesus Christ. 8. It is gained by the righteous only. 9. Put on at the resurrection of the dead, (1 Cor. 15: 52—56) not at death. 10. It is never applied to the wicked at all. 11. The word soul, translated from the Hebrew word nephesh, is used in the Old Testament 752 times. 12. Corresponding word psuchee in the Greek is used 105 times; in all, 857 times the word soul is used in the Bible; but in no instance do we find the term immortal, never-dying, or undying, deathless, or any term connected with soul to express its endless duration. 13. The Hebrew word ruach, translated spirit, is used in the Old Testament 400 times, and 14. The corresponding word pneuma in the Greek of the New Testament is used 385, in all, the word spirit is used in the Bible 785 times; but no qualifying term such as immortal, never-dying, or deathless attached to it. 15. In the whole Bible we have the term soul and spirit used 1642 times, but not in a single instance do we find the phrase, immortal soul, immortal spirit, deathless soul, deathless spirit, never-dying soul, never-dying spirit, or any phraseology that would intimate man had an undying nature. I might refer to other words such as die, death and dead, but I have given you enough. Do not forget these things.

III. "The prophets, apostles and Jesus Christ, their dreams, visions, prophecies, spirit that moved them, miracles wrought, were all done by the agency of the spirits of the dead." This position places the inspired men in an awful dilemma. 1. They supposed they wrote and spake by the Holy Ghost, but they were sadly mistaken and deceived, for it was by the aid of the spirits of the dead. 2. They supposed they were instructed by, and communed with, God, but in this they were deluded all their life—it was instruction and communion with dead people. 3. They lived and died with the impression that they wrought miracles in the name of Jesus Christ, but that was a farce. 4. They supposed that Jesus Christ was the only begotten Son of God. Angels' testimony went to confirm them, and a voice from heaven at his baptism, also at his transfiguration,—"This is my beloved Son," etc. In connection with miracles wrought, fulfillment of prophecies, these things with others was a demonstration to their minds of the fact that Jesus Christ was the Anointed and the Savior of the world. But all these things only went to deceive them in relation to Jesus Christ. Truly, they were a deluded set, for Christ was no more a Savior than themselves, they say. 5. They supposed the spirit of God helped them in their praying and speaking, and in all life's trials and changes; but it was only imaginary, or they were deceived, and mistook the Spirit of God for the spirits of the dead. Hence we see that the prophets, apostles and Christ were the most deluded class that have ever been on the earth, according to this position. And they were not only deceived, but they deceived all that followed them, and all christendom to-day are deceived by these great deceivers. This places the holy seers in an awful dilemma.

But to cap all, after assuming a position that makes Jesus Christ, apostles and prophets, deluded, deceived, or the basest of hypocrites, then Spiritualists claim them as their ancestors. They assume a position that makes angels deceptive and hypocrites, and then say they are just like modern spirits. This is a specimen of their "Harmonial philosophy."

We will contrast angels with modern so-called spirits of the dead. I have already given you some distinct features between the two classes. I will now make the contrast apparent by placing them in opposition to each other.

BIBLE ANGELS.	MODERN SPIRITS.
1. They, the angels, are reverential, and commended men to worship God. Judges 13: 16; R. 22: 9.	1. Modern spirits, not one half of them, believe there is a God. They talk of "knocking God and the Bible out of people."
2. Angels reverenced Christ. "Let all the angels of God worship him."—Heb. 1: 6.	2. Modern spirits put themselves on a par with Jesus Christ.
3. Angels are holy beings.—Matt. 24.	3. Spirits can claim almost any thing else but holiness.
4. Angels' words are stedfast—truthful. Heb. 2: 6.	4. Spirits do not tell the truth half of the time, according to their own testimony.
5. There is a harmony in angels' testimony.	5. There is no harmony among spirits' testimony, unless it is to reject Jesus Christ and the Bible.
6. Prophets, Jesus Christ and Apostles' testimony are in harmony with angels.	6. The spirits are reprobates concerning Bible truths—they have no faith in the Bible.
7. Angels have been interested in the plan of redemption, and rejoice when sinners repent.	7. Modern spirits do not believe in a plan of redemption, but delight in sin, and are mad if any one gets converted.
8. Angels are said to stand in the presence of God, and go at God's bidding.	8. Modern spirits do not recognize any God higher than themselves.
9. Angels came to men, like men, and conversed like men.	9. Spirits skulk round and rap and tip tables; this is a fair sample of their progression.

Can you discover any relation between the angels and the modern spirits? Would you dream that they belong to the same family? Does it not look as though they were ashamed of their true relation, and [illegible] to claim a connection with holy angels [illegible] to be respected? Spiritualists [illegible] prophets, apostles, and Jesus Christ were mediums like these in our day. The prophets were men of prayer. Is this a characteristic of modern Spiritualists? All the holy seers and apostles were godly men—lived humble and holy, with an eye single to the glory of God. Dare modern spirit mediums, so called, claim this? Do they live such lives? I will give some facts from their own writing, that all may judge how near they are related to prophets and apostles.

For the Crisis.

My Experience.—No. 6.

I returned from the meeting, but the distress and sorrow that now weighed down my spirits was almost insupportable. I thought, why all this distress and suffering? What have I done? Weeping and pleading I went to the Lord, but oh, what a change! The light had faded, my peace was gone, while clouds and darkness surrounded me, and hid from my view his lovely face. Day after day I wept and prayed, trying in vain to define or solve this mystery to my inexperienced mind. Doubts and fears like a flood now for the first time since my conversion came rushing in. So bright and clear was the evidence which I received at the time, that no room was left for these. At length, after days of severe mental suffering and anguish, almost sinking in despair, the Lord was pleased to let me see my condition; how I had been listening to, and believing the insinuations of, an evil spirit, calculated to lead me astray from the path of duty; and although the suggestions might be true in some respects, perhaps they might be wrong, or at least those persons referred to might not be doing the will of God. I was also led to see that the good Spirit does not always influence all persons alike, calling them to the same work at the same time; but that it is the duty of every one individually, great or small, to hear and obey that voice, without regard to what may be the duties of others. I now saw plainly my mis-doing, and the cause of my trials and sufferings. Humbly repenting, and resolving to take again the cross and obey the Lord, restored my peace, and, in keeping the commands, brought again the same rich reward.

Months passed on; a sweet, heavenly peace filled my soul while I obeyed the Lord. The lesson taught me, and which I should have always remembered, had lost the most of its bitterness, and been nearly or quite forgotten. One morning, while bowed at the family altar as usual for prayer, which I had not as yet neglected, but being weary, and the prayer already offered seeming not quite so spiritual as usual, the enemy approached saying, you can't pray much to-night, and if you recollect, your prayers are about the same thing all the time over and over again, and your parents notice it, and they have not much confidence in your religion any how; but you can pray the more in secret, and when you have learned to pray better, then you can pray in the family again. Now all this appeared so plain and real, and such a feeling of shame and discouragement came over me, that, without attempting to pray, I arose, left the room, and retired, spending most of the night in tears looking over the past and calculating on the future. I more than half decided to never attempt to pray before any one again, but would try to live a christian, maintaining secret devotion. It seemed that the enemy had nearly the entire control.

The next morning my father inquired what it was that he had said or done that I could not pray with them? The tender emotion and anxious solicitude manifested in the inquiry, together with the mortification and discouragement, so affected me, I could give him no answer. He still inquired if he had said or done any thing to wound my feelings. I replied that he had not, and turned away to give vent to feelings in sighs and tears. My temptations and trials were now very great, almost to distraction. Many times did I nearly or quite regret that I had started in the ways of religion. If this was the path to follow, the ideas to be presented, the sufferings to be endured, how could I live in it?

Strongly did the temptation follow me from day to day, to give up the idea of being a christian, and join again with my brothers, sisters and associates in the ways of folly and sin. Often I looked upon them as they amused themselves in their plays and sports, and said within myself, oh! that I were as free from sorrow, temptations and trials, then would I be as happy and joyful as you appear to be. When I thought of death and the judgment, I dare not omit secret prayer, though it consisted more in tears and sighs than in words. Still I persevered in this, believing and knowing this to be my only hope of escape. I desired above all else to be a christian, but if I were one, should I meet with such conflicts and trials as these? From what I could learn by the appearance and conversation of others within the circle of my acquaintance, of whom I had no doubts respecting their piety, I judged they were entire strangers to the difficulties which I encountered. I sometimes tried to believe it a suggestion from an evil source; but then it all seemed so real, that I never afterward thought of attempting to pray before my parent; but this idea haunted me, "You pray about the same prayer, and they have not much confidence in your religion."

So strong was this impression and influence that I felt a strange reluctance, and often declined going to the same meeting when they would attend, but in their absence made every effort to rise above its influence, try to do what seemed to be duty, and often received comfort and consolation thereby; this, together with the fixed purpose to maintain closet prayer, saved me from falling entirely. The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 27, 1861.

A Pilgrim's Notes.

We parted with our readers at Dansville, C. E., Feb. 24th, at the close of a very interesting series of meetings, which, in about two weeks, resulted in the conversion of between twenty and thirty to the christian religion, eighteen of whom were buried with Christ in baptism.

Monday, 25th, we returned to Melbourne, and spent a few hours very pleasantly in Bro. Gilman's family, and then left the deep snows of Canada, with its piercing cold weather, for the more genial clime in the States; but when we left the Queen's dominions, we parted with many warm and kind hearts, that will ever be remembered with pleasure.

On our way, we stopped all night at Island Pond, and the next morning, the 26th, we went on to Bryant's Pond, a pleasant village, sixty-two miles from Portland, where we remained till Saturday, March 2d, and held meetings in the Baptist house, which were well attended by attentive congregations. The truth is spreading in this section, and several are rejoicing in the "blessed hope." There is an open door here for preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and many hearts are ready to welcome it. We trust that the seed sown will spring up and bear fruit to the glory of God. We found a good home in Bro. Bryant's kind family.

Saturday, 2d inst., we went on to Portland, and received another hearty welcome in Bro. Brooks' kind family, where Zion's pilgrims ever find a pleasant home. Here we also met our dear Bro. Hemenway, a faithful and successful laborer in the gospel ministry, and enjoyed a pleasing and profitable interview together. We are thankful for such privileges; they are cheering and encouraging, while engaged in the christian warfare.

The church in Portland have hired a pleasant new hall, considerably larger than their former place of worship. The hall is also pleasantly located in the heart of the city. Our meetings here were very interesting, and their hall was very much crowded, especially in the evening, when the aisles were filled by those who could get no seats. During our remarks on Spiritualism, several important questions were asked, which added new interest to the subject. A Mr. Woodman, an intelligent lawyer, and a leader among the Spiritualists, made several inquiries, which caused the truth to shine the brighter. There is a wide field open in this city for faithful labors in the Lord. The people have an ear to hear, and many seem anxious to know the right way. The prospect looks brighter here than it has for several years. The children of the Lord have reason to take courage and press the battle more strongly than ever, looking for happy results.

In compliance with a request, we published in the daily papers the following:—

A CARD.

"WILL ALL MEN LIVE ETERNALLY?" If any clergyman, or other respectable gentleman in Portland, will sustain the affirmative of the foregoing question in oral debate, he is invited to inform Eld. Miles Grant, Boston, Mass., who will endeavor to support the negative. The preliminaries to be arranged by the parties.

P. S. If preferred, he will meet any combined number of gentlemen, provided he is allowed half the time.

We have not yet received any acceptance. We give our brethren liberty to make the same offer in other places, if they think best. All proper means should be employed to arouse the people to search the Scriptures, which are most sadly neglected by the masses of the present age, while they are all absorbed in the politics and news of the day.

Monday, March 4th, we returned home, and enjoyed a good class meeting at the Crisis office in the evening. Several prominent members of different churches in Boston have become deeply interested in the great truths that distinguish us as a people, and are not ashamed to confess them openly. Things look encouraging for the church in Boston. The audiences are large and intelligent. The truth is spreading prosperously. Several more are almost persuaded to stand up boldly in its defense. We shall hope to see much good accomplished at our anticipated general conference.

Tuesday, 5th. Before noon of to-day, we received intelligence of the sickness of our aged mother. At three o'clock P. M., we took the express train for Hartford, where we arrived about half-past seven o'clock in the evening, and then by private conveyance, rode twenty-five miles over a bad road, arriving at the home of our childhood, about three o'clock in the morning. We found mother quite feeble and confined to her bed, but fully resigned to the Lord, and anxious to sleep in Jesus. We sung to her of the "land of rest," while she shouted "glory." After a season of prayer and weeping, at early dawn, we bid her farewell till Jesus comes, when, by the grace of God, we intend to be ready to meet her in the everlasting kingdom. For many years she has loved the "blessed hope," and delighted in the ways of the Lord. Though we say it, the Lord has blessed us with a kind, christian mother, whose counsel and prayers have been of more value to us than thousands of gold and silver. She now sleeps in Jesus, but is embalmed in our memory. Thank the Lord for a christian mother.

Wednesday, 6th. At the dawn of day, we turned in sadness from our sick mother, and had a lonely ride back to Hartford, thence to Worcester, from there to Blackstone, to fill our next appointment. This is a new field of labor, and a rather hard soil to cultivate; but the Lord stirred up a goodly number to search the Scriptures, to see what they do teach, and several appeared to be satisfied the popular theology of these last days is based on "fables," and no longer deserves the support of those who love the truth. They were astonished at the plainness and simplicity of the word of the Lord, as revealed in the Bible, and rejoiced that their eyes had been opened to see the light. We trust they will go on in the way that grows brighter and brighter till the perfect day. There are a few good brethren and sisters in Blackstone, who are endeavoring to "stand up for Jesus" and his word. The last evening we were there, several asked questions publicly, which assisted in giving more light on the great truths revealed to us from the Lord. Among others, a Spiritualist made quite an effort to entangle us in our talk, but the track of truth was too straight for him, and he made a sad failure. After making several unsuccessful attempts to show that man never dies, and thus prove that Satan told the truth to our first parents, when he contradicted the Lord, and said, "Ye shall not surely die," we then urged him to bring one passage of Scripture to show that any part of man is alive and conscious when his physical organism is dead. He stood several moments in deep thought, blushed with confusion, and sat down, as we think every other man will be obliged to do in a similar situation.

Several prominent members of the Baptist church have embraced the glorious truths we love so well, and are resolved to let their light shine. We notice one fact in relation to all who receive the truths, which is, that they at once exclaim with joy, "My Bible is a new book to me; where it was before all dark and obscure, it is now plain and harmonious." "Now," say they, "we take great delight in studying the Scriptures; whereas before, they appeared so obscure and mystical we could not understand them, and hence had but little satisfaction in reading." We find this fact universal, and like young converts they think they can make every one else see it, because it is so plain, and are astonished at the cold indifference they meet from many who profess to love the Lord and his word. No matter how faithfully they have lived, or how long they have been in the service of the Lord, when they see, embrace and defend these truths, for believing which we are called heretics, and shut out of most of the houses of worship, they invariably say, "I enjoy myself better than ever before, take more delight in prayer and the Bible, and have a stronger love for Jesus." Why is this, if it is such damnable heresy as some suppose?

On the other hand, those who oppose these truths, after they have heard or had an opportuny to hear, become more and more worldly-minded, have less peace and joy, and less love for prayer and the Bible. We have observed this fact for some eighteen years, and as God's ways are "equal," we may expect the same result in all time. Knowing this as we do, we feel willing to be called infidel and heretic, and be looked upon with contempt for Jesus' sake, who received much greater reproach for us. It is a pleasure to suffer with and for such a friend.

Monday, March 11th, we returned to Boston, and soon after our arrival, we received a telegram stating that our dear mother was dead, and to be buried on Wednesday. In the evening we had an interesting class meeting at the Crisis Office. There have recently been some strong additions to our number, and they are active in the cause of the Lord, as all must be, if they would enjoy the christian religion, and be ready to meet Jesus at his coming.

Tuesday, 12th, in company with Bro. J. S. White and Mrs. Grant, we started for Torringford, Ct., to perform the last sad duties to a faithful mother, who is quietly sleeping in Jesus, awaiting the morn of the resurrection, when she will live again. As we laid her down in the lonely grave, in the country church-yard, among the friends of former days, we were comforted with the hope that Jesus is soon coming to end the works of death, and give back the christian fathers and mothers, companions, friends and lovely children, now sleeping in the embrace of death, and restore them to life and give them the eternal joys of a beautiful paradise, where sorrow's tears will flow no more; where mourning processions never move in gloomy silence to the sad tolling of the funeral bell; where the sable garments are exchanged for robes of white, and, instead of the requiem for the dead, is heard the glorious song of triumph as it echoes afar o'er the plains of glory, when the meek inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace, while unceasing ages roll their joyful rounds.

Fast and Pray.

As our approaching General Conference at Boston will be one of much importance, and as all wish to have the greatest amount of good accomplished possible, and as all our help must come from the Lord, we propose, that on Friday, April 5th, those who are interested will omit the evening meal, and spend the time in prayer to God, that he will make the coming meeting the most profitable and successful one we have ever held.

"Never Die."

BRO. GRANT:—Please give an exposition of John 11: 25, 26, and oblige yours truly, S. T. JOHNSON.

The two verses and their context, beginning at verse 23d, read as follows:—"Jesus saith unto her, thy brother shall rise again. Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day. Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?" It will be observed that the time under consideration is "the last DAY" when the resurrection is to take place. In the 25th verse Jesus speaks of the believers who are dead, and says they shall live. In the next verse, he informs Martha that the believers who are alive "at the last day," when he shall return to raise the dead believers, "shall never die." Paul is instructed to say, when speaking of the same events at the same time, that those who are alive when "the last trump . . . shall sound," will not "sleep," i. e., die, but shall "be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," and "be caught up together with them" . . . [the dead believers who are raised at that time] "to meet the Lord in the air."

From these Scriptures we learn that the christians, who are alive at the coming of Christ, will "never die," but be translated like Enoch and Elijah.

Kingdom of Christ yet Future.

BRO. GRANT:—I would like to have your opinion on Col. 1: 13. ORRIN MILLS.

The verse reads as follows:—"Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son." Some time since, we gave an exposition of this passage, but will give another for the benefit of those who did not have the Crisis, at that time. This text is sometimes presented to show that the kingdom of God is already set up, notwithstanding the many plain passages to the contrary. The word "translated," in Col. 1: 13, is from methisteemi, which is defined by Greenfield as follows: "To move from one place to another, remove, transfer; metonymy, to cause to pass from one mode of thinking to another, cause to change SIDES." The latter, we think, is the application in the text.

Is, the word rendered into, when used, as in this verse, "to denote purpose or object," is properly translated FOR. We cite a few examples where it is thus rendered: "For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning."—Rom. 15: 4. "And Jesus said unto him, No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."—Luke 9: 62. "The same came for a witness."—John 1: 7. "I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth."—Acts 13: 47. "Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught.—Luke 5: 4. "I am set for the defence of the gospel."—Phil. 1: 17. "He is profitable to me for the ministry."—2 Tim. 4: 11. "By faith, Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed."—Heb. 11: 8. "And the four angels were loosed, which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year."—Rev. 9: 15. "The leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations."—Rev. 22: 2. All can see what nonsense it would make to translate is by the word into, in the examples just cited.

In Col. 1: 13, Paul tells the Colossian brethren that by the help of our heavenly Father they have been delivered from the power of darkness, and have changed sides for the kingdom of his dear Son; i. e., for this "purpose or object," they have changed sides; to obtain the coming kingdom.

☞ Do all in your power to teach your children self-government. If a child is passionate, teach him by gentle means to curb his temper. If he is sulky, charm him out of it by frank good humor. If indolent, accustom him to exertion, and train him so as to perform even onerous duties with alacrity. In short, give your children the habit of overcoming their besetting sins.

For the Crisis.

Is any part of Man Immortal?

No. 3.

Does human reason teach it?

SOCRATES, the Master and martyr of Moral Philosophers, after discoursing upon the condition of the "immortal souls" of the righteous and wicked after death; alleging that "a suitable destiny hurls into Tartarus" the incorrigibly wicked, while "those who have lived an eminently holy life are yet free from hades and dwell on the upper parts of the earth," thus proceeds: "To affirm positively that these things are exactly as I have described them, does not become a man of sense"; and adds, "It is right to allure ourselves with such things, as with enchantments; and though I should be mistaken, I gain at least thus much, that the expectation makes me less uneasy while I live, and my error will die with me." While holding the fatal hemlock in his hands, he thus discourses: "If the common expression be true, that death conveys us to those regions which are inhabited by the spirits of departed men, will it not be unspeakably happy to escape from the hands of mere nominal judges, and appear before those who truly deserve the name, such as Minos and Rhodamonthus, and to associate with all who have maintained the cause of truth and rectitude? Is it possible for you to look upon this as an unimportant journey? Is it nothing to converse with Orpheus, and Homer, and Hesiod? Believe me, I would cheerfully suffer many a death on condition of realizing such a privilege. With what pleasure could I leave the world to hold communion with Palamedes, Ajax, and others, who like me have had an unjust sentence pronounced against them! Then would I explore the wisdom of Ulysses Lysippus, and that illustrious chief who led out the best army of the Greeks against the city of Troy. Nor should I be condemned to death for indulging, as I have done here, in free inquiry."

All this hope after all the pleasure of anticipation, however, was an uncertain illusion, for he adds to his judges: "I go to death, yea to life; but that which is for the best the Divinity only knows"; or, as others record: "I am going out of the world, and you are to continue in it; but which of us has the better part, is a secret to every one but God."

We have only to compare these views and this hope and language with that of the most ancient of "the holy men of old" taught of God, to observe the assurance that a knowledge of divine revelation gives to the certainties of the future, and the hopes that it inspires man in faith to apprehend. Compare the language and hope of Job, who did not entertain the thought of the soul's immortality or of man's conscious existence in death, and whose faith rested in the resurrection of the dead, and the immortality of his Redeemer, with that of this wisest and best of ancient philosophers. Job, 14th chap. entire, and Job 19: 25—27.

The "reason" of most men in the days of Socrates did not teach them the doctrine he endeavored to inculcate, as seen in the following sentence: "Can this soul of ours, when separated from the body, be immediately dispersed and destroyed, as most men assert?"

PLATO, the disciple of Socrates, taught and endeavored to believe that the souls of men existed from eternity;" and also in the doctrine of "the migration of souls through various human and brute forms," with various other absurdities, which if his reason believed and taught him, the reason of other men, and even of his own disciples, equally as enlightened and as wise, rejected and refused to be instructed in. But Plato's reason faltered in his own faith and doctrine. Bishop Whately, in his work on "Scripture Revelations concerning a Future State," thus writes: "Among the heathen philosophers, Plato has been appealed to, as having believed in a future state of reward and punishment, on the ground that the passages in his works in which he inculcates the doctrine, are much more numerous than those in which he expresses his doubt of it. I cannot undertake to say that such is not the case; for the arithmetical mode (as it may be called,) of ascertaining a writer's sentiments, by counting the passages on opposite sides, is one which had never occurred to me; nor do I think it likely to be generally adopted. If, for instance, an author were to write ten volumes in defence of christianity, and two or three times to express his suspicion that the whole is a tissue of fables, I believe few of his readers would feel any doubt as to his real sentiments. When a writer is at variance with himself, it is usual to judge from the nature of the subject, and the circumstances of the case, which is likely to be his real persuasion, and which, the one he may think it decorous, or politically expedient to profess.

Now in the present case, if the ancient writers disbelieved a future state of reward and punishment, one can easily understand why they should nevertheless occasionally speak as if they did believe it; since the doctrine, they all agreed, was useful in keeping the multitude in awe. On the other hand, should they, if they did believe in it, ever deny its truth? or rather (which is more commonly the case in their works,) should they allude to it as a fable so frankly and completely, disbelieved by all enlightened people as not to be worth denying, much less refuting, any more than tales of fairies are by modern writers? The ancient heathens did but conjecture, without proof, respecting a future state. And then is this remarkable circumstance to be noticed in addition; that those who taught the doctrine (as the ancient heathen lawgivers themselves did, from a perception of its importance for men's conduct,) do not seem themselves to have believed what they taught, but to have thought merely of the expediency of inculcating this belief on the vulgar. It does not appear, however, that they had much success in impressing their doctrine on the most of the people; for though a state of future rewards and punishments was commonly talked of among them, it seems to have been regarded as little more than an amusing fable."

CICERO, at times, was truly eloquent in the advocacy of the doctrine of the soul's immortality. He puts this language into the mouth of Cato:—"For my own part, I feel myself transported with the most ardent impatience to join the society of my two departed friends, your illustrious fathers, whose characters I greatly respected, and whose persons I sincerely loved. Nor is this, my earnest desire, confined to those excellent persons alone, with whom I was formerly connected; I ardently wish to visit also those celebrated worthies, of whose honorable conduct I have heard and read much, or whose virtues I have myself commemorated in some of my writings. To this glorious assembly I am speedily advancing; and I would not be turned back in my journey, even on the assured condition that my youth, like that of Pelias, should be again restored. O, glorious day! when I shall retire from this low and sordid scene to assemble with the divine congregation of departed spirits; and not with those only whom I have just mentioned, but with my dear Cato, that best of sons and most valuable of men! It was my sad fate to lay his body on the funeral pile, when by the course of nature I had reason to hope he would have performed the same last office to mine. His soul, however, did not desert me, but still looked back on me in its flight to those happy mansions, to which he was assured I should one day follow him."

On another occasion he writes his true convictions of this subject: "I have read Plato's book (the Phaedon,) over again and again; but I know not how it comes to pass, so long as I am reading, I agree with it; but no sooner is the book out of my hands, than I begin to doubt whether man is immortal."

Did his reason teach and determine this matter to his own satisfaction? When he did endeavor to believe in the soul's immortality was it reason that instructed him, or Plato's book? The reason of the wise men of later ages did not teach them the doctrine of the immortality of man. There has been no uniformity of faith among men in respect to the doctrine, which would be inevitably the case if human reason taught it.

JULIUS CÆSAR, one of the greatest and wisest of men who has lived in our world; a wise historian, an eloquent and fluent orator, a sagacious and patriotic statesman, and a calculating and successful general, instead of believing in the soul's immortality, affirmed his faith to be infidel; alleging that "the soul dies with the body, and that death is no evil," etc.

SENECA, too, writes: "I was pleasing myself with inquiring, yea, believing in the immortality (eternitate) of the soul. I could easily fall in with the opinions of great men, promising rather than proving a most desirable thing. I gave up myself to the splendid illusion. I began to weary of myself, and to despise the remnant of my happy life, ready to enter upon that unbounded time,—the possession of a whole eternity,—when suddenly I was interrupted by the receipt of your letter, and lost so fine a dream." And at another time wrote—

"Chaos and hungry time devour us all,
Inevitable death the body kills,
Nor spares the soul."*

For the Crisis.

Waymarks.

The year 1860 was one of much interest to me in my pilgrimage, inasmuch as the truth seems advancing in all directions throughout the circuit of my travels, and the cause of Christ spreading. This is the height of my ambition. For this I pray, labor and preach. For this I work with my hands to get my bread, and preach on its strength. During the year we have held many excellent conferences, which left a healthful influence on all who united in them, and extended their influence far abroad. I have also visited about forty towns, and held meetings in most of them, and endeavored to speak words of comfort, of exhortation or instruction to the people in all, as I had opportunity. There is an increasing desire to hear the gospel of the kingdom by a portion of community.

Since the commencement of 1861 I have visited Brunswick, spent one Sunday, found the little church steadfast in the faith, waiting for the end of their trials when Jesus comes. I next visited Somerville, preached times. 3. It is not applied to man, either soul, body or spirit, in this life. 4. It is brought to light by the gospel of Jesus Christ.—2 Tim. 1: 10. 5. It is placed before the church as an object of hope.—Rom. 2: 7. 6. Can only be gained through Jesus Christ. 7. For God only hath it (1 Tim. 6: 16), and promises it through his beloved Son, Jesus Christ. 8. It is gained by the righteous only. 9. Put on at the resurrection of the dead, (1 Cor. 15: 52—56) not at death. 10. It is never applied to the wicked at all. 11. The word soul, translated from the Hebrew word nephesh, is used in the Old Testament 752 times. 12. Corresponding word psuchee in the Greek is used 105 times; in all, 857 times the word soul is used in the Bible; but in no instance do we find the term immortal, never-dying, or undying, deathless, or any term connected with soul to express its endless duration. 13. The Hebrew word ruach, translated spirit, is used in the Old Testament 400 times, and 14. The corresponding word pneuma in the Greek of the New Testament is used 385, in all, the word spirit is used in the Bible 785 times; but no qualifying term such as immortal, never-dying, or deathless attached to it. 15. In the whole Bible we have the term soul and spirit used 1642 times, but not in a single instance do we find the phrase, immortal soul, immortal spirit, deathless soul, deathless spirit, never-dying soul, never-dying spirit, or any phraseology that would intimate man had an undying nature. I might refer to other words such as die, death and dead, but I have given you enough. Do not forget these things.

III. "The prophets, apostles and Jesus Christ, their dreams, visions, prophecies, spirit that moved them, miracles wrought, were all done by the agency of the spirits of the dead." This position places the inspired men in an awful dilemma. 1. They supposed they wrote and spake by the Holy Ghost, but they were sadly mistaken and deceived, for it was by the aid of the spirits of the dead. 2. They supposed they were instructed by, and communed with, God, but in this they were deluded all their life—it was instruction and communion with dead people. 3. They lived and died with the impression that they wrought miracles in the name of Jesus Christ, but that was a farce. 4. They supposed that Jesus Christ was the only begotten Son of God. Angels' testimony went to confirm them, and a voice from heaven at his baptism, also at his transfiguration,—"This is my beloved Son," etc. In connection with miracles wrought, fulfillment of prophecies, these things with others was a demonstration to their minds of the fact that Jesus Christ was the Anointed and the Savior of the world. But all these things only went to deceive them in relation to Jesus Christ. Truly, they were a deluded set, for Christ was no more a Savior than themselves, they say. 5. They supposed the spirit of God helped them in their praying and speaking, and in all life's trials and changes; but it was only imaginary, or they were deceived, and mistook the Spirit of God for the spirits of the dead. Hence we see that the prophets, apostles and Christ were the most deluded class that have ever been on the earth, according to this position. And they were not only deceived, but they deceived all that followed them, and all christendom to-day are deceived by these great deceivers. This places the holy seers in an awful dilemma.

But to cap all, after assuming a position that makes Jesus Christ, apostles and prophets, deluded, deceived, or the basest of hypocrites, then Spiritualists claim them as their ancestors. They assume a position that makes angels deceptive and hypocrites, and then say they are just like modern spirits. This is a specimen of their "Harmonial philosophy."

We will contrast angels with modern so-called spirits of the dead. I have already given you some distinct features between the two classes. I will now make the contrast apparent by placing them in opposition to each other.

BIBLE ANGELS.	MODERN SPIRITS.
1. They, the angels, are reverential, and commended men to worship God. Judges 13: 16; R. 22: 9.	1. Modern spirits, not one half of them, believe there is a God. They talk of "knocking God and the Bible out of people."
2. Angels reverenced Christ. "Let all the angels of God worship him."—Heb. 2: 6.	2. Modern spirits put themselves on a par with Jesus Christ.
3. Angels are holy beings.—Matt. 24.	3. Spirits can claim almost any thing else but holiness.
4. Angels' words are stedfast—truthful. Heb. 2: 6.	4. Spirits do not tell the truth half of the time, according to their own testimony.
5. There is a harmony in angels' testimony.	5. There is no harmony among spirits' testimony, unless it is to reject Jesus Christ and the Bible.
6. Prophets, Jesus Christ and Apostles' testimony are in harmony with angels.	6. The spirits are reprobates concerning Bible truths—they have no faith in the Bible.
7. Angels have been interested in the plan of redemption, and rejoice when sinners repent.	7. Modern spirits do not believe in a plan of redemption, but delight in sin, and are mad if any one gets converted.
8. Angels are said to stand in the presence of God, and go at God's bidding.	8. Modern spirits do not recognize any God higher than themselves.
9. Angels came to men, like men, and conversed like men.	9. Spirits skulk round and rap and tip tables; this is a fair sample of their progression.

Can you discover any relation between the angels and the modern spirits? Would you dream that they belong to the same family? Does it not look as though they were ashamed of their true relation, and [illegible] to claim a connection with holy angels [illegible] to be respected? Spiritualists [illegible] prophets, apostles, and Jesus Christ were mediums like these in our day. The prophets were men of prayer. Is this a characteristic of modern Spiritualists? All the holy seers and apostles were godly men—lived humble and holy, with an eye single to the glory of God. Dare modern spirit mediums, so called, claim this? Do they live such lives? I will give some facts from their own writing, that all may judge how near they are related to prophets and apostles.

For the Crisis.

My Experience.—No. 6.

I returned from the meeting, but the distress and sorrow that now weighed down my spirits was almost insupportable. I thought, why all this distress and suffering? What have I done? Weeping and pleading I went to the Lord, but oh, what a change! The light had faded, my peace was gone, while clouds and darkness surrounded me, and hid from my view his lovely face. Day after day I wept and prayed, trying in vain to define or solve this mystery to my inexperienced mind. Doubts and fears like a flood now for the first time since my conversion came rushing in. So bright and clear was the evidence which I received at the time, that no room was left for these. At length, after days of severe mental suffering and anguish, almost sinking in despair, the Lord was pleased to let me see my condition; how I had been listening to, and believing the insinuations of, an evil spirit, calculated to lead me astray from the path of duty; and although the suggestions might be true in some respects, perhaps they might be wrong, or at least those persons referred to might not be doing the will of God. I was also led to see that the good Spirit does not always influence all persons alike, calling them to the same work at the same time; but that it is the duty of every one individually, great or small, to hear and obey that voice, without regard to what may be the duties of others. I now saw plainly my mis-doing, and the cause of my trials and sufferings. Humbly repenting, and resolving to take again the cross and obey the Lord, restored my peace, and, in keeping the commands, brought again the same rich reward.

Months passed on; a sweet, heavenly peace filled my soul while I obeyed the Lord. The lesson taught me, and which I should have always remembered, had lost the most of its bitterness, and been nearly or quite forgotten. One morning, while bowed at the family altar as usual for prayer, which I had not as yet neglected, but being weary, and the prayer already offered seeming not quite so spiritual as usual, the enemy approached saying, you can't pray much to-night, and if you recollect, your prayers are about the same thing all the time over and over again, and your parents notice it, and they have not much confidence in your religion any how; but you can pray the more in secret, and when you have learned to pray better, then you can pray in the family again. Now all this appeared so plain and real, and such a feeling of shame and discouragement came over me, that, without attempting to pray, I arose, left the room, and retired, spending most of the night in tears looking over the past and calculating on the future. I more than half decided to never attempt to pray before any one again, but would try to live a christian, maintaining secret devotion. It seemed that the enemy had nearly the entire control.

The next morning my father inquired what it was that he had said or done that I could not pray with them? The tender emotion and anxious solicitude manifested in the inquiry, together with the mortification and discouragement, so affected me, I could give him no answer. He still inquired if he had said or done any thing to wound my feelings. I replied that he had not, and turned away to give vent to feelings in sighs and tears. My temptations and trials were now very great, almost to distraction. Many times did I nearly or quite regret that I had started in the ways of religion. If this was the path to follow, the ideas to be presented, the sufferings to be endured, how could I live in it?

Strongly did the temptation follow me from day to day, to give up the idea of being a christian, and join again with my brothers, sisters and associates in the ways of folly and sin. Often I looked upon them as they amused themselves in their plays and sports, and said within myself, oh! that I were as free from sorrow, temptations and trials, then would I be as happy and joyful as you appear to be. When I thought of death and the judgment, I dare not omit secret prayer, though it consisted more in tears and sighs than in words. Still I persevered in this, believing and knowing this to be my only hope of escape. I desired above all else to be a christian, but if I were one, should I meet with such conflicts and trials as these? From what I could learn by the appearance and conversation of others within the circle of my acquaintance, of whom I had no doubts respecting their piety, I judged they were entire strangers to the difficulties which I encountered. I sometimes tried to believe it a suggestion from an evil source; but then it all seemed so real, that I never afterward thought of attempting to pray before my parents; but this idea haunted me, "You pray about the same prayer, and they have not much confidence in your religion."

So strong was this impression and influence that I felt a strange reluctance, and often declined going to the same meeting when they would attend, but in their absence made every effort to rise above its influence, try to do what seemed to be duty, and often received comfort and consolation thereby; this, together with the fixed purpose to maintain closet prayer, saved me from falling entirely. The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MARCH 27, 1861.

A Pilgrim's Notes.

We parted with our readers at Danville, C. E., Feb. 24th, at the close of a very interesting series of meetings, which, in about two weeks, resulted in the conversion of between twenty and thirty to the christian religion, eighteen of whom were buried with Christ in baptism.

Monday, 25th, we returned to Melbourne, and spent a few hours very pleasantly in Bro. Gilman's family, and then left the deep snows of Canada, with its piercing cold weather, for the more genial clime in the States; but when we left the Queen's dominions, we parted with many warm and kind hearts, that will ever be remembered with pleasure.

On our way, we stopped all night at Island Pond, and the next morning, the 26th, we went on to Bryant's Pond, a pleasant village, sixty-two miles from Portland, where we remained till Saturday, March 2d, and held meetings in the Baptist house, which were well attended by attentive congregations. The truth is spreading in this section, and several are rejoicing in the "blessed hope." There is an open door here for preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and many hearts are ready to welcome it. We trust that the seed sown will spring up and bear fruit to the glory of God. We found a good home in Bro. Bryant's kind family.

Saturday, 2d inst., we went on to Portland, and received another hearty welcome in Bro. Brooks' kind family, where Zion's pilgrims ever find a pleasant home. Here we also met our dear Bro. Hemenway, a faithful and successful laborer in the gospel ministry, and enjoyed a pleasing and profitable interview together. We are thankful for such privileges; they are cheering and encouraging, while engaged in the christian warfare.

The church in Portland have hired a pleasant new hall, considerably larger than their former place of worship. The hall is also pleasantly located in the heart of the city. Our meetings here were very interesting, and their hall was very much crowded, especially in the evening, when the aisles were filled by those who could get no seats. During our remarks on Spiritualism, several important questions were asked, which added new interest to the subject. A Mr. Woodman, an intelligent lawyer, and a leader among the Spiritualists, made several inquiries, which caused the truth to shine the brighter. There is a wide field open in this city for faithful labors in the Lord. The people have an ear to hear, and many seem anxious to know the right way. The prospect looks brighter here than it has for several years. The children of the Lord have reason to take courage and press the battle more strongly than ever, looking for happy results.

A CARD.

"WILL ALL MEN LIVE ETERNALLY?" If any clergyman, or other respectable gentleman in Portland, will sustain the affirmative of the foregoing question in oral debate, he is invited to inform Eld. Miles Grant, Boston, Mass., who will endeavor to support the negative. The preliminaries to be arranged by the parties.

P. S. If preferred, he will meet any combined number of gentlemen, provided he is allowed half the time.

We have not yet received any acceptance. We give our brethren liberty to make the same offer in other places, if they think best. All proper means should be employed to arouse the people to search the Scriptures, which are most sadly neglected by the masses of the present age, while they are all absorbed in the politics and news of the day.

Monday, March 4th, we returned home, and enjoyed a good class meeting at the Crisis office in the evening. Several prominent members of different churches in Boston have become deeply interested in the great truths that distinguish us as a people, and are not ashamed to confess them openly. Things look encouraging for the church in Boston. The audiences are large and intelligent. The truth is spreading prosperously. Several more are almost persuaded to stand up boldly in its defense. We shall hope to see much good accomplished at our anticipated general conference.

Tuesday, 5th. Before noon of to-day, we received intelligence of the sickness of our aged mother. At three o'clock P. M., we took the express train for Hartford, where we arrived about half-past seven o'clock in the evening, and then by private conveyance, rode twenty-five miles over a bad road, arriving at the home of our childhood, about three o'clock in the morning. We found mother quite feeble and confined to her bed, but fully resigned to the Lord, and anxious to sleep in Jesus. We sung to her of the "land of rest," while she shouted "glory." After a season of prayer and weeping, at early dawn, we bid her farewell till Jesus comes, when, by the grace of God, we intend to be ready to meet her in the everlasting kingdom. For many years she has loved the "blessed hope," and delighted in the ways of the Lord. Though we say it, the Lord has blessed us with a kind, christian mother, whose counsel and prayers have been of more value to us than thousands of gold and silver. She now sleeps in Jesus, but is embalmed in our memory. Thank the Lord for a christian mother.

Wednesday, 6th. At the dawn of day, we turned in sadness from our sick mother, and had a lonely ride back to Hartford, thence to Worcester, from there to Blackstone, to fill our next appointment. This is a new field of labor, and a rather hard soil to cultivate; but the Lord stirred up a goodly number to search the Scriptures, to see what they do teach, and several appeared to be satisfied the popular theology of these last days is based on "fables," and no longer deserves the support of those who love the truth. They were astonished at the plainness and simplicity of the word of the Lord, as revealed in the Bible, and rejoiced that their eyes had been opened to see the light. We trust they will go on in the way that grows brighter and brighter till the perfect day. There are a few good brethren and sisters in Blackstone, who are endeavoring to "stand up for Jesus" and his word. The last evening we were there, several asked questions publicly, which assisted in giving more light on the great truths revealed to us from the Lord. Among others, a Spiritualist made quite an effort to entangle us in our talk, but the track of truth was too straight for him, and he made a sad failure. After making several unsuccessful attempts to show that man never dies, and thus prove that Satan told the truth to our first parents, when he contradicted the Lord, and said, "Ye shall not surely die," we then urged him to bring one passage of Scripture to show that any part of man is alive and conscious when his physical organism is dead. He stood several moments in deep thought, blushed with confusion, and sat down, as we think every other man will be obliged to do in a similar situation.

Several prominent members of the Baptist church have embraced the glorious truths we love so well, and are resolved to let their light shine. We notice one fact in relation to all who receive the truths, which is, that they at once exclaim with joy, "My Bible is a new book to me; where it was before all dark and obscure, it is now plain and harmonious." "Now," say they, "we take great delight in studying the Scriptures; whereas before, they appeared so obscure and mystical we could not understand them, and hence had but little satisfaction in reading." We find this fact universal, and like young converts they think they can make every one else see it, because it is so plain, and are astonished at the cold indifference they meet from many who profess to love the Lord and his word. No matter how faithfully they have lived, or how long they have been in the service of the Lord, when they see, embrace and defend these truths, for believing which we are called heretics, and shut out of most of the houses of worship, they invariably say, "I enjoy myself better than ever before, take more delight in prayer and the Bible, and have a stronger love for Jesus." Why is this, if it is such damnable heresy as some suppose?

On the other hand, those who oppose these truths, after they have heard or had an opportunity to hear, become more and more worldly-minded, have less peace and joy, and less love for prayer and the Bible. We have observed this fact for some eighteen years, and as God's ways are "equal," we may expect the same result in all time. Knowing this as we do, we feel willing to be called infidel and heretic, and be looked upon with contempt for Jesus' sake, who received much greater reproach for us. It is a pleasure to suffer with and for such a friend.

Monday, March 11th, we returned to Boston, and soon after our arrival, we received a telegram stating that our dear mother was dead, and to be buried on Wednesday. In the evening we had an interesting class meeting at the Crisis Office. There have recently been some strong additions to our number, and they are active in the cause of the Lord, as all must be, if they would enjoy the christian religion, and be ready to meet Jesus at his coming.

Tuesday, 12th, in company with Bro. J. S. White and Mrs. Grant, we started for Torringford, Ct., to perform the last sad duties to a faithful mother, who is quietly sleeping in Jesus, awaiting the morn of the resurrection, when she will live again. As we laid her down in the lonely grave, in the country church-yard, among the friends of former days, we were comforted with the hope that Jesus is soon coming to end the works of death, and give back the christian fathers and mothers, companions, friends and lovely children, now sleeping in the embrace of death, and restore them to life and give them the eternal joys of a beautiful paradise, where sorrow's tears will flow no more; where mourning processions never move in gloomy silence to the sad tolling of the funeral bell; where the sable garments are exchanged for robes of white, and, instead of the requiem for the dead, is heard the glorious song of triumph as it echoes afar o'er the plains of glory, when the meek inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace, while unceasing ages roll their joyful rounds.

Fast and Pray.

As our approaching General Conference at Boston will be one of much importance, and as all wish to have the greatest amount of good accomplished possible, and as all our help must come from the Lord, we propose, that on Friday, April 5th, those who are interested will omit the evening meal, and spend the time in prayer to God, that he will make the coming meeting the most profitable and successful one we have ever held.

"Never Die."

BRO. GRANT:—Please give an exposition of John 11: 25, 26, and oblige yours truly, S. T. JOHNSON.

The two verses and their context, beginning at verse 23d, read as follows:—"Jesus saith unto her, thy brother shall rise again. Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day. Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?" It will be observed that the time under consideration is "the last DAY" when the resurrection is to take place. In the 25th verse Jesus speaks of the believers who are dead, and says they shall live. In the next verse, he informs Martha that the believers who are alive "at the last day," when he shall return to raise the dead believers, "shall never die." Paul is instructed to say, when speaking of the same events at the same time, that those who are alive when "the last trump . . . shall sound," will not "sleep," i. e., die, but shall "be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," and "be caught up together with them" . . . [the dead believers who are raised at that time] "to meet the Lord in the air."

From these Scriptures we learn that the christians, who are alive at the coming of Christ, will "never die," but be translated like Enoch and Elijah.

Kingdom of Christ yet Future.

BRO. GRANT:—I would like to have your opinion on Col. 1: 13. ORRIN MILLS.

The verse reads as follows:—"Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son." Some time since, we gave an exposition of this passage, but will give another for the benefit of those who did not have the Crisis, at that time. This text is sometimes presented to show that the kingdom of God is already set up, notwithstanding the many plain passages to the contrary. The word "translated," in Col. 1: 13, is from methisteemi, which is defined by Greenfield as follows: "To move from one place to another, remove, transfer; metonymy, to cause to pass from one mode of thinking to another, cause to change SIDES." The latter, we think, is the application in the text.

Is, the word rendered into, when used, as in this verse, "to denote purpose or object," is properly translated FOR. We cite a few examples where it is thus rendered: "For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning."—Rom. 15: 4. "And Jesus said unto him, No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."—Luke 9: 62. "The same came for a witness."—John 1: 7. "I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth."—Acts 13: 47. "Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught.—Luke 5: 4. "I am set for the defence of the gospel."—Phil. 1: 17. "He is profitable to me for the ministry."—2 Tim. 4: 11. "By faith, Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed."—Heb. 11: 8. "And the four angels were loosed, which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year."—Rev. 9: 15. "The leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations."—Rev. 22: 2. All can see what nonsense it would make to translate is by the word into, in the examples just cited.

In Col. 1: 13, Paul tells the Colossian brethren that by the help of our heavenly Father they have been delivered from the power of darkness, and have changed sides for the kingdom of his dear Son; i. e., for this "purpose or object," they have changed sides; to obtain the coming kingdom.

☞ Do all in your power to teach your children self-government. If a child is passionate, teach him by gentle means to curb his temper. If he is sulky, charm him out of it by frank good humor. If indolent, accustom him to exertion, and train him so as to perform even onerous duties with alacrity. In short, give your children the habit of overcoming their besetting sins.

For the Crisis.

Is any part of Man Immortal?

No. 3.

Does human reason teach it?

SOCRATES, the Master and martyr of Moral Philosophers, after discoursing upon the condition of the "immortal souls" of the righteous and wicked after death; alleging that "a suitable destiny hurls into Tartarus" the incorrigibly wicked, while "those who have lived an eminently holy life are yet free from hades and dwell on the upper parts of the earth," thus proceeds: "To affirm positively that these things are exactly as I have described them, does not become a man of sense"; and adds, "It is right to allure ourselves with such things, as with enchantments; and though I should be mistaken, I gain at least thus much, that the expectation makes me less uneasy while I live, and my error will die with me." While holding the fatal hemlock in his hands, he thus discourses: "If the common expression be true, that death conveys us to those regions which are inhabited by the spirits of departed men, will it not be unspeakably happy to escape from the hands of mere nominal judges, and appear before those who truly deserve the name, such as Minos and Rhodamonthus, and to associate with all who have maintained the cause of truth and rectitude? Is it possible for you to look upon this as an unimportant journey? Is it nothing to converse with Orpheus, and Homer, and Hesiod? Believe me, I would cheerfully suffer many a death on condition of realizing such a privilege. With what pleasure could I leave the world to hold communion with Palamedes, Ajax, and others, who like me have had an unjust sentence pronounced against them! Then would I explore the wisdom of Ulysses Lysippus, and that illustrious chief who led out the best army of the Greeks against the city of Troy. Nor should I be condemned to death for indulging, as I have done here, in free inquiry."

All this hope after all the pleasure of anticipation, however, was an uncertain illusion, for he adds to his judges: "I go to death, yea to life; but that which is for the best the Divinity only knows"; or, as others record: "I am going out of the world, and you are to continue in it; but which of us has the better part, is a secret to every one but God."

We have only to compare these views and this hope and language with that of the most ancient of "the holy men of old" taught of God, to observe the assurance that a knowledge of divine revelation gives to the certainties of the future, and the hopes that it inspires man in faith to apprehend. Compare the language and hope of Job, who did not entertain the thought of the soul's immortality or of man's conscious existence in death, and whose faith rested in the resurrection of the dead, and the immortality of his Redeemer, with that of this wisest and best of ancient philosophers. Job, 14th chap. entire, and Job 19: 25—27.

The "reason" of most men in the days of Socrates did not teach them the doctrine he endeavored to inculcate, as seen in the following sentence: "Can this soul of ours, when separated from the body, be immediately dispersed and destroyed, as most men assert?"

PLATO, the disciple of Socrates, taught and endeavored to believe that the souls of men existed from eternity;" and also in the doctrine of "the migration of souls through various human and brute forms," with various other absurdities, which if his reason believed and taught him, the reason of other men, and even of his own disciples, equally as enlightened and as wise, rejected and refused to be instructed in. But Plato's reason faltered in his own faith and doctrine. Bishop Whately, in his work on "Scripture Revelations concerning a Future State," thus writes: "Among the heathen philosophers, Plato has been appealed to, as having believed in a future state of reward and punishment, on the ground that the passages in his works in which he inculcates the doctrine, are much more numerous than those in which he expresses his doubt of it. I cannot undertake to say that such is not the case; for the arithmetical mode (as it may be called,) of ascertaining a writer's sentiments, by counting the passages on opposite sides, is one which had never occurred to me; nor do I think it likely to be generally adopted. If, for instance, an author were to write ten volumes in defence of christianity, and two or three times to express his suspicion that the whole is a tissue of fables, I believe few of his readers would feel any doubt as to his real sentiments. When a writer is at variance with himself, it is usual to judge from the nature of the subject, and the circumstances of the case, which is likely to be his real persuasion, and which, the one he may think it decorous, or politically expedient to profess.

Now in the present case, if the ancient writers disbelieved a future state of reward and punishment, one can easily understand why they should nevertheless occasionally speak as if they did believe it; since the doctrine, they all agreed, was useful in keeping the multitude in awe. On the other hand, would they, if they did believe in it, ever deny its truth? or rather (which is more commonly the case in their works,) would they allude to it as a fable so notoriously and completely disbelieved by all enlightened people as not to be worth denying, much less refuting, any more than tales of fairies are by modern writers? The ancient heathens did but conjecture, without proof, respecting a future state. And then is this remarkable circumstance to be noticed in addition; that those who taught the doctrine (as the ancient heathen lawgivers themselves did, from a persuasion of its importance for men's conduct,) do not seem themselves to have believed what they taught, but to have thought merely of the expediency of inculcating this belief on the vulgar. It does not appear, however, that they had much success in impressing their doctrine on the most of the people; for though a state of future rewards and punishments was commonly talked of among them, it seems to have been regarded as little more than an amusing fable."

CICERO, at times, was truly eloquent in the advocacy of the doctrine of the soul's immortality. He puts this language into the mouth of Cato:—"For my own part, I feel myself transported with the most ardent impatience to join the society of my two departed friends, your illustrious fathers, whose characters I greatly respected, and whose persons I sincerely loved. Nor is this, my earnest desire, confined to those excellent persons alone, with whom I was formerly connected; I ardently wish to visit also those celebrated worthies, of whose honorable conduct I have heard and read much, or whose virtues I have myself commemorated in some of my writings. To this glorious assembly I am speedily advancing; and I would not be turned back in my journey, even on the assured condition that my youth, like that of Pelias, should be again restored. O, glorious day! when I shall retire from this low and sordid scene to assemble with the divine congregation of departed spirits; and not with those only whom I have just mentioned, but with my dear Cato, that best of sons and most valuable of men! It was my sad fate to lay his body on the funeral pile, when by the course of nature I had reason to hope he would have performed the same last office to mine. His soul, however, did not desert me, but still looked back on me in its flight to those happy mansions, to which he was assured I should one day follow him."

On another occasion he writes his true convictions of this subject: "I have read Plato's book (the Phaedon,) over again and again; but I know not how it comes to pass, so long as I am reading, I agree with it; but no sooner is the book out of my hands, than I begin to doubt whether man is immortal."

Did his reason teach and determine this matter to his own satisfaction? When he did endeavor to believe in the soul's immortality was it reason that instructed him, or Plato's book? The reason of the wise men of later ages did not teach them the doctrine of the immortality of man. There has been no uniformity of faith among men in respect to the doctrine, which would be inevitably the case if human reason taught it.

JULIUS CAESAR, one of the greatest and wisest of men who has lived in our world; a wise historian, an eloquent and fluent orator, a sagacious and patriotic statesman, and a calculating and successful general, instead of believing in the soul's immortality, affirmed his faith to be infidel; alleging that "the soul dies with the body, and that death is no evil," etc.

SENECA, too, writes: "I was pleasing myself with inquiring, yea, believing in the immortality (aeternitate) of the soul. I could easily fall in with the opinions of great men, promising rather than proving a most desirable thing. I gave up myself to the splendid illusion. I began to weary of myself, and to despise the remnant of my happy life, ready to enter upon that unbounded time,—the possession of a whole eternity,—when suddenly I was interrupted by the receipt of your letter, and lost so fine a dream." And at another time wrote—

"Chaos and hungry time devour us all,
Inevitable death the body kills,
Nor spares the soul."*

Waymarks.

The year 1860 was one of much interest to me in my pilgrimage, inasmuch as the truth seems advancing in all directions throughout the circuit of my travels, and the cause of Christ spreading. This is the height of my ambition. For this I pray, labor and preach. For this I work with my hands to get my bread, and preach on its strength. During the year we have held many excellent conferences, which left a healthful influence on all who united in them, and extended their influence far abroad. I have also visited about forty towns, and held meetings in most of them, and endeavored to speak words of comfort, of exhortation or instruction to the people in all, as I had opportunity. There is an increasing desire to hear the gospel of the kingdom by a portion of community.

Since the commencement of 1861 I have visited Brunswick, spent one Sunday, found the little church stedfast in the faith, waiting for the end of their trials when Jesus comes. I next visited Somerville, preached two [illegible], found quite an increase of numbers of believers. The Lord has greatly added to them the past year, and the heart of Bro. Chism is much cheered. Attended a protracted meeting in Yarmouth, which was very interesting and refreshing. Preached once in Freeport to an attentive audience. Spent one Sunday in Albion; found the few there active in the faith, and praying for the Lord's work to increase. It being stormy, we had no meeting. Bro. J. Carr was away on a preaching tour; he is doing well in the work. I next attended Mt. Vernon conference, which has been reported. It was very good.

March 1st, started for South Paris, where I had an appointment for the evening at the house of Bro. Knight. By request the Methodist minister had given out my appointment publicly the Sunday previously, and then changed his class meeting from Saturday evening to Friday evening, so it fell on the same evening. But we had a room full, they had two out. Preached in South Waterford the 3d, in the Universalist chapel, three times; had the largest audience out that has ever been there to hear Advent preaching; preached two evenings following. There are a few in that place still in the faith, and living for God and the kingdom to come; others have the theory, but not the works. There are a number in the place who are interested in the faith, and might be brought in if the brethren had strength to act in united energetic labor for God. Bro. and Sr. Whitman have been deeply afflicted recently by the death of their youngest son Francis. He was a fine boy, and much lamented by all his acquaintances. I missed him much from the family circle.

"How long shall death the tyrant reign?"

I visited ten families, and exhorted them what I could, and parted from them to go to Stoneham, taking Bro. S. Leonard with me. He is very feeble in body, but active in the work of the Lord. This is the third visit I have made to Stoneham. At the first, there were no meetings of worship and no preaching. I found only two praying families. I preached five times and left. On my second visit I found eight praying families, and some ten or twelve converted, several reclaimed, and Methodist preaching one fourth of the time, and an influence exerted against the Advent message. I preached five more times, and had the ears and hearts of nearly all. On my third visit I found Dr. Manning and wife decided converts to the faith; also several others who are christians, and many unconverted ones, believe the doctrine and are impressed with duty to God. Others are now opposed to our hope, being influenced by their leaders.

I found Bro. L. K. Lombard in this place, who assisted me in our meetings. He came to that place last summer, a young man just beginning to preach; has labored there and in various parts of the town in Lovell and Sweden to good effect, sowing seed which is springing up. Several came from six to twelve miles to hear me preach. Some stayed to the last, feeding on "the word of the kingdom." We had six meetings among them, visited fourteen families, and scattered some books and tracts. Our meetings were interesting. The Lord was truly with us. Nearly all the community are interested to hear us preach the good news of the coming reign of Christ, and I trust God will bring some of the unconverted to Christ for salvation. Bro. Lombard will continue to labor with them as he has opportunity, and although the battle sometimes waxes hot, and sectarian bigotry makes great strides, we will keep at "our specific work," leading sinners to Christ, and saints to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, still proclaiming, "Behold he cometh! go ye out to meet him." Let us try to "be wise as serpents and harmless as doves." Seek to use the choicest of words; speak them for God; live as the grace of God teaches, and look for Christ's appearing. Then he will give us eternal life.

For the Crisis.

To the Friends of the Poor.

I send you word, greeting. Many inquiries are made from time to time in regard to our Mission School. So now, as I am too weary to attend church this evening, I improve the moments as they fly, to answer them. In regard to Sr. Mathewson's letter and questions I will say, the Lord has wonderfully sustained us in this great and precious enterprise. Last September we buried from our sight our precious babe, which was a great affliction to us all, because she was a lovely child. Yet it was the Lord's will. There were other children who needed my care more than this child did; and in two weeks from her burial, I started a school with nine scholars. Since then we have fitted up sixty-one. We have a society formed, who meet every Wednesday, P. M., for the purpose of making clothes for these poor children.

I have visited many places in this city, into some of which it would hardly seem safe to enter. The colored family, in which so many have interested themselves, are now quite happy, though very poor. They look and are neat. We employ the mother to wash for us, so as to give her a chance to earn something for the[illegible] The children have now no shoes. I am [redacted] Sunday, and promised to fit her out. She came, went with us, and was much pleased. On inquiring into her circumstances, we found she had a mother and step-father, who compel her to beg for them, so they could have the money for drink! O yes, they will get heartily drunk. This poor child cannot read. I have taken her home with me a few days. She is a bright, smart, active child, and capable of learning and understanding. Is quite handy about house, etc., etc. So much for the highways and hedges. But to return to the school. Two of our scholars were baptized Sunday before last. We now have a prayer meeting at the close of school, especially for them, and they are truly interesting. In my next I will give you the plan on which our school is conducted. I have but little time to write, and what little I write I hope will be received as an answer to all those who have written me. Our wardrobe is getting rather low, and nine or ten children are to be fitted up.

Pray for the church here, for they are struggling hard, through poverty and many difficulties, to live and let their light shine. The sisters are truly faithful soldiers, and have taken hold with renewed energy, and whatever their hands find to do they do with their might. Yes, like good faithful children they put their shoulder to the wheel, and help bear this burden, which has nigh crushed me, because there was so much to do. Pray for us, ye prayerful ones, that God will give us strength according to our day. No more now. In love, waiting for Jesus.

Hattie B. Hastings.

Providence, R. I., March 17th, '61.

P. S. Just now we received a little box from Putnam, and we are truly thankful to the givers for its contents. We were sorry that no note or name accompanied it, for we all wanted to write a good long letter to that precious pair, whose faces were packed in so nicely. We thank you for your pictures. Your aged faces look familiar, but I cannot tell who you are. Do please let us know. H. B. H.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Torringford, Ct., March 10th, Sister Susannah Grant, mother of Bro. Miles Grant, aged eighty-eight years.

Our aged sister made a public profession of faith in Jesus and the gospel some ten years since, at which time she was baptized by Bro Mathewson. She enjoyed much of the divine presence in looking for the blessed hope and the appearing of her Savior. She looked for future life as the Bible teaches, through Christ only. To her, death was not "the gate to endless joys," nor

"The voice that Jesus sends,
To call us to his arms."

To her, the resurrection from the dead is the voice that Jesus will send to call her to his arms, and the gate to endless joys. As Jesus has said, "I will raise him up at the last day." She died in full faith that "when he who is our life shall appear," then will she "appear with him in glory."

Her funeral was attended in the Newfield church, where a discourse was delivered from Job 14: 14. The congregation was quite large for the occasion, and listened with apparent interest to the great doctrine of redemption through Christ our Life-giver. May the good Lord sanctify the event to all concerned, and aid them to be prepared for the blessed meeting on the morning of the resurrection. J. S. White.

Died, in Vernon, Vt., Feb. 20th, 1861, of consumption, Jane Stoddard, wife of John Stoddard, aged thirty-six years.

She left a companion and three children to mourn her loss. She gave good evidence to her friends that she was prepared for the event. Her hope was a Scriptural one—that she should live again forever, after the resurrection. H. Munger.

Summary of News.

[Advices of the 6th inst]

ITALY.

The bombardment of Civicello and Tronto commenced on the 20th ult. Gen. Tergola notified Cialdini that the works commenced against the citadel were a violation of the convention between him and Garibaldi, and he would bombard the city. Gen. Cialdini responded that for every inhabitant killed he would order an officer of the garrison of the citadel shot, and that he considers Tergola a rebel.

RUSSIA.

It is said the emancipation of the serfs will be formally proclaimed during Lent.

The Czar will soon give the project of a Constitution for Russia.

POLAND.

Warsaw presents a gloomy appearance, everybody wearing mourning. The Citizens' Committee had issued a proclamation requesting the maintenance of order. Over 100,000 persons attended the funeral of those killed in the late disturbance. Troops were kept within the barracks, and every thing was orderly. A petition was being signed for the re-establishment of the Polish Constitution.

Austria has sanctioned the re-establishment of the electoral law in Croatia.

Popular demonstrations were continually taking place at Rome.

The Times says the new Tariff bill of the United States establishes protective duties on a most extravagant scale, and the result will be to almost the absolute prohibition of imports from Europe, and will be more detrimental to the interests of America than to those of Europe.

[Advices of the 10th.]

All was quiet at Warsaw. It is stated that the number of persons killed by the troops in the recent outbreak was fifty-three.

The blockade of the citadel of Messina had been officially proclaimed, and hostilities commenced.

It was reported that Prince Napoleon is about to proceed to Turin to negotiate for the withdrawal of the French troops from Rome.

The London Times in reviewing Jefferson Davis' speech, says: "We have never read a speech so difficult to analyze and interpret."

INDIA.

The famine in the northwest Provinces has assumed a most serious character, and it was feared that it would exceed any thing of the kind yet experienced.

The failure of the spring crops appeared to be certain. The inhabitants in some sections were starving, four or five hundred dying daily.

FRANCE.

Paris, March 5th. The Moniteur contains a report, addressed by the Minister of Justice to the Emperor, on the subject of affairs of M. Mires.

In the French Chambers the following amendment to the address was proposed: "The hour has come for applying to Rome the wise system of non-intervention, and by the immediate withdrawal of the French troops, to leave Italy mistress of her own destiny."

Constantinople, March 2d. Serious disturbances prevail in the ministry. An altercation had taken place between the Grand Vizier and the Captain Pacha on financial matters. The latter disapproved of the recent policy of the Grand Vizier, and demanded new taxes on articles of luxury. The carrying out of the new law had been postponed. An answer had been delivered to the Grand Vizier's message.

Naples, March 7th. The official Journal notifies the blockade of the citadel of Messina. Hostilities have commenced. All foreign vessels have left Messina with the exception of those of America and England.

DOMESTIC.

From the South.—A dispatch from Washington says of Fort Pickens:

"A collision at Fort Pickens is apprehended as very likely to occur. If the 400 soldiers on board the Brooklyn are landed safely, according to the order recently sent from the Navy and War Department, Lieut. Slemmer's garrison will be in a condition to resist any attack of the Revolutionists, even if conducted by Gen. Bragg, whose military skill is not doubted. There are three sloops-of-war and the Wyandotte to support it in case of assault, and their attacks would tell with effect upon the other forts now possessed by the State authorities. It is practicable to reinforce Fort Pickens further, if necessary, without serious difficulty, and no purpose has been entertained here of abandoning it."

A gentleman who reached Montgomery on the 11th, from Pensacola, says that four runaway negroes, belonging to citizens of Florida, went to Fort Pickens recently and demanded the protection of Lieut. Slemmer. That officer promptly returned them to their rightful owners.

The Richmond Whig says that "it is a melancholy fact that a larger amount of mob violence has been developed in Virginia since the secession movement began than in the whole previous life time of the State. There has been manifested an intolerance of spirit never before known; and, what is more, such intolerance is evidently on the increase, and bodes no good to law and order and to the peace and prosperity of the citizens of the State; and if not checked and repressed, and that without delay, it will lead to riot, revolution, and fraternal bloodshed."

The Tribune's Washington correspondent says that the President still withholds the order for the withdrawal of Major Anderson from Fort Sumter.

The United States ship, John Adams, has been ordered home from the East Indies.

A Montgomery dispatch to the Tribune states that if the Federal troops are not withdrawn from the forts they will be driven out. Ambassadors are to be sent to all the Democratic Conventions of the free states except New England. H. V. Johnson and Mr. Slidell are going to New York to treat with Messrs. Cagger and Dean Richmond. Threats of coercion are laughed at while Washington is kept under arms.

The Washington correspondent of the World says that private dispatches received from Charleston to-night (Thursday) say that Major Anderson is still in the fort, over which the American flag is flying in the stiff breeze, and no preparations are being made for evacuating it.

New York, March 24th. The Herald's Washington correspondent says the President issued an order yesterday to Major Anderson to put his command in readiness to evacuate Fort Sumter on the arrival of a war steamer. Col. Lamon has been sent to Fort Sumter with an order that if any attempt was made to prevent the evacuation, Major Anderson should remain in the fort and open his batteries upon the city.

It is reported that a steamer has been sent by the Secretary of the Navy to Fort Sumter. Major Anderson is to salute his flag and embark.

The Cabinet have dispatches from Lieut. Slemmer, at Fort Pickens, stating that he is nearly out of provisions, and that he must be supplied soon or be shall have to abandon the fort. General Bragg has notified him that no supplies can be landed until permission is had from Jefferson Davis. The Brooklyn, Sabine, St. Louis and Wyandotte were off the fort. The Cabinet are considering what policy to pursue.

The Herald's Charleston dispatch says that Major Anderson declines receiving verbal orders to retire, and the policy of allowing him to leave with the honors of war was being discussed.

From the Evening Post's correspondence:

"The friends of Governor Houston, who are here from Texas, say that the old warrior will battle against secession as long as there is a shot in his locker or a bone in his body. He will resist the traitors constitutionally while he may, but he will resist them until overpowered. He will not yield or surrender. He regards himself as legitimately the Governor of Texas; the Convention which opposes him was chosen for the single purpose of passing an ordinance of secession, and and when that was done it had no more rights.

The people of Texas, even those who voted in favor of secession, never contemplated the overturn of the State government. Yet the traitors have proceeded to nullify the authority and laws of the State as well as those of the general government. Old Sam won't allow them if he can help it.

His platform always was "The Constitution, the Union, and the enforcement of the laws; and, unlike many who have professed themselves his followers, he will stick to his text.

Mr. Cobb, the former representative from Alabama, and who was for a long time a sound Unionist, has at length accepted the new constitution of the Confederate States. He will hereafter take his chance with the secessionists."

The following are the latest dispatches in regard to Fort Sumter:

"Washington, Saturday, March 23d.—I have just received a dispatch from a gentleman in Charleston who visited Fort Sumter this morning. He states that he found Major Anderson taking an inventory of everything preparatory to evacuating the post. He is, it seems, allowed to exercise his own judgment as to the method of leaving.

The Baltimore Exchange publishes the following, saying it is from an officer stationed at Fort Sumter, and may be implicitly relied on:—

"Fort Sumter, March 18.—We are now making active preparations to leave, and there is consequently much bustle and confusion—some of the officers being busily engaged in making up the accounts, and others in getting everything ready. We shall certainly leave here on Saturday. Major Anderson is ordered to Newport Barracks, Kentucky, and Capt. Foster is directed to report himself to the Department at Washington.

"A New Orleans correspondent of the New York World closes a long letter on the state of affairs in Louisiana with the following suggestive paragraph:

"The state of feeling here among the people is a jumble; there being a strong party opposed to secession, in fact, a majority in the city and State, yet nearly all are ready to fight against coercion. Most seem to hate the North; some desire an immediate war, opening of the slave trade, free tariff, direct taxation, State sovereignty; others violently oppose these measures. Chaos seems about to come again, so far as the human mind is related; only one thing unites all, that is, laying the blame of all this at the door of the North, taking no degree of wrong to themselves."

The Charleston Courier states that the batteries bearing on the ship channel are of the heaviest kind, and that they are now in a high state of preparation and ready for any force that may be sent against them. It believes the re-inforcement of Fort Sumter an impossibility. It estimates that there are three thousand highly disciplined troops in the various fortifications.

The following passage from a Mexican letter in the New Orleans Crescent is significant:

"The most serious danger at present impending over Mexico, and which more nearly touches us than any other, is the threatened irruption into this section of the legions which Texas seems to be collecting on the Rio Grande. We could calmly observe the approach of ten thousand United States soldiers, for they are under bonds to keep the peace of nations; and beside they are men who have no thinking and plotting to do for themselves; but one thousand Texans are a far different matter. They are all thinkers, and most of them take the liberty of acting for themselves. They all consider it their destiny to conquer Mexico, and whenever they are near this border they are certain to be planning expeditions to extend the area of freedom. The Governor of Tamaulipas has asked the President of the Republic for a large force to be placed on this frontier as an army of observation, and we are looking for the arrival of considerable detachments of soldiers to meet the emergency."

Interesting from Canada.—We clipped the following from the Boston Daily Herald of April 26th:—

"Through many parts of Canada, the excitement in reference to the second coming of Christ is being again revived, and new prophets of the Miller school are springing up, who assume to have discovered that the Savior's second appearance on the earth will positively take place in 1868. Quite a remarkable lecture upon the subject has recently been delivered by the Rev. Mr. Baxter, the Episcopal clergyman from Owandaga, C. W. The reverend gentlemen brought up quite a series of data to defend his theory, and mentioned no less than thirteen different chronological periods whose termini, according to the revelation, would be brought to an end in 1868. Mr. B. also advanced the idea that Christ would come in 1863 and remain in his judgment seat between heaven and earth, while the one hundred and forty-four thousand were sealed, when he would descend and the seventh seal of the revelation would be opened, and the Millenium begin. He said we were at the last period of time allotted to the sixth seal, and described Louis Napoleon as the anti-Christ, referred to in the Revelations, as setting up himself in dominion over the whole earth."

Effect of Missions.—When Miss Fisk of the Persian mission went to Oroomiah, in the service of the American Board, seventeen years ago, to labor as a teacher among the Nestorian women, there was scarcely one who had any just conception of the truths of the gospel; but when she left last year, to revisit her native land, she had the great pleasure of partaking of the Lord's Supper with ninety-eight women, mostly such as had once been her pupils, many of whom are now teachers in various parts of that country.

General Conference in Boston.

A General Religious Conference will be held in Chapman Hall, Boston, commencing Tuesday evening, at 7 o'clock, April 9th, and continuing each day and evening through the week and over the Lord's day.

The object and design of this meeting is not so much for the passing of resolutions or the transaction of ecclesiastical business, as for the advancement of pure christianity among us in true revival and reformation. What we as a body want and need, is not disputation or hobbies, but earnest, direct labor for the immediate promotion of the work of God in awakening the careless and indifferent, stirring up the luke-warm, and quickening into life and activity the too sluggish energies of the whole church in the personal work of preparation to meet the Master, who is before the door. In fact, we are too dull, too barren, and want more faith, zeal, love—more religion. And not only is it to be hoped that our meeting may prove a great means of grace to the waiting saints, but our hearts' desire is to see sinners converted to God, and thus made ready for the approaching great day of doom. Let those, then, who are asleep, awake and be strong. Let the righteous gird on their armor. Let sinful men be alarmed. All signs point to the speedy coming of the Lord, and it is high time that those who look for him be up and doing with their might their last solemn work. Let earnest and faithful prayer go up to heaven for the success of this conference. Ministers of Christ, plead with him for the spiritual interest of the meeting, and come to it in humility and faith, that our God who is now working among our churches in various places, may also pour his Spirit upon the worshipers at Chapman Hall. We invite our dear brethren and sisters from abroad to come. Come, all who can. Provision will be made by the friends for all needful entertainment.

A Note to our Subscribers.

In transcribing names of subscribers from our old to our new subscription book, we may have made some mistakes. Elder Miles Grant will commence a series of meetings in Plainfield, Ct., on Thursday evening, April 4th, and continue each evening through the week and over the Sabbath. Brethren from Bristol, Southington and adjoining towns we hope will be present to assist in the meeting. As this is almost a new field, we shall not be able to accommodate all we should be glad to, and brethren will be under the necessity of providing mostly for themselves at this meeting.

For the Crisis.

Heed the Pilot.

Life's voyage with[illegible] is thickly strewn,
And trouble's [illegible] roll high;
Yet though the [illegible] sometimes looks calm,
There's always [danger] nigh.
Unless we heed [the P]ilot well,
And trust [his guidi]ng hand,
Our bark will [never] reach the shore,
Though bright [the] promised land.

We've scarcely [launc]hed upon the sea,
We've scarce[ly] sails unfurled,
Ere we behold glittering tide
Called "Pl[easures] of this world."
We fain would [steer] our ship that way,
We'd taste [the] pleasures rare,
But hark! [he]ar our Pilot say
It leads to [dea]th,—beware!

Next, temp[ting] o'er the distant wave,
Appears [a] crown,
With man[y] [st]ering for the prize,—
Earth's [hon]or and renown;
And but [J]esus at the helm,
We [sho]ught turn our course,
And lear[n to]o late that worldly fame
Is but [d]eceitful dross.

The go[ddess] Wealth now hails in sight,
We [see] her smiles to court;
Our C[apta]in warns,—"With her on board,
We ne'er sail into port."
We [see] a stranger, sick and poor,
De[spise]d we'd pass him by,
Our [Capt]ain cries, "as unto him
Ye do ye unto me!"

[Whi]le toiling in the narrow way,
[We] meet on every side
[The] venom of the slanderer's tongue,
[A]nd scorners us deride.
[Te]mpted on every side, perplexed,
Without His guiding hand,
[W]e soon should lose the path that leads Unto the "promised land."

For the Crisis.

THE COMING STRUGGLE
Between the Church and the Powers of Darkness:
SHOWING THE MISSION AND DESTINY OF SPIRITUALISM.

No. 7.

But this is not God's way of fulfilling prophecy, for then it would not be "the sure word of prophecy" nor as a "light that shineth." If we insist upon a past fulfillment we are left to "catch at a straw" and wander in the mazes of doubt and uncertainty in finding its application; but if we inquire concerning the prospect of a future fulfillment, we behold a miracle-working power manifest in every part of christendom and other portions of the world. And though we do not yet see them organised politically, nor carrying out any of the features of the two-horned beast; yet their plans and purposes for the future answer to all the particular features of the work of the two-horned beast, the image, its union of church and state, its attempts to suppress all other religion except its own, and all the other features of the prophecy as the following quotations will show:

Henry C. Wright in a lecture delivered in Buffalo, said, "Oh! this system of God worship, how it has desolated the earth." He said also that "the mission of the Spiritualists was eventually to break down all churches." He says concerning the future of Spiritualism in his work entitled "The Errors of the Bible":—"It may seem presumptuous to say it, yet a new kingdom is at hand. In this New Dispensation, to know the constitution and laws of our being will be the single aim of all the true and wise."—p. 29. "To the question, 'What shall we do to inherit eternal life?' the coming kingdom will answer, 'Know thyself and be true to thyself.'"—p. 30. "In this coming kingdom God will be worshiped solely by the compliance of human beings with the laws of their nature." p. 30. "The system of praising and worshiping God by singing and praying, by keeping holy times and places, and the performance of rites and ceremonies will pass away, for such is but a dramatic exhibition of God and man. Men will no more look to Christ and Calvary. This circumstantial Dispensation must pass away. It is founded on fiction and not on fact: on the phantom that human beings can be saved from their spiritual maladies by some power exterior to themselves. Of all that mighty fabric erected by the energy of eighteen hundred years upon the foundation of Vicarious Atonement, and the doctrine that a just God can save the guilty at the expense of the innocent, not one stone shall be left upon another. The foundation will be swept away, and the whole temple, so far as it rests on that doctrine, must fall. God as he is revealed in the Bible must yield to God as he is manifested in nature. I say to all, look not to the past or passing dispensations that are based to a considerable extent on fiction, for regeneration and progress; but fix your eyes on the kingdom that is coming, whose base is the facts and immutable laws of nature."—pp. 31—33. "In the future of this world men will confess that the Bible errs, or they will seek for it another meaning and create a new Bible, as has been often done and is now doing. [illegible] as soon as the new ideas are established, the Bible, whatever be its present received meaning, will be made to conform to a new, popular idea, whatever it may be. The authority of books will cease. [illegible]

[illegible] Boston, April [illegible], 1850, Mrs. Sp[illegible] said:—"[illegible] has not done its work yet—it has a greater one to do. It will soon have a controlling power over government. Your government will never be elevated till your religion is revolutionized." She said at another time,—"As christianity took the place of Judaism, so Spiritualism will take the place of christianity; and christianity, having had its day, will go and lie down in the tomb beside Judaism, and its name be recorded in the category among the things that were. There are no people in the world so well prepared to receive Spiritualism as the Christian sects."

According to Dr. T. L. Nichols, a spirit, purporting to be J. C. Calhoun, says, the object of these communications is "to draw mankind together into harmony." Another claiming to be the late W. E. Channing says,—"To unite mankind." The Spiritual Eclectic says,—"For ourselves we accept this new revelation as one which is utterly to revolutionize and destroy existing institutions of all kinds—political, social and religious—and that speedily. They are all death-struck, and must soon give place to a divinely (?) constituted order of things." Says the Christian Spiritualist in speaking of the mission of mediums,—"When wars and revolutions have prepared the way, they will go forth to heal the nations, to establish political and religious freedom (?) and to bring into unity all people: to humble all that are exalted, and to bring down those who are lifted up." May God grant me grace to be among those who are "lifted up" against Spiritualism in that day, though I be "humbled" unto death. Says the Spiritual Telegraph,—"We feel that our advance will be irresistible, and our conquests speedy and sure. To Spiritualists is committed the gospel of the present age." A development among the Spiritualists called the "Angel Movement," proposes "an entire overthrow of the existing external order of things, both in church and state, and the entire reconstruction of society, after the laws of divine (?) order, in such a manner as will realize the ancient predictions concerning the Millennium and the kingdom of heaven on earth."

At a Convention held in Rutland, Vt., June 25th, 1848, the following preamble and resolution were offered by A. J. Davis:—"Whereas, the historical fact is undeniable, that novel signs and mysterious manifestations have been intimately associated with the inception and subsequent inauguration of every moral dispensation; therefore, Resolved, that we hospitably welcome all the well ascertained phenomena of so-called modern Spiritualism; furthermore, Resolved, that while publicly avowing our unqualified confidence in such well ascertained phenomena as being both timely indications of a new era, etc."

Thus the Spiritualists claim, according to the teachings of the spirits, that their movement being introduced and supported by the invisible powers is like that of Christ and of Moses, a new "era" or "dispensation;" and considering its origin and continual support by miraculous power, they regard its mission as authoritative and lack only the power in order to the manifestation of that authority. This view of Spiritualism is not confined to the few among them, but it is everywhere taught by the spirits and believed by the Spiritualists. It is prosecuted by Mr. Davis more particularly in the following:—"The world is replete with evidences that Philosophy and Theology, Reason and Superstition, Religion and Republicanism, Liberty and Slavery, Truth and Error, are about to commence a sanguinary battle—a battle to be fought first in men's souls, and then in the sanctuaries and congressional halls of sects and nations. This change shall bring the reorganisation of society, which will be the commencement of the kingdom of heaven on earth."—Great Har. Vol. 1, p. 211. Mr. Davis claims to have seen from High-Rock, Lynn, a "Spiritual Congress," consisting of many thousand spirits. Some of them left the assembly, he says, and came to him and told him among other things that "men have commented on the contents of the Bible with a gaudy show of skillful erudition. But the true commentary is now being written. When completed it will be found to be a New Dispensation: an era of psychological developments and spiritual progress." He was assured, that this New Dispensation would be inaugurated "When they shall have discovered out of all of the races of men, twelve Teachers of Philosophy and enough media (mediums) to awaken the advocates of sacred superstitions from the delusive sleep which has befallen them."

Says H. B. Storer,—"Those who are now most cautious in the expression of their sentiments will soon become mouth-pieces for the expression of sentiments most radical and revolutionary. . . . . . Antagonism, opposition will be the order of progress for a long time to come."—Spir. Regr. p. 12. Says Uriah Clark,—"We would insist on asserting Spiritualism as adequate to cover the broad ground of all human needs, embracing all that is good and true in the past, present, and future; the life of all progress, reform, philosophy, religion and revelation."—Regr. p. 18. [illegible] Bible is [illegible]

"seducing spirits," what would probably be our fate if they had the power to "rule or ruin" in their hands? Says Mrs. Uriah Clark,—"Let the earth of materialism quake from its centre, and the Pompeiis and Herculaneums be buried deep; and over their ruins shall rise the New Jerusalem with another song of peace and good will."—Spir. Regr. Says the Register,—"The time is coming when opposing priest and people shall pile in with the gathering ranks of spiritual progress. Another Pentecost shall see thousands born in a day. This generation shall yet realize the light foretold by ancient seers and sages, 'Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, sound the alarm,' 'They shall come from the east, the west, the north and the south'! Many shall come in the midst of private griefs and disasters, sorrows and deaths; or it may be in the midst of revolutions, rocking thrones and empires, or dread calamities, sweeping continents with consternation and alarm. . . . Readers of the Register, join with us in echoing the harmonic sounds of the everlasting gospel and in preparing for the great conflict of the ages."—p. 23. A writer in the Spiritual Telegraph, under the head of "Practical Spiritualism, Purposes and Plans," remarks,—"For the last four or five years a movement has been going forward comparatively unobserved by the public at large, whose central purpose is no less than the entire regeneration of the whole human race. It aims, in short, at the establishment of a new, social order on the earth, through whose mediatorial harmony ALONE the Divine truth and its good can descend in blessing, only upon and into, a waiting and responsive race. Another purpose of this movement is the establishment of new system of government. It is a combination of the two elements of Monarchy and Republicanism, making therefore (partly because of the combination, and partly for other reasons) a new idea in government. It has already matured its plans to quite an extent. All these things grow out of a New Church,—a church of principle, not of dogmas. This church is to be both interior and exterior, or individual and organic. It is to reconcile both the Catholic and Protestant phases of the religious idea, not overlooking the three great religions (See Rev. 16: 13) which dogmatic Christianism does not recognize, viz.: Hindooism, Mohammedanism and Judaism. It is the grand unitizing church of the spiritual age and blends into harmony the antagonized elements of the analytic ages. It is the mother of all institutions for external uses—therefore the mother of the States, and in the combination takes place the UNION OF CHURCH AND STATE."

From the above quotations we learn,—

1. That the Spiritualists uniformly expect a general revolution throughout the world which will bring about the overthrow of existing institutions, political, social, and religious.

2. That a "reconstruction of society" will follow, based on a new philosophy and new religion with a "union of Church and State"—the church at the head and the "mother of all institutions."

3. That this "reconstruction of society" is looked for by them as the "setting up of the kingdom of heaven on earth," or the "New Jerusalem," or the "Coming Kingdom," or "The New Dispensation," and will be regarded by them as "the realization of those ancient predictions concerning the Millennium."

4. That in this New Dispensation, God, as he is revealed in the Bible, must yield to God as he is revealed in nature, when all singing and praying as acts of divine worship must cease, and when those who shall "exalt" or "lift up" themselves against these things shall be "humbled" or "brought down." And I will now proceed to show by quotations from them,

5. That in this reconstruction of society the ruling powers—the advocates of Spiritualism—will claim the earth as theirs by divine right, when all must yield up their deeds and titles and the land shall be distributed as an inheritance to such as are loyal to this new religion and its pretensions; in imitation of the work of Christ in setting up the true kingdom of heaven.

6. That at the head of this New Dispensation there will be a personage of wonderful wisdom and miraculous power looked for by them as "The Coming Man" who will proceed to carry out the work of Christ at his coming, in subduing the world to himself, and will thus become the false Christ of Matt., the Man of Sin of Thess., and the Dragon of Rev. 16: 13, and 20: 1.

7. That with him there will be "twelve principal mediums" called by Davis "Twelve Teachers of Philosophy" answering to twelve false apostles; in imitation of the twelve true apostles associated with the true Christ in the true kingdom of heaven upon earth.

At the Convention held in Rutland, Vt., one resolution reads:—"Resolved, That the earth, like the air and light, belongs in common to the children of men upon it . . . . therefore all laws authorizing and sustaining private property in land for the purpose of speculation, and which prevent men and women from possessing any land without paying for it, are as unjust as [illegible] forever repealed." This presents a specious justification for the demand upon all to give up their claims to land; but then it would be left to the ruling power to fix laws regulating its distribution, which of course would be made to none but such as are loyal to this ruling power. But as this power would be a counterfeit for Christ's coming and kingdom, no christian could recognize their right to the land, nor accept of a claim from them; hence they would be treated as outcasts and rebels. Let us beware how we seek to heap up treasures here which must finally be grasped by the enemies of God.

Evening Shadows.—No. 2.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"Wo to thee that spoilest, and thou was not spoiled; and dealest treacherously, and they dealt not treacherously with thee. When thou shalt cease to spoil, thou shalt be spoiled; and when thou shalt make an end to deal treacherously, they shall deal treacherously with thee."—Isa. 33: 1.

Whether the above prophecy was designed for the last moments of the Pope, "the man of sin," who has claimed to be the God-appointed vicegerent sitting in the only true church or temple of God, I will not say positively; but facts in the history of this succession of men prove that they have assumed divine prerogatives, as I have quoted from the works of Roman authors in former articles; and dealt treacherously and spoiled nations not a few, is now a mere puppet, fallen to rise no more forever. The following article presents a very deplorable condition of things in the Roman Catholic Paradise:—

"There is now great distress at Rome. Every article of food is at famine prices. A few days ago the Chapter of the church of San Lorenzo assembled for the purpose of opening the box placed at one of the entrances to receive the 'Peter Pence,' when they found it filled with slips of paper containing the words—'We want Victor Emmanuel King of Italy,' and similar sentences. Beggars assail the passers-by at every step. A French soldier, who refused to give up his soup to a beggar a day or two since, was run through the body by the latter; and Bishop Meller on quitting the doorway of his palace was set on by a group of robbers, and stripped of every thing he had about him, even to his Episcopal ring. O what a purgatory has the city of saints become, when even the children of their so-called Holy Mother rob their once revered and boasted Holy Fathers! How true the language of inspiration—'He who smote the people in wrath with a continual stroke; he that ruleth the nations in anger is persecuted and none hindereth.'"

Lift thy head, poor pilgrim; land ahead! The breeze freshens! The morn will soon break and usher in the long sought rest! Suffer a little longer. Keep ready. We shall soon hear the jubilant peal sounding deliverance to our dear sleeping ones. Amen.

"Our dearest ones shall live again,
A countless, tearless throng,
To wake creation's voice anew,
And swell the choral song."

A Lady's Talk with the Pope of Rome.

BY FREDERIKA BREMER.

I saw at the further end of an oblong, light, and very simply furnished room, a man of stout but handsome figure, standing at a writing table, dressed in a long white garment, with scarlet lapels and cap. I made one low courtesy at the door, another in the middle of the room, in obedience to the Pope's sign to me to advance, and yet a third as I approached him and took my stand on the same little carpet with him, which I did in accordance with his friendly indication of his will, (for such persons as do not kneel to the Pope, are required by the ceremonial to make three courtesies or bows.)

The portraits of the Pope are in general like him, but his full, short, and broad countenance has, when seen more nearly, less expression of kindness, and considerable more of self-will and temper, than the portraits exhibit. The glance of the blue eye is lively, but not profound, and is deficient in earnestness. The complexion and physique generally indicate the best of health, a good appetite—and a good cook.

The Pope cast his eye on a written paper which he held in his hand, and having inquired about my country and place of residence, added, "You have written somewhat?"

Myself—Yes, your Holiness; novels of domestic life—more properly descriptions of life, but in the form of novels.

The Pope—But you are a Catholic?

Myself—No, your Holiness—not a Roman Catholic.

The Pope—Then you must become one. There is no completeness or consequence out of the Catholic Church.

Myself—Permit me, your Holiness, to ask a question.

The Pope—Yes, ask it.

Myself—I love, with my whole heart, our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. I believe in his divinity; in his redeeming efficacy for me and the whole world; I will alone obey and serve him. Will your Holiness not acknowledge me a christian?

The Pope—For a christian? Most certainly. But—

Myself—And as a member of the Church of Christ?

The Pope—Yes, in a certain sense; but—but then people must acknowledge as true everything which the Church says and enjoins. You ought not, in the meantime, to believe that the Pope sends to hell all who do not acknowledge the infallibility of the Catholic Church. No; I believe that many persons of other creeds will be saved by living according to the truth which they acknowledge.

Myself—It delights me exceedingly to hear this from your Holiness—because I have cherished the hope of finding in your Holiness a more righteous judge, as regards these questions, than in many other Catholics, who say: "You are not a christian you cannot be saved if you do not, in all respects, believe as we and our Church do."

The Pope—In this they are wrong. But you see, my daughter, people should be able to give an account of their christian belief; not belief alone in generals, but belief in the separate parts of a doctrine. It is already something to believe in the second person of the Godhead, and in his incarnation; but it is necessary also to believe in the institutions which he founded on earth, otherwise there can be in reality no faith in him. And people must believe in the Pope. The Pope is Christ's representative on earth. In Sweden the people do not believe on Christ and his church; the extremest intolerance exists toward those who think different to themselves. The king there has twice endeavored to introduce religious freedom, but they would not have it.

Myself—I know it, your Holiness; but Sweden in former times suffered from Catholics in the country, and old laws still remain unrepealed in consequence. But it will not be long so, I hope. My countrymen will learn to have confidence in the power of truth and of christianity.

The Pope—Your reigning queen is Catholic.

Myself—Yes, your Holiness, and the noblest of women; an example to her sex, an ornament to the throne.

The Pope—All christian princes and people ought to believe on the Pope, and obey him. Their not doing so arises from pure pride and worldly mind. Hence such churches have arisen. The Emperor of Russia will not acknowledge the Pope, because he wishes to be Pope himself. Queen Victoria will not acknowledge the Pope, because she herself will be Pope, and so it is in every country where there is a State church. Belief in the Pope, as the head of the christian church, is the only rational and consequent thing; it is that alone which leads to unity and clearness. The Church is an organization; a representative monarchy, with its supreme head; spiritual state. If, in a state, people will not obey the supreme head, then there can be neither clearness nor order; everything becomes confusion.

Myself—We believe in Jesus Christ, and acknowledge him alone as head of the Christian Church.

The Pope—But Jesus Christ is in heaven, and must have a representative on earth; and this he appointed in the first instance in the person of the apostle Peter by the words——. You understand Latin?

Myself—Pochissimo, your Holiness; I have begun to learn it lately.

The Pope—Very good; then you will understand the words, Tu es Petrus et super hanc Petram ædificabo Ecclesiam meam, et portæ inferi non prævalebunt adversus eam; et tibi dabo claves cælorum. This dignity and this power descended from Peter to every Pope who has succeeded him from the very earliest period of the Church to the unworthy individual who now stands before you. This is the belief and doctrine of the Church.

Myself—We, in our Church, explain those words of our Savior differently. We consider that by "Peter" he intended the Rock-man; and that the acknowledgment which Peter made, "Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God!" was the Rock upon which Christ would build his Church, against which the gates of hell would not prevail. We believe that Christ left the keys to all of the apostles, as well as to Peter, with power to bind and release, and that every earnest christian, whether it be the Pope in Rome, or a poor fisherman on our coasts, has part in this Church of the Rock and in its privileges.

The Pope—But you have not either confession nor absolution; you do not believe in the mass, nor in the seven sacraments, nor upon those things or ordinances which the Church of Christ appoints. He who believes in one must believe in all. There is but one God in heaven, and but one Church on earth, in which he lives, by his representative, and any regulations which he has appointed. This you must understand, and, in order to become a perfect christian, not do it by halves—make an open confession thereof.

Myself—Loving the Lord Jesus Christ, and living according to his commandments, are, according to our belief, the essentials of the christian!

The Pope—Very good! I will tell you something. Pray!—pray for light from the Lord—for grace to acknowledge the truth—because this is the only means of attaining to it. Controversy will do no good. In controversy is pride and self-love. People in controversy make a parade of their knowledge, of their acuteness; and, after all, every one continues to hold his own views. Prayer alone gives light and strength for the acquirement of truth and grace. Pray every day, every night before you go to rest; and I hope that grace and light may be given to you. For God wishes that we should humble ourselves, and he gives his grace to the humble. And now God bless and keep you for time and eternity.

This pure, priestly, and fatherly admonition was so beautifully and earnestly expressed that it went to my heart, and humbly and with my heart I pressed the hand paternally extended toward me. That it was the hand of the Pope did not embarrass me in the slightest degree, for he was really to me at this moment the representative of the Teacher who in life and doctrine preached humility, not before men, but before God, and taught mankind to pray to him. The Pope's words were entirely true and evangelical. I thanked him from my heart, and departed more satisfied with him than with myself. I had stood before him in my Protestant pride. He had listened with patience, replied with kindness, and finally exhorted me, not with Papal arrogance, but as a truegospel preacher. I parted from him with more humility of spirit than I had come. The Pope conversed with me in French with facility and accuracy. His manner of speaking is lively and natural, as one who allows himself to converse without restraint.

Selected for the Crisis.

Judah's Captive.

Among the Judah captives, one Daniel there was found,
Whose unexampled piety astonished all around;
They saw him very humble and faithful to the Lord,
Three times a day he bowed to supplicate his God.
Among the king's high princes this Daniel was the first,
This king preferred this Hebrew for the spirit he professed;
And now his high preferment occasioned jealousy,
The princes sought his ruin, and obtained a firm decree.
If any man or woman doth supplication [make]
For thirty days ensuing, except to thee, O king,
To any Lord or monarch, or any other man,
They shall without distinction fall in the lions' den.
And now when Daniel knew it, into his house he went,
To beg his God's protection is now his whole intent;
His windows being open, before his God he bowed,
The princes were assembled, and saw him worship God.
They came to king Darius, and spake of his decree,
Saying, this Hebrew doth nothing care for thee;
Before his God he boweth three times in every day,
With all his windows open, and we have heard him pray.
Now when Darius knew it, his soul did sore lament,
His heart was set on Daniel, the sentence to prevent;
The princes then assembled, and to the king they said,
Remember your great honor, likewise the law you made.
The king he then commanded that Daniel should be brought
And cast into the lions' den, because his God he sought;
The king then said to Daniel, the God whom you adore,
Will save you from the lions' den and bless you evermore.
The king went to his palace and fasted all the night,
He neither eat nor slept, nor in music took delight;
Then early the next morning he started on his way,
And came unto the lions' den, where this bold Hebrew lay.
Then with the voice of mourning to Daniel cries aloud,
Saying, Daniel, O Daniel! thou servant of the Lord,
Is not thy God sufficient for to deliver thee,
The God whom thou dost worship and serve continually?
My Lord hath sent his angel, and shut the lions' jaw,
That they have not hurt me—mine innocency saw;
Behold the king commanded to take him from the den,
Because in God he trusted, no harm was found in him.
See how the righteous Daniel feared not the face of clay,
Not all the king's commandments could make him cease to pray;
He knew that God was with him, to save his soul from death,
He trusted in Jehovah, and prayed with every breath.
The king he then commanded those wretches to be brought,
Who had with so much boldness the life of Daniel sought;
On women, men and children, the sentence being past,
Among the hungry lions those sinners then were cast.
The lions rushed with vengeance upon those wicked men,
And tore them all to pieces ere they to the bottom came;
Thus God will save his children who put their trust in him,
And punish their offenders with agonies extreme.
Now Daniel's God is gracious to all his children dear,
He gives them consolation, and tells them not to fear;
He's promised to protect them and bring them safe to dwell
Eternally in heaven, and dooms his foes to hell.
Hark! sinners, hear the gospel, that says to you repent,
Come, try a bleeding Savior, his blood for you was spent;
He died to purchase pardon, that you may by his power
Escape the roaring lion, that seeks us to devour.
O will you be persuaded by one who loves you well,
To turn and seek salvation, with Christ in heaven to dwell?
Come, serve the God of Daniel, 'tis Jesus bids you come,
You'll find a hearty welcome in Christ, the bleeding Lamb.
Glory to God, O glory, for his redeeming love!
Religion makes us happy here, and will in worlds above;
We'll sing high hallelujah, and join the heavenly song,
With Moses, Job and Daniel, and all the heavenly throng.
Thus faith and humble prayer is the most mighty shield
With which a faithful christian did ever face the field;
None ever prayed with fervor and trusted in the Lord,
But that they found the Savior proved faithful to his word.

CHEAP ORNAMENTS.—When Dr. Franklin was in Paris, his daughter, Mrs. Beche, wrote to him for a supply of feathers and thread lace. The Dr. declined it in the following characteristic note: "If you wear your cambric ruffles as I do, and take care not to mend the holes, they will come in time to be lace; and feathers, my dear girl, may be had in America from every cock's tail."

Reading for Youth.

Led but not Driven.

A mother, sitting at her work in her parlor, overheard her child, whom an older sister was dressing in an adjoining bed-room, say repeatedly, as if in answer to his sister, "No, I don't want to say my prayers."

"How many believers, in good standing," thought the mother to herself, "often say the same thing in heart, though they conceal, even from themselves, the feeling."

"Mother," said the child, appearing in a minute or two, at the parlor door; the tone and the look implied that it was only his morning salutation.

"Good morning, my child."

"I am going out to get my breakfast."

"Stop a minute; I want you to come here and see me first."

The mother laid her work down in the next chair, as the boy ran towards her. She took him up. He kneeled in her lap, and laid his face down upon her shoulder, his cheek against her ear. The mother rocked her chair slowly backwards and forwards.

"Are you pretty well this morning?" said she, in a kind, gentle tone.

"Yes, mother, I am very well."

"I am very glad you are well. I am very well, too; and when I waked up this morning, and found that I was well, I thanked God for taking care of me."

"Did you?" said the boy, in a low tone, half a whisper. He paused after it—conscience was at work.

"Did you ever feel my pulse?" asked his mother, after a minute of silence, at the same time taking the boy down, and setting him in her lap, and placing his fingers on her wrist.

"No, but I have felt of mine."

"Well, don't you feel mine now?—how it goes beating?"

"Y-e-s," said the child.

"If it should stop beating, I should die at once."

"Should you?"

"Yes, and I cannot keep it beating."

"Who can?"

A silent pause.

"You have a pulse, too, which beats in your bosom here, and in your arms, and all over you, and I cannot keep it beating, nor can you. Nobody can but God. If he should not take care of you, who could?"

"I don't know mother," said the child, with a look of anxiety; and another pause ensued.

"So when I waked up this morning, I thought I would ask God to take care of me; I hope he will take care of me and all the rest of us."

"Did you ask him to take care of me?"

"No."

"Why not?"

"Because I thought you would ask him yourself. God likes to have us all ask for ourselves."

A long pause ensued. The deeply thoughtful and almost anxious expression of countenance showed that the heart was reached.

"Don't you think you had better ask for yourself?"

"Yes," said the boy readily.

He kneeled again in his mother's lap, and uttered in his own simple and broken language, a prayer for the protection and blessing of Heaven.

Suppose another case. Another mother, overhearing the same words, calls the child into the room. The boy comes.

"Did I not hear you say you did not want to say your prayers?"

The boy is silent.

"Yes, he did," says his sister, behind him.

"Well, that is very naughty. You ought always to say your prayers. Go right back now, and say them, like a good boy, and never let me hear of your refusing again."

The boy goes back pouting, and utters the words of prayer, while his heart is full of mortified pride, vexation, and ill-will.—Mother's Magazine.

"Honesty is the best Policy."

We have heard this saying ever since we remember; but honesty is something better than policy; it creates self-respect, gains confidence, inspires contentment, and insures success. A large lumber merchant and a scrupulously honest man of Boston, who from small beginnings rose to be a man of wealth and influence, once said, "If I had no moral principle, I should say, I believe the surest way to make a fortune is to be strictly honest." Think of this. It is something good to live by and to die by, while dishonest gains torment the conscience, living and dying. On an old tombstone in Dorchester, Mass., is the following quaint inscription, written by some body who had some idea of moral worth, though he was no poet. Who would not wish to merit such a couplet?

"Here lies the body of deacon David Auricula,
Who in the ways of God walked perpendicular."

For the Crisis.

God, give us Men!

God give us laborers for the field,
And warriors for the fight,
Bold men, who neither faint nor yield
When battling for the right.

God give us men of faith and power,
Of might and burning zeal,
Strong in temptation's gloomy hour,
With hearts for men to feel.

God give us men unbought by gold,
Fearless of toil and pain,
To face earth's frowns like men of old,
So they may glory gain.

God give us reapers, send them forth
Upon the whitening plain,
To labor in this sinful earth
Till Thou shalt come again.

Lord of the harvest, hear and save,
On thee we hope and trust;
O! give us men, the good and brave,
God's might in forms of dust.

Eld. W. Pratt's Reply

To a lecture of Mr. Leo Miller, on "Comparative view of Ancient and Modern Spiritualism," in the Temple at Portsmouth, N. H., Sunday evening, March 3d, 1861. Reported by Mr. James Mitchell.

No. 3.

When Mr. Miller was here I bought a book of him—the discussion on Spiritualism between himself and Prof. Grimes. Mr. Grimes says:—

"I defy you to show, in all the annals of Paganism, anything half so demoralizing, either in principles or practice, as this modern Spiritualism. You may go to the ancient Greeks, to the Hindoos, you may go to the annals of Sodom, and you will find purity itself compared with the picture which Rev. Mr. Harris draws of modern Spiritualism. He is a minister, too, a Swedenborgian christian."—p. 109. I will read from the same writer (p. 161); "The Spiritualists of America, he stated, are not only as a body, pantheists, rejecting alike the idea of the Scriptures as a Divine revelation, and the existence of a God, but they are gross sensualists and utterly immoral in their conduct in all the relations of life. This was not only true of the Transatlantic Spiritualists as a body, but that it was true of every 999 out of 1,000 of their number. Thousands of persons had died in America during the fifteen years that he has been a Spiritualist, who had notoriously lived most immoral lives, and yet the spirits of every one of these persons affirmed that they were all perfectly happy. The Spiritualists' literature of America, Mr. Harris also stated, was with one or two exceptions in a thousand cases, pantheistic, feeble, drivelling, nay, almost idiotic. The Spiritualists were utterly selfish, as well as sensual, and grossly immoral. They were destitute of all human sympathies, and never were known to perform a single benevolent action. They fully believed that in a future state, they would live the same licentious lives as they had done on earth. The American Spiritualists were, in reality, a body of pagans, worshiping, like the ancient pagans, obscene, and in every respect, grossly licentious deities. And, as regards the spirits with whom they hold communication, they resembled the sorcerers and demons who took possession of men and women in the days of Christ, and who are so frequently referred to in God's word—that word which is the only sure foundation of our faith and the only safe rule of our conduct. There were a few christian men who had been deluded into the adoption of the system, but only in a modified degree, and so long as their Spiritualism was kept in subjection by their christianity, the observations he had made did not apply to them. But these exceptions were so few as to be hardly worthy of notice. He begged to impress on the minds of his audience that all that he had said of the system of Spiritualism—which he characterized as an infernal system—was the result of his own personal knowledge and experience."

Mr. Miller says in reply, "The reporter misrepresented Mr. Harris' lecture." Very well, suppose one half of it is false, then it is black enough to cause any man to turn away from such a system with disgust.

I will read an extract cut from the Boston Bee of July 25th 1857. "At a Convention of Spiritualists in Ravenna, Ohio, on the 4th and 5th inst., the monstrous doctrine of free love was avowed and defended by a married woman in the most unblushing manner, and in the coarsest language. According to a Ravenna paper, Mrs. Lewis of Cleaveland declared that she was in favor of universal freedom, and that loving whomsoever she chose was a part of that freedom, and to confine her to love one man was an abridgement of her rights. She said that "although she had one husband in Cleaveland, she considered herself married to the whole human race. All men were her husbands, and she had an undying love for them." She said also, "What business is it to the world whether one man is the father of my children, or ten men are? I have the right to say who shall be the father of my offspring." "Mr Kellogg of Newton Falls, was exceedingly desirous to have it understood that he believed nothing in the Bible; that it was all a lie, and that only knaves and fools would pay any attention to its commands. He believed reason and intelligence to be supreme, and was emphatically a higher law man. He said that if Jesus Christ were on earth and should utter anything contrary to his views of right, he would not believe him any sooner than if the devil had said the same thing." One of the speakers said "he would not exchange places with St. Paul, if he would give him heaven to boot." A Mr. Robinson said that "he could live just as well without God, as God could without him. He did not thank God for anything."

These are the men that claim the prophets and apostles as their ancestors, and they tell us their system of modern Spiritualism, is primitive christianity revived. Can this congregation see anything that looks like this from what I have read? I think you can all see quite a difference. Perhaps their teachings will show us their relation more clearly. I will quote from the Banner of Light, one of their own papers. What do the modern departed spirits, so-called, teach? Says a spirit, "No law of God was ever broken—no law was ever violated." "If Jesus Christ was the Son of the Most High God, so are you, every one of you." You are all Gods, every one of you." This congregations must feel proud to learn that they are all Gods. Says another spirit, "What!" says the self-righteous man, "is God controlling the murderer when he lifts his hand against his brother?" "Yes, we answer, he is, and every atom in nature proves us true." Another spirit says,—"We believe our God to be the author of sin, as of good. If we give him his due, we give him this." Another when speaking of the Bible says,—"You may not place any confidence in that book. . . . . I can assure my friend that God had no more to do with writing that book than he had, ... and don't expect to create any light in the mental world if you cling to your Bible." Hear another of these spirits,—"The only true religion is a natural religion. . . . . You are your own Savior." Says another,—"But the question arises, What became of the body of Jesus? We answer, the friends of Jesus stole away the body. . . . . So then we will say, the natural body of Jesus Christ was never reanimated after the crucifixion. All nature, our God, tells us so."

A spirit who claims to be Timothy M. Baker, says,—"I've got folks in Montpelier, and . . . . I want them to get my sister where I can talk to her straight as I do to you, and I'll knock her God and Bible all to nothing." Says another spirit,—"Every one of you are Gods manifested in the flesh." A spirit calling himself Orlando Jenks, says,—"If I was coming back to preach, I should say, don't believe in God." Another says,—"Christ was a natural man. . . . . Christ never performed a miracle during his sojourn on earth." Another,—"The Mosaic Law . . . was but a child, or outgrowth of heathen mythology, or heathen worship, therefore it must have been idolatrous, a worshiping of false deities, a yielding reverence to false gods. . . . All systems of religion, we care not how far advanced they may be, are but overgrowths of heathen mythology, overgrowths of idolatry; and God-worshipers of to-day are quite as much in darkness as were the heathen of olden time." Another spirit says,—"Jesus of Nazareth was a good man, but by no means infallible—no more divine than you are, no more the special child of God than you are."

Another spirit says,—"We say as we have said a thousand times before, there is no such thing as sin; no such thing as evil. . . . . Now then, if there is sin anywhere, God made that sin, he is the author of it." "The foundation of your religion is fast fading away. Soon we shall find you shaking hands with these new things. This must be so. . . . . Jesus of Nazareth, if he were here to-day, would tell you as we tell you." Says another,—"Every thought, word and deed, is of God, and therefore modern Spiritualism is of [illegible] origin." Does not such reasoning astonish you when you consider it comes from the spirit world? This modern church goes on and says,—"The religion of the heathen is no less divine than is yours. God approves of it as well as yours." Another spirit says,—"Everything that ever has been or ever will be is an immutable decree of God. . . . There is not an atom in the universe but will at some time become an immortal spirit. . . . . It is vain for men to talk about disobeying the law of God; he can at no time disobey it. . . . . Every grain of sand you tread upon to-day shall in time become an immortal soul, endowed with wisdom . . . . You may curse the Author of your being. Do you sin? No; you are but casting off the gross in your nature—obeying your God. . . . . The highest archangel was once the lowest spirit on earth."

Our Missions.

BY P. B. MORGAN.

Have you heard how they are prospering? Are you aware what missionaries we have in the field, and what they have accomplished for the cause during the past year? Were you aware into what straits they were brought with their needy families during the winter past? No; of course you were not posted upon these matters; or, at least, to but a limited extent.

The indifference manifested amongst us on this and kindred matters, it seems to me is wholly inexcusable. We know we have God's truth; the truths that are pre-eminently adapted to the wants of this age—that God has designed for his church and the world at this special time. Of their POWER, we have not the least doubt. We have felt they were like a lever, with which, give us a fulcrum, and we can indeed "turn the world upside down." Of this we have been glad; we have congratulated ourselves upon our fortune in having had imparted to us a knowledge of the truth. But alas! what have we done toward sending it forth and sustaining it in the world to what we might!

The reason of this lamentable want of mission enterprise amongst us, is not because we lacked the men or the means,—common opinion to the contrary, not excepted. We have had as many devoted preachers, who for their piety, general intelligence, preaching ability, and large-heartedness, have their equal in few religious denominations in our land, and that may probably compare in number with any sect in proportion to their number of communicants. But even religious heroes are only men; and the most of God's heroes have been poor men. Our churches have been, and are yet, quite numerous, although we have lost here and there a citadel—a Sumpter,—but how little have we done and how little is it proposed to do to strengthen the things that remain, and make aggressions upon the enemy's borders! In point of worldly goods, we have, as a people, been prospered in a manner without a precedent, notwithstanding hard times. The facts, I ween, are these:

We have had the truth and cared for the truth more than for the church. The truth has been to us everything, while "the communion of the Holy Ghost," and the salvation of souls were comparatively but little thought of. Revivals have become unpopular and only here and there heard of—and those but feeble affairs, and realized after great exertions made for "effect," rather than for the permanent establishment of holiness. Here and there is one yet plowing, sowing, and gathering for God. But taking a popular view, he who would be most distinguished by "our church," seeks not to signalize himself by the number of trophies he wins for Christ, but rather by being a champion of some dogma, or it may be by the clever way in which he talks to some folks of fancy; or it may be by playing the part of "the pulpit harlequin." The truth has been praised more than God. If good was accomplished, we said it was the truth; instead of saying, "It is the Lord's doings, and marvelous in our eyes." Instead of holding the truth in righteousness, we held it in unrighteousness; i. e., we did not seek the end for which the truth was given. "The unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace" has become to us neither present or specially practical truth. Letting "all things be done decently and in order," is what we have little idea of, and care nothing. System, or godly order, we ignore. When asked for somewhat to help in destitute regions, we have pleaded poverty, and God has given us spiritual poverty. Liberally receiving, we have not liberally bestowed. To all these statements there are exceptions, of course; but it has seemed to me too true as a general thing. But without prolonging this article, I subjoin the following as the best living commentary that can be given of the power of Christ's few and poor saints to help on His cause if they will:

"Moravian Missions. The missionaries number 312, and reach about 73,000 souls. Their stations are in most destitute heathen lands, such as North America, Greenland, Labrador, Jamaica, Thibet, South Africa, Australia, etc. According to their report the past year, their contributions for the support of their missionaries amounted to $300,000. The whole membership of this denomination is said not to exceed twenty thousand; this would give them an annual average of fifteen dollars per member, an aggregate of free donations to spread the gospel in foreign and domestic missions not equalled in any sect."

Question: If the Moravians feel such an interest for Christ's cause, how ought we to feel? How much zeal ought we to have irrespective of any body else? Again: If 20,000 communicants can pay annually $300,000, what ought we, in this prosperous land, with 54,000 communicants, to pay? How much do we pay? But you ask where is the missionary association amongst us affording an opportunity for those whose hearts God has disposed in this direction? and of this I have nothing to say.

Evening Shadows.—No. 3.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"For the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way; and then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord will consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming.—2 Thess. 2: 7, 8.

The mystery of iniquity ALREADY WORKING in the apostle's day, was doubtless the cruel, PAGAN ROMAN power, which had already put to death Christ, the apostles, and many of the primitive church. Mosheim declares that the Pagan rulers and their priests possessed a bitter hatred against the christians and declared that all their troubles and calamities originated in their kingdom since the days of Jesus Christ their professed Savior, and his followers. Hence the bitter persecutions that ensued. But that power was to be taken out of the way, "and then shall that Wicked be revealed." The PAPAL ROMAN did succeed the PAGAN ROMAN power. The revelation of this lawless one, THE MAN OF SIN, was to be preceded by a falling away. It would be an act of supererogation to consume time to prove this point. It is written in corresponding characters to that of the prophet's flying roll, in lamentation, mourning and wo.

First. He was to oppose God.

Second. He was to exalt himself above God.

Third. He was to sit in the temple of God.

Fourth. He was to show himself to be God.

Can we now ascertain in the history of the great Woman, Catholic Apostasy, any similarity to these four points?

1. He was to oppose God. To oppose God is to manifest an opposition to God's Word. If Papacy has not manifested as much opposition to the plain simple teachings of God's precious Word, by her corrupt doctrines, and her cloistered institutions, and the bloody inquisitions to torture and put to death God's saints, it seems to me no other power can.

2. He was to exalt himself above God. Has Papacy done this? The fact that indulgences to commit sin have been granted by this Man of Sin, fixes the mark upon his forehead. To assume any such prerogative, is to do what God has not, nor can do. Thus he has exalted himself above God.

3. He was to sit in the temple of God. The Popes have declared there was no salvation out of the Holy Roman Catholic Church. That was the true church of God. The Pope, writing to Philip, first king of France, expressed himself in these terms:—"Strive to please St. Peter, who has thy kingdom as well as thy soul in his power, and who can bind thee, and absolve in heaven as well as on earth." Thus the Man of Sin has set in the assumed temple of God.*

4. He was to show himself God. I suppose by the assumption of divine prerogatives. Hear Pope Sixtus V. in a bull against Henry, King of Navarre; it contains the following assertion:—"By the authority given to St. Peter and his successors, by the immense power of the Eternal King, excels all the powers of earthly kings and princes, we deprive them and their posterity forever of their dominions and kingdoms." According to Pope Innocent the III., "The Pope holds the place of the true God." Marcellus, in the Lateran Council and with its full approbation, called "POPE JULIUS, GOD ON EARTH." A vast amount of such blasphemy might be written. My object being brevity, the above must suffice.

I will now present a few testimonies from Catholic authors and leave you to judge whether the Pope of Rome is or is not entitled to the inspired appellative—The Man of Sin. Platina, a Roman Catholic, declared as follows: "The chair of St. Peter was usurped rather than possessed by monsters of wickedness, ambition and bribery. They left no wickedness unpracticed. Father Antonius Pagnanus, a minorite of the order of St. Franciscus, says: "I am silent respecting public adulteries, rapes and robberies. I pass over the great effusion of blood, drunkenness, surfeits, and the inordinate filthiness of luxury such as never took place before." And why all this? Answer is at hand: "Pope Sixtus IV. licensed brothels at Rome." St. Barronnius, Vol. X., p. 742, speaks thus of Pope Stephen VII.: "Thus perished this villainous man who entered the sheepfold, as a thief and a robber, and who in the retribution of God ended his days by the infamous death of the halter." Bower has the following concerning Pope Alexander: "Year of Christ 1492, in the room of Innocent was unfortunately chosen Roderic Borgia, whose pontificate was, as we shall see in the sequel, a continued series of the blackest crimes of murder, rapine, perfidiousness, lust and cruelty." Tomaso, a catholic, speaking of his death says, "He died in the 72d year of his age. . . . The people congratulated each other on being delivered from one, who with immoderate ambition and unexampled treachery, with innumerable instances of horrid cruelty, of monstrous lusts and unheard of avarice, exposing all things for sale, both sacred and profane, had like a venomous serpent intoxicated the whole world."

Here I suspend further testimony on this point, declaring my present conviction that the Man of Sin has been revealed; hence the next in order must be his destruction at the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, which is even now at the door. The evening shadows are stretched around, and the Coming One has sent his heralds to announce his speedy advent. Even so come, Lord Jesus. Amen.

*Gregory, in the Lives of the Popes, p. 401, Vol. 2, (Bower) says, "The name of the Pope alone [illegible]

For the Crisis.

Pride.

Pride is thinking of ourselves more highly than we ought to think. It is a transgression of the law of righteousness, which requires that persons and things should be estimated according to truth. It is a sin which is odious to God and ruinous to man. The first temptation presented by our arch adversary was unbelief; "Ye shall not surely die." The second was pride; "Ye shall be as gods," etc. This selfish emotion of the human mind has neutralized every generous passion of our original creation. It has sacrificed at its shrine all the rights of the human brotherhood, and filled the earth with violence and blood. "The wicked in his pride doth persecute the poor." "By pride cometh contention" and war. The just curse of the Almighty is denounced against it. "Wo to the crown of pride." "The crown of pride—shall be trodden under feet." "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." It brought down "a king of kings" from the pinnacle of his glory to a seven years level and association with the beasts of the field. God "smiteth through the proud." He "hath respect to the lowly, but knoweth the proud afar off." Sooner or later he "plentifully rewardeth the proud doer." "Every one that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord; though hand join in hand, he shall not be unpunished." For our pride and haughtiness towards our brother of a darker hue, of Africa and of the forest, the sword of the Almighty is now unsheathed against these dis-United States. Pride is the great barrier to the reception of the freely offered salvation of the glorious gospel of the blessed God. "The wicked, through the pride of his countenance, will not seek after God: God is not in all his thoughts." The gospel is in perfect harmony with the law, which righteously condemns the sinner. It makes no compromise with his rebellion. In all the marvelous mediation of the Son of God, the Father proclaims himself to be "the just God and the Savior." The gospel salvation comes to the sinner humbled in the dust before his offended Maker, at the foot of the cross. It comes to the broken in heart and to the contrite in spirit. The proud Jew, going about to establish his own righteousness, and the conceited Gentile glorying in his "vain philosophy," rejected it. To the one it was "a stumbling-block," and to the other "foolishness." To the humble soul it is the power and wisdom of God unto salvation. Hallelujah!

Every sinner is commanded to humble himself "under the mighty hand of God," who promises, if he will do so, to exalt him in due time. If he will not, he shall [illegible] perish. The command to repent is a command to humble ourselves; for repentance is a change of character from pride to humility, from unbelief to faith, from sinfulness to holiness. This command is simply a requisition to be reconciled to God, who "is light, in whom there is no darkness at all." To cease rebelling against the government of infinite wisdom, goodness and love. How reasonable the command! Such, however, is the determined enmity of the carnal mind against God, that if God does not humble the sinner by the regeneration of his Spirit, he will retain his pride to his eternal destruction. "Except a man be born (or begotten) again (of the Spirit) he cannot see the kingdom of God." If a man does not need to be regenerated by the Spirit of God to overcome his pride, he does not need this divine renewal for any thing.

The divine command to humble ourselves, no more proves that God does not humble us by his Spirit, than the command to "save (ourselves) from this untoward generation," proves that God has not "saved us, by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost." Titus 3: 5. "If any man is in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold all things are become new, and all (the) things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself," etc. 2 Cor. 5: 17. One of these old things is pride. One of the new things which "are of God" is humility. Subsequent to this gracious renewal, we are still dependent on God in Christ for humility as for every other holy exercise of mind. John 15: 5. Therefore, we must ask God to humble us, as did the pious Psalmist. "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." A right spirit is a humble spirit. Nothing is more unbecoming sinful dependent man than pride, "which creeps securely in, and swells a haughty worm."

It is an act of infinite mercy and love, my christian brethren, for God to humble us by his Spirit, sanctifying his providences toward us. Of his people of old it is written; "He (God) humbled thee, and suffered thee to hunger, and fed thee with manna—that he might make thee know that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live." Deut. 8: 3. We are not invulnerable to the temptations of this ungodly world. Our gracious Father sees it necessary to humble us, by taking away the things in which we are glorying, that we may glory only in Him. O blessed work of covenant love!

In conclusion, let us, beloved, under a sense of the remaining depravity of our hearts, earnestly implore the aid of the Holy Spirit to "put off the old man and to put on the new man," remembering the exhortation, "Be ye clothed with humility." Then shall our fellowship be with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ, for He who dwelleth in the high and holy place, dwelleth "with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones." Isa. 57: 15.

HENRY GREW.

For the Crisis.

A Starless Crown.

"If grief in heaven might find a place,
And shame the worshiper bow down,
Who meets the Savior face to face,
'T would be to wear a starless crown.

Shall we who know Christ's wondrous love,
While here below sit idly down?
Ah! then if we reach heaven above,
There'll be for us a starless crown!"

Is there a christian heart that does not respond to the sentiment expressed in the above lines? It is indeed sad to feel that in regard to the great end of our being, our life has been a blank. It is true, silent influences for good or evil emanate from the daily walk and conversation of every child of Adam; yet should this content the christian? God has given each some mission to fulfill, humble it may be, perhaps unknown to the church and the world, for there may be some of "God's hidden ones," who, though in man's appreciation are destined to a "starless crown," yet, in the awards of the last day, it will be seen that our Judge "seeth not as man seeth." Let it be our aim, dear fellow christians, to do something for the advancement of the Savior's cause. He has done all for us; small indeed are our returns for such love. Has no poor wanderer crossed our path, or been sought in "the highways and hedges," to whom we might impart deeds of love and sympathy? When other means seem vain and hopeless to reclaim the lost, prayer is the key which can unlock the door of hope, and find access to the presence chamber of the "Hearer of prayer," who has encouraged us to bear upon the arms of our faith even "the chief of sinners."

How is it with our children? Are they [illegible] of rejoicing? or are we devolving our priceless responsibilities on others, relinquishing also the title of claiming them as "our jewels?" None who have read the "Life of Harlan Page," can restrict to ministerial and parental station the privilege of "turning many to righteousness." It is God's plan often to bless feeble instrumentalities, even the "mouth of babes and sucklings" "to perfect his praise." This should encourage all to employ in the service of our Master even the "one talent" he has committed to our trust.

Soon earth's scenes will have an end,
And all thy trials will be o'er;
A blest eternity thou 'lt spend
With Jesus on that blissful shore.

Importance of Prophecy.

No. 2.

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts."

As the prophetic light advances, we discover that the two witnesses (Rev. 11: 3) have not yet been slain. This work is to be accomplished by the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit. The beast did not ascend out of the pit, till Dec. 10th, 1848; when Louis Napoleon was elected President of the French people. If we admit that the Old and New Testaments are the two witnesses—I do not, however, make the admission—the suppression of the Bible by the French government, between the years 1793 and 1797, could not have answered to the slaying of the witnesses, because the French government, as it existed at that time, was not the power to which the work of slaying the witnesses was assigned. At the time the Bible was suppressed in France, Austria was acting as the sixth head of the leopard beast. Hence, France, at that time, did not represent the beast in either of its forms. The beast, at that time, had not descended into the pit—he had not received his deadly wound. But as France, under its present form of government, represents the beast that ascendeth out of the pit, alias the eighth form of the leopard beast, so France, under its present form of government, must perform the work of slaying the witnesses,—a work which it has not yet done. And I conceive the two witnesses to symbolize, not the Old and New Testaments, but those who, in the end of the gospel dispensation, keep the commandments of God, and have the TESTIMONY of Jesus.

Again, we are not, as some suppose, under the sixth vial of God's wrath. The pouring out of the first vial has not yet been accomplished; for those who worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark, etc., as commanded by the image, are to suffer the afflictive effects of the first vial. But the image has not yet spoken; he has not yet commanded the inhabitants of the earth to worship him, and to receive his mark. But I apprehend that the image will ere long speak; that the first vial is already unstopped, and trembling in the angel's hand; and when this is poured out, the others will probably follow in quick succession. "Well," says one, "if all this work is to be accomplished before the Lord comes he cannot come very soon." But I can see no reason why this work may not all be accomplished by the time many are looking for his coming, viz., 1866–8. But be the time longer or shorter, all unfulfilled prophecy relative to events which are to precede the second advent of Christ must be accomplished before he can come. And the saying of the apostle (2 Thess. 3: 5,) is profitable to us, who are living in these last days of probationary time, viz.: "And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ."

That we may make our loins strong, that we may fortify our power mightily, it is essential that we watch the way of God's economy, by taking heed to the sure word of prophecy. But, in taking heed to those prophecies which relate to the governments of earth, we ought not to neglect those which describe the action of the church. The church, in the gospel dispensation, is the temple of the Most High; and she should not turn away from that temple, while we are watching the movements of the nations in the East; thus becoming like the five and twenty men who are represented as having turned their backs toward the temple, and their faces toward the east, worshiping the sun toward the east.

One very important and instructive member belonging to that class of prophecies which describe the action of the church, is the parable of the ten virgins, Matt. 25: 1—12. The parable of our Lord [illegible] apply [illegible] designed to apply to [illegible] telling subsequent events; each one relating to some particular development of God's economy; and may properly be classed with symbolic prophecy. And, as the parable of the ten virgins contains a full and complete description of certain developments in the church, just prior to the coming of the Lord; and as, by taking heed to it, we may understand whereabouts we are in the economy of God, it is necessary that we get at its true import. But, in interpreting parables, one important rule is to be observed. The interpretation the Master gave of the parable of the sower, constitutes a rule for the interpretation of all parables. To the inquiry of the disciples concerning this parable, he replied as follows: "Know ye not this parable? and how then will ye know all parables?" This reply of Christ to his disciples, seems to imply, not only the necessity of understanding all parables, but also that a rule by which to interpret them is requisite to acquiring a knowledge of them. And in interpreting this, he gave a distinct explanation to each of its features; thus demonstrating that every circumstance in a parable must be answered by some event in the interpretation. Nothing is to be excluded —nothing added. R. Robbins.

Is any part of Man Immortal?

No. 4.

DOES HUMAN REASON TEACH IT? DO THE SCRIPTURES?

"What is truth?"

These are important questions; and the last always. It is even so in respect to our temporal interests; how much more so in reference to our eternal. Error is valueless and will do us no good; the truth, —the truth is what we should desire and seek after. The Savior prays, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." Truth is sanctifying; error corrupts and depraves the heart and lives of men. "Buy the truth and sell it not," is a wise maxim for us to heed. If we purchase an article of merchandise we are desirous to know its true value. If we buy an ox or horse, we are anxious to know their real qualities and worth. If we bargain for an estate we seek to know if it be sufficiently valuable to meet our expectations, and worth the price demanded for it. If we are sick and send for a physician, we want to know whether he has the skill and knowledge to understand and cure us of our malady. Or if dangerously ill and beyond the reach of remedial means, we are anxious to know our real danger.

This being our solicitude in respect to mere temporal things, how much more should we be anxious to know concerning the things of immortality. And yet strange as it may appear, thousands will ask the question, "What is truth?" respecting their future destiny, in a careless indifference, with no desire really to know what it is, and "turn away their ears from the truth, and be turned unto fables." Thousands too, will at times seriously and solemnly inquire, "What is truth?" and yet be so averse to receiving it as to reject it when convinced. Such was the case with the High-Priest of the Jews when he put our Lord upon oath before the Jewish council and demanded: "I abjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God." To which Jesus replied:—"Thou hast said: hereafter shall ye see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." Instead of receiving this testimony which he and the council were solemnly bound to do with the evidences before them, and the assurance given, the High-Priest in rage "rent his clothes," and declared, "He hath spoken blasphemy;" and Jesus was condemned as "guilty of death." Pilate also went to Jesus in the "Judgment Hall" and inquired, "Art thou the King of the Jews?" But being dissatisfied with Jesus' answer, he inquired more anxiously again:—"Art thou a King then?" And "Jesus," as the apostle declares, "before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession"; and affirmed, "To this end I was born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." Yet, agitated, he inquires the third time, "What is truth?" and tremblingly and alarmed,—filled with anxiety and fear, went immediately out and was prevailed upon to write and sign the death warrant of "The Son of Man" and "of God," and deliver him unto the centurion and his band to be crucified! For this violence of law and of conscience, his future days were filled with terrors, and he lay down in death in sorrow, to await the period when before Him, whom he condemned to death and execution, he shall stand, who is the Judge of the world!

No man can ever come to a mortifying knowledge of the truth, however anxiously he may inquire for it, until he be willing to be converted, and being convinced ready to [illegible] and acknowledge it. It is said of the faithful, they "were persuaded" of the promises, "and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims [illegible]," declaring plainly that [illegible]

ed truth? "What is the chaff to the wheat?" If two men should bring to market, one a load of wheat, the other a load of chaff, and the marketmen should declare the load of chaff to be of more value than the load of wheat, we should at once conclude that they had not fully examined the two loads, or they were very ignorant judges. And what shall we say of those, who affirm man's present immortality, or the immortality of the soul, to be taught by human reason, analogy, and Scripture, when the fact is untrue and rests only upon the assumption of men. We are now prepared to show,

2. That enlightened and educated reason fails to apprehend or discover the doctrine of man's present immortality. And what we mean by educated and enlightened reason is, reason taught of God through the Spirit and word. Tillotson, remarks:—"The immortality of the soul is rather supposed, or taken for granted, than expressly revealed in the Bible." Olshausen adds his testimony:—"The doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and the name are alike unknown to the entire Bible." Human reason, unaided by the Divine record, has failed to establish or believe the faith; and now enlightened human reason at the fount and source of unerring wisdom cannot discover it! Strange are these admissions; and daily are they being made by Biblical students who aver, that the doctrine is "assumed rather than proved" by the sacred Word. Stranger still is it that the Bible should be thus silent upon a theme which has agitated the human mind from the beginning of the world! Being written too, when the world was being filled with books discussing the theme, and treating upon it, by the wisest sages and philosophers of ancient times. Ought not a doctrine of such importance, and which has been the problem of ages, to have been plainly and unequivocally stated in the sacred writings, which are a revelation from God to man upon his future destiny as well as his present good, and thus to have forever settled the controversy and conjectures of men, if true? Yes, verily. The fact of this silence of the Scriptures is proof of the error of the doctrine. It is proof too, of the authority and divine inspiration of the Holy Volume; for had it been the mere record of men, it would have been filled with the opinions of men respecting the doctrine, as were other books written in the times in which the sacred records were given to us. And the mere affirmation of man's present immortality anywhere in the Word of God would have destroyed the harmony of the revelation. See Gen. 3: 22—24; Rom. 6: 23; 2: 6, 7; John 3: 16; 1 John 5: 11, 12; Rev. 22: 14.

Augustine wrote a book upon the immortality of the soul just before his conversion to christianity; but afterwards, being instructed by the examination of the Word of God more perfectly, he wrote his "Retraction," in which speaking of his former book he says his views were so "obscure and perplexed that he himself could scarcely comprehend them." And we have reason to conclude that he would have renounced his whole faith in the immortality of man, had it not been for certain influences which surrounded him. His former work seemed to please certain heathen philosophers, and he was too much inclined to gratify and indulge their fancies.

Martin Luther, that bold and fearless reformer, who cared for none of the opinions of men, and weighed every word of God as pure gold tried in the furnace seven times, thus ironically responded to the decree of the Lateran Council held during the pontificate of Pope Leo: "I permit the Pope to make articles of faith for himself and his faithful, such as the soul is the substantial form of the human body—the soul is immortal, with all those monstrous opinions to be found in the Roman dunghill of decretals." Luther believed in the sleep and unconsciousness of man during death, and until the resurrection, as is evident from his comment on Eccl. 9: 10. He says: "Another proof that the dead are insensible. Solomon thinks, that the dead are altogether asleep, and think of nothing. They lie, not reckoning days or years, but, when awakened, will seem to themselves to have slept scarcely a moment." Another proof of the fact is in the attack made upon his faith. Sir Thos. More says: "What shall he care, how long he live in sin that believeth Luther, that he shall after this life feel neither good nor evil in body nor soul, until the day of doom?" And Feuardentius, in severe and unjust judgment, pronounces Lutherans, new Sadducees, who, when they read in Luther's comments that the dead so sleep as to know and feel nothing . . . . say that the soul of man dies with the body."

Wm. Tyndale's faith is thus quaintly expressed: "In putting departed souls in heaven, hell and purgatory, you destroy the arguments wherewith Christ and Paul prove the resurrection. What God doeth with them that shall we know when we come to them. The true faith putteth the resurrection which we be warned to look for, every hour. The heathen philosophers denying that, did put that the souls did ever live. And the Pope joineth the spiritual doctrine of Christ, and the fleshly doctrine of philosophy," i. e., the soul's immortality and resurrection, as now believed and [illegible] taught by many; the resurrection occurring at death. Mark the origin of this spurious faith. In reply to Sir Thos. More's attack upon Luther he says: "Christ and his apostles taught no other, but warned to look for Christ's coming again every hour—which coming again, because ye believe not, ye have feigned that other merchandise." Calvin may have believed with the other reformers for a season, as may be conjectured from Feuardentius' language: "I call the great mass of the Calvinists new Epicurians, who hearing daily from Calvin and his ministers that all blessed spirits are dead, are larvæ and shades with which we have no communion, exclaim, with the support of Calvin, "Let us say that the soul is extinct with the body, and forthwith purgatory, and mass, and the Romish priest will be done away." If so, he afterwards repudiates the faith, and writes a most furious book, in which he not only abjures his faith in any such doctrine, but makes a bitter and slanderous attack upon those who believed in the sleep of the dead, calling them "babblers, madmen, dreamers, drunkards," etc. His Tractate was entitled "Psychopannychid," by which he expressed the idea of the soul's consciousness in death until the resurrection: —a state of wakefulness through the whole of the night of death. He gave to those who differed from him in this faith the name of "Hypnologists" (sleep-preachers). I suppose had Calvin lived in the days of our Lord or his apostles, they would have shared in the same epithets:—for says the Savior, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go, that I may awake him out of his sleep."—John 11: 11. "The maid sleepeth," etc. "For David after he had served his own generation by the will of God fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption."—Acts 13: 36. Also 1 Thess. 4: 13—18. The Calvinists in our day call us "Hypnologists," while they contend they are "Psychopannichyists." They charge us with being "Sadducees," as did Feuardentius the Lutherans; and appeasing the consciences of the wicked with our doctrine of the soul's unconsciousness, etc, as did Sir Thos. More, Luther; and Papists and Calvinists both associate us with the worst of men, because of our faith. But we are able to endure and suffer patiently seeing we suffer for well doing; and are ready to "sanctify the Lord God in our hearts; and give an answer to every man—the reason of the hope that is in us, with meekness and fear."

The fact that Dr. Henry Dodwell in 1706, Bishop Law in 1755, with a host of others in those times; and Bishop Whately and hundreds of others in the ministry and membership, in all denominations of later times, and the multitude still increasing as the Scriptures are more widely circulated, studied, and understood,—is proof that in proportion to men's becoming intelligibly informed from the Bible they will arrive more and more to the one common conclusion, as in the natural sciences, that man is not immortal, but that it is the boon and gift Heaven holds out to the believer in Jesus Christ. O. R. Fassett.

For the Crisis.

Light in Darkness.

In the last issue of the Crisis, there was a communication from a sister addressed to Bro. Hastings, which interested me very much. I know not who the author may be, but my own heart sympathized with her, as she so trustingly exhibited the details of a christian experience, trying, but genuine. There is one needful, and I may say, essential, thing for every child of God. This we must learn effectually at some period of our christian life. I refer to a clear, scriptural, experimental knowledge of our own hearts. Until we gain that, we never can take that earnest, practical hold on Christ which is needful to a permanent peace. The Scripture declares that "there is no peace to the wicked" But who is anything else in the sight of God? Who can say, "I am pure from sin"? Well, is there no peace then for us? Must we go through life and lie down in the grave in doubt of our final destiny? No, by no means. God has provided a better thing for us "as a propitiation, through faith in his blood." There is the comfort. Not what we have done, or can do, but what he has done for us. His language is, "Look unto me and be saved."

Now I want to say to our fearful sister, in the language of the apostle, "There has no temptation taken you but such as is common to man." The Lord is leading you in a way you know not. "Light is sown for the righteous," and you will find it to be so by and by.

"The soul that on Jesus has leaned for repose,
He cannot be will not, desert to his foes;
That soul, though all hell may endeavor to shake
He'll never, no never, no NEVER forsake!"

Your experience is needful and all right. Just what you must have sometime, and if you learn the lesson now, you will not have to learn it at a later period. This counsel is offered unasked, but it is from one who has seen very many years of christian conflict. May the Lord carry on the work, which I have no doubt he has begun, until the day of Jesus Christ." Yours in the love of the truth. Thomas Huntington.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, APRIL 3, 1861.

Boston Conference.

So many are interested in this city, it is thought best to hold our General Conference in the Meionian, Tremont Temple building, opposite the Tremont house, Tremont street, so that all can be accommodated. This is only a few steps from Chapman Hall. Let all remember the place. We shall expect a meeting of great interest and profit. We shall commence on Tuesday in Chapman Hall, but open at the Meionian on Thursday.

My Pilgrimage.

Wednesday March 13th. We parted with our readers in our last conversation, while at the grave of our aged mother, in the country church yard, in Newfield, Litchfield Co., Ct. Here we also took leave of our mourning and sympathizing friends, and paid a visit to the former home of my mother, now occupied by her grandson William, where we spent the night.

Thursday, 14th, returned to the home of my childoood, but mother was not there to greet me with her smiles and good wishes. Her seat was vacant. Her voice is hushed in death, but her good counsels are not forgotten; though dead, she yet speaketh. Thank God for the watch care and prayers of a christian mother. She sleeps in Jesus, but will not sleep long. She was one of the witnesses of the "dark day" on the 19th of May, 1780.

O what comfort arises from a hope in the literal resurrection of the dead. That same mother, now resting in the silent grave will live again; but "if the dead rise not," then she is "perished," and will live no more for ever. All hope of future life to those who have died rests in the resurrection of the dead. Take this foundation away, and all is gone. We see not the faintest reason to hope that any part of man who dies will live beyond this life, if the dead rise not. And it is a cheering thought that the same personal identities that we lay in the grave, whom we have loved, and with whom we have associated, are to come forth from the tomb, and then be made incorruptible and immortal. Praise the Lord for this "blessed hope."

Friday, 15th. This morning we bid farewell to the rural home of early days, conscious of the solemn fact that we could return no more to visit a fond mother. But all is well; we sorrow not as those who "have no hope."

During the day we made several pleasant calls on some of our dear friends in Winsted; and in the evening spoke to a large and attentive audience at Camp's Hall, when we endeavored to show that the end of the christian dispensation is at hand. We found the people ready to hear, and anxious to know the truth. The present state of the nations of the world is waking up many who have been sleeping, and they anxiously inquire what do these things means? We are thankful that we are not left to guess, if we turn to the "sure word of prophecy." The prophetic light is now bright upon the pilgrim's pathway. We see no room to doubt that Jesus is soon coming. The day dawn is at hand, and the glory of the King of kings may soon be expected to beam on this planet to cheer his waiting bride.

"Glad tidings! glad tidings! the kingdom is near,
Our glorious Deliverer will soon, soon appear."

Saturday, 16th. At early dawn we took leave of our friends in Winsted, and returned to Boston. On our way, we stopped a little time in Hartford. This church has suffered great loss in the death of several of its prominent members; but they will soon live again, to die no more. The surviving ones feel quite saddened when they look around and behold the desolations caused by the hand of death.

Lord's day, 17th. Preached in Chapman Hall, Boston. The audiences were large and attentive. The truth is evidently making some glorious conquests in the city. Several prominent members of other churches have recently become satisfied that a live man knows more than a dead one, and that no one who dies can have a future life in any other way than by a literal resurrection of the dead. They now see that the Bible requires those who would have immortality, to seek for it "by patient continuance in well doing." The truth received has caused them to live nearer to Jesus than ever before. Their testimonies are really heart cheering.

In the evening, a large audience assembled to hear a discourse on the cause of modern Spiritualism as viewed from a Bible stand-point. Several questions were asked, which only aided in making the truth shine brighter. But few are aware of the magnitude of the work carried on by demons and their mediums. They are overthrowing the faith of millions, and seducing them away from the path that leads to eternal life; while none are led by their efforts to love the Bible more. The whole system is directly opposed to the doctrine taught by the Savior and the apostles, and should be labelled "antichrist." It is the most formidable enemy with which christianity has ever had [illegible] long as the churches hold to the doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul, as taught by Satan to Adam and Eve, they are in great danger of being seduced by these lying spirits, who are endeavoring, by all possible means, to make us believe that their leader told the truth to our first parents.

A Worthy Enterprise.

It is well known that there are a large number of Germans in our country, especially at the West, and in the larger cities, who cannot read English. Many of these are persons of strong minds, who have been led into infidelity by the absurdities of modern theology. If there was any way to reach them with the plain, consistent truths of the Bible, it is believed that many of them would rejoice in the light, and become able advocates of the consistent doctrine of the Scriptures. We have no German preacher; but if we had a tract in that language, embodying the reasons of our hope, set forth in a concise manner, no doubt it would accomplish much good, with little expense.

Bro. L. Reimer, of Philadelphia, has undertaken the work of preparing a tract to meet the wants of these Germans. It is now ready to go into the printer's hands, but he has not the means to publish it. The book will consist of about ninety pages. It is entitled "Life only through Christ." One thousand copies of it, in the German language, will cost about one hundred and forty dollars. Now are there not enough of our brethren, who are interested in the welfare of their fellow beings, who will lend a helping hand, and put this work through the press, that it may at once commence its important mission?

Bro. Reimer pledges to send as many of the books, when done, to those who will assist him, as will be necessary to come to the amount of the money forwarded; i. e., for ten dollars given, he will send ten dollars worth of books to the donor. Come, brethren, take some stock in this good enterprise. Time is short, let us do what we can, and do it quickly.

Discussion at South Ashburnham.

Our discussion at South Ashburnham, with Mr. Baker, a Universalist preacher, was one of considerable interest, and very successful in favor of the truth. Mr. B. was fairer in debate than many; but found it an exceedingly difficult task to make the Bible prove what the Lord never designed it should teach. He did as well, perhaps, as any one could in endeavoring to defend error against the attacks of truth. We spent about sixteen hours in the discussion, which continued four days. The following are some of his points:—

1. "Man's higher essence is spirit." 2. "Christ came to judge the world at the first advent." 3. "After God had made man, he put a moral image into him." 4. "There is a spark of divinity in us all." 5. "Man has in him a spiritual body." 7. "Animals are not animated by a spirit as is man." 8. "The wicked are made alive after the 'second death.'" 9. "The wicked are cast into the lake of fire and brimstone to bleach out their sins."

Points admitted by Mr. Baker. 1. "Man is in no sense immortal in this life." 2. "If there is no resurrection of the dead, there is no salvation." 3. Men are not saved in their sins." 4. "Some men die in their sins." 5. "Their salvation depends upon their character—their good works." 6. "The punishment of the wicked will be as long as the life of the righteous."

Points which he did not meet. 1. "He that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation."—Mark 3: 29. 2. "I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. 5: 20. 3. "When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed forever."—Ps. 92: 7. 4. "There is nothing leaves man at death but the breath of life." 5. "No part of man is conscious when the physical organism is dead." 6. "There is no promise that those who die in their sins will ever be cleansed and saved."

Mr. Baker claimed that all men would put on incorruption and immortality at the resurrection, and so all men would be saved. But he also admitted that some men die in their sins, and remain unconscious till the resurrection; consequently, cannot reform while dead. He also admitted that they must lead holy lives before they can be saved, and yet claimed that all will rise to be accepted by the Lord, at the time of the resurrection. He failed to show when they were made pure, or how they formed a good character between death and the resurrection, in an unconscious state.

Bro. J. D. Merriam was present and took a phonographic report of the discussion, from which he proposes to publish in the Crisis a condensed view of the arguments adduced. For this reason we will not say more at this time.

After the discussion, we preached to the people two evenings, and three times on the Lord's day. The community are much awakened to the searching of the Scriptures to see if these things are so. One was baptized and two requested prayers. The discussion has aided essentially in spreading the truth. Several who were wavering before the discussion began are now fully satisfied that the whole man sleeps in the grave, between death and the resurrection; and that the wicked will finally be totally destroyed.

We closed our meetings around the sacramental board on Sabbath evening. It was a pleasant season. Twenty-two sat around the table to commemorate the sufferings of Christ. There are some excellent brethren and sisters in South Ashburnham and vicinity. We found a very pleasant pilgrim home in Bro. J. H. Piper's happy family. We shall long remember their kindness and christian courtesy. Bro. Merriam, of whom we have spoken, is a faithful disciple of Christ, and takes the lead of their meetings, and frequently preaches the word to the people. He is worthy of their confidence, and we hope his labors will be extended into other fields. The churches should take especial pains to encourage the young preachers, and see that they are sustained; staying up their hands in their cross-bearing work. Speak the encouraging word, and comfort them with a cheering smile, besides seeing that their wants are well supplied. They need your sympathies.

Coming Events.

Many are becoming deeply interested in the signs of the Lord's speedy coming, who have hitherto looked upon the subject with indifference. The events transpiring in the world are so clearly those to be witnessed just before the coming of Christ, that many are now satisfied that we may soon expect the return of our Savior. An Episcopal minister in Philadelphia has issued a pamphlet for the purpose of showing that Jesus will return between this time and 1867.

The book may be had of Bro. Wm. Shepherd, Newark, N. J. Single copy, prepaid, 8 cts.; two copies, 15 cts.; four, 25 cents.

We make the following extract from the introductory remarks in this work:—

THE COMING BATTLE.

"Son of man, speak to the children of thy people, and say unto them, When I bring the sword upon a land, if the people of the land take a man of their coasts, and set him for their watchman: if when he seeth the sword come upon the land, he blow the trumpet and warn the people; then whosoever heareth the sound of the trumpet, and taketh not warning; if the sword come and take him away, his blood shall be upon his own head. He heard the sound of the trumpet, and took not warning; his blood shall be upon him. But he that taketh warning shall deliver his soul. But if the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand."—Ezek. 33: 2-6

The present condition of the world is admittedly unnatural and anomalous. We are living in times when the christian and the infidel, the Statesman and the Divine, seem to agree in the expectation that some great crisis is at hand. The public mind, both at home and abroad, is held in the calm of a feverish suspense. New and strange blasphemies are coming to the birth; the foundations of the State are loosing, and the Church of God is beset and assailed on every side.

Amid these thick clouds, all eyes are fixed with an eager gaze upon the dark and coming future. But who shall unravel its mysteries? Who can decipher its solemn roll of fate? Who can pierce with steady eye into the depths of past history, and read there, as in a mirror, the judgment or mercy in store for after generations? Who can expound the strange dream of this fleeting, shadowy world; or unlock to the faith of the church the royal treasure-house of the good things to come? It is here that the wisdom of the world stands rebuked, and its idols are all mute and silent. The research of its historians here proves futile and ineffectual; the policy of its statesmen is baffled and confounded. The future continues veiled from every worldly eye in deepest mystery; and every effort of human pride to decipher the solemn handwriting proves utterly in vain.

Divine prophecy is the only light that can remove this impenetrable darkness. There God himself reveals to his own servants the great outlines of his providence, and enables them by patient search, to trace through the past and the future the grandeur and the majesty of his high counsels of love. Here nature, providence, and grace are all combined for their comfort and instruction in the faith in glorious harmony. In two short books of Scripture, all nature is laid under contribution for rich and varied emblems whereby to express the mighty course of God's providence through two thousand years and the mysteries of redemption therein contained. There to the diligent search and patient study of the humble and devout christian, it spreads before his eyes in one vast expanse a landscape of wondrous grandeur and surpassing beauty, and whose horizon is fringed with the bright and dawning glories of eternity."

Inconceivably sublime is the position occupied by that individual, who taking these unfoldings of the Divine mind as a lamp to his feet and a light to his path, is thus enabled to gaze upon the thrilling spectacle which the world will soon present, with calmness and assurance, 'seeing the end from the beginning.' It is like one of the ancient prophets of Israel gazing from some far off mountain-side on the fulfillment of one of his own prophecies. While with rapt attention he contemplates the distant scene, perhaps a city staggering into the bosom of an earthquake, or the progress of a battle between Israel and her enemies, it baffles the imagination to conceive his calmly glowing feelings, as privileged beyond all mortals, he beholds what had already been pictured to his mind, and can tell the next dwelling place that shall go crashing down or the next enemy that shall lick the dust! Still greater and more commanding, is the position of one who can pass the boundary of the thick darkness, and behold the mystic shapes that flit and gambol there into regularity and order. The dense mist, which like a curtain has hitherto enclosed the prospect in impenetrable gloom, rolls slowly upward, and the things it concealed loom forth, dimly it may be, but still visible enough in their outline and lineaments to enable him to recognize them, as the clouds of time bear him slowly past. The emotions awakened by the contemplation of a position like this are with difficulty realized. To reflect that [illegible] highly privileged, that those whom the events so nearly concern are ignorant of them, to witness the terror and astonishment with which they [illegible] they come to destroy, to know that he and partakers of a like faith are beyond the reach of their sweeping calamity, to reach a position never before attained to by any save the inspired of the Lord."

A New Tract, of twenty-four pages, entitled "Bible Teachings," compiled by Isaac Dimmick of Vermillionville, Lasalle Co., Ill., has lately been published, and is now offered by him to the public without money and without price. Will not therefore some of the brethren of the faith be disposed to write to him, enclosing stamps for pre-paying the postage, and receive numbers of copies for distribution in their own respective neighborhoods?

For the Crisis.

A New Book.

I have just finished a perusal of the "Disquisition on Prophecy," by F. H. Berick, with which I am much pleased. It is truly "multum in parvo"—"much in little"—giving a lucid demonstration of the literal fulfillment of prophecy in relation to kingdoms, countries, cities, towns, and character of nations and individuals, embracing the history of the world and church from the days of Abraham to the present age. The student of prophecy will find it a valuable work, saving much time in searching for a fulfillment of the predictions of the prophets. It is well arranged and calculated to strengthen and comfort the believer in the word of God, and put to flight the doubts of the doubting, and shake the foundations of infidelity. It is an excellent work to circulate, and adapted to the times, and calculated to beget an interest in the study of prophecy. I hope this work will have a general circulation. More information may be obtained in reading it than hearing many fine-spun sermons that may please the hearer without improving the mind. J. Hemenway.

For the Crisis.

The True Church.

This church is the house of God, and is built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. This church is the body of Christ, and this body is not a monster, made up of every thing which has been called by this name. This church is the temple of the Holy Spirit, of which Moses' tabernacle and Solomon's temple were types. As those types had God's seal or mark upon them, so will also the true church have the same. When God restores the true church, the mark will also appear. Until then, it may be blasphemy to assume this name. I know the blasphemy of those who say they are Jews and are not. Rev. 2: 9.

"Bible Doctrine."

Bro. Grant:—The following is a notice of my pamphlet on the Old and New Covenant, the Superiority of the New, from the pen of B. P. Stone, D. D., and Editor of the Congregational Journal, published at Concord, N. H.:—

Bible Doctrine of the Old and New Covenant, the Superiority of the New, by A. W. Sibley, Horn's Mills, N. H.

This is a pamphlet of nineteen pages, which may be found at the bookstores. It is well written, and is worth reading; but we cannot accord with all the views presented, particularly that the Decalogue is a part of the Old Covenant or law which is done away in Christ. As we understand the Scriptures, it is the ceremonial and civil law of the old dispensation, that is supplanted by the New Dispensation. The law of the Decalogue is a moral law, and cannot be done away from the nature of the case. Christ himself re-enacted it in the summary of the two great commandments. The principles of this law can never be abrogated, though the civil codes built upon it may change. The writer confounds the moral law with the ceremonial under the Old Covenant. His views, also, of perfection, we think, are unscriptural. The obligation to be perfect, derived from the divine command, is one thing; and the ground of salvation is another. If the sinner can obtain perfection, he cannot be saved by Christ, but by the law, for Christ came to save only those who could not be saved by the law, because they have not been perfect in their obedience to it. A perfect righteousness needs no atonement for sin.

If the writer would revise his essay and draw a comparison only between the Old Covenant or Dispensation as a legal system, and the New Covenant or New Dispensation as a system of grace, showing in what respects the latter is superior to the former, he would greatly improve it.

Orders with or without the cash will be promptly attended to for the above work. Price, single, 10cts.; $6.00 per hundred. For sale in Concord, N. H., by B. W. Sanborn & Co. It can be had of me by sending orders at Horn's Mills, N. H.

Correspondence.

From F. H. Armstrong.

Bro. Grant:—I see in the Crisis of Jan. 16th, an article from the Brantford Courier, headed "Approaching Calamities," in which the learned lecturer takes the position that Christ will come three and a half years previous to the entire subversion of Gentile rule. Although I cannot agree with him in dates, it is some consolation to find that there are some who with me, consider it prophetical that Christ will come efore the fall of Babylon. I find it impossible to reconcile the ending of the 2300 days or years of Daniel at any other periods than 1843 and 1883, while the coming of our Lord may be in 1876. My reasons are, first, the 70 weeks or 490 years must be a part of the 2300; else why did the angel call Daniel's attention to it? Let us examine the facts in the case and see if they must not be necessarily connected.

Daniel, in the 7th chap., has a vision of four beasts or four universal monarchies, which were to precede the coming of the Lord. But there was no time given. In the 8th chap. he has another vision beginning with the second or Medo-Persian kingdom in the height of its power, and is again carried through to the breaking of the last one. He has also time given him for the duration of this vision, but no event to date from; and although the angel explained the great outlines of it, Daniel declares none understood it. Query. What was not understood? Evidently, the manner or kind of time and the date of commencement. His mind, no doubt, was chiefly engrossed by that which most immediately concerned him, viz., their return from Babylonish captivity. But in this vision he sees a desolation so disastrous and lengthened, he sickens and faints at the angel's explanation, and his mind is wrapped in doubt and difficulty on the subject. This vision, henceforth, occupied much of his mind, and hence, in the midst of his prayer, while he was supplicating God for the desolated sanctuary, God sends his angel Gabriel, whom he had seen in the vision at the beginning, (at a former time there is no symbolized vision here—it is open demonstration,) "And he informed me and talked with me, and said, oh Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding; therefore understand the matter and consider the vision." He now proceeds to explain the part before unexplained, and says, "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon the holy city (that is, 490 years are taken off the 2300, for a specified purpose, as follows): to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy (make it sure), and to anoint the Most Holy." The vision would still be exceedingly obscure had the angel stopped here, but he adds, "Know therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem unto Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks and threescore and two weeks (69 weeks or 483 years): the streets shall be rebuilt again, and the wall, even in troublous times, (which should occupy the first seven weeks or 49 years); and after threescore and two weeks (following the seven, making 69, and before the completion of the 70) shall the Messiah be cut off, but not for himself: and the people of the (Roman) prince that shall come, shall destroy the city and sanctuary: and unto the end of the (last week or seven years) war, desolations are determined. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations, he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation," etc. This last verse was exactly fulfilled by the Roman power, and finished in point of event the seventy weeks; and if that made sure the prophecy, the ending of Gentile power cannot cease fully till 1883.

The last week of the seventy ended A. D. 73, and the 2300 years less the 70 weeks or 490 years leaves 1810, to which add A. D. 73, brings us to 1883, which shows, we think, conclusively that the last 40 years of the forbearance of God with the Jews was typical of a like period to the Gentiles, and shows that 1883 is the farthest possible limit of their domination over any part of the earth; and we think it impossible to make the 2300 years commence at any period different from the 490, which seals or makes sure the prophecy. Explanations of time is all that Gabriel has to communicate, and the first part, or seventy weeks, like an arch spans the doubtful river of uncertainty behind the christian era, and makes the balance sure. That 1883 is the farthest possible period that prophecy points to, either directly or by analogy, for the ending of earthly governments, I feel satisfied; but that Jesus will shorten the days in reference to his coming is my greatest desire.

Obituary Notices.

On Tuesday, Feb. 12th, 1861, Sister Mariett P., widow of Bro. Daniel N. Stocking, fell asleep in Jesus, (three years and five days after the decease of her husband) aged fifty years.

Sister Stocking was the child of a praying mother, who was converted in the Great Revival, whose prayers for her children early made impressions upon the mind of Mariett, which have never been effaced. From nine years of age to sixteen she was continually under deep concern of mind, but being ignorant of the way of faith, she remained in darkness and condemnation. Later in life she learned the heavenly path, and with her husband, who had also learned to know the Lord, she was baptized in Westfield, in the year 1844, by Eld. King S. Hastings. Her faith and hope became from that time more strong and joyous in the Lord. Their home was the pilgrim's home, and their hearts were united in the good work of God. Three years ago her husband died in peace and in Christ, and her sorrow for him wore her down in health. She became feeble, and last June had hemorrhage of the lungs. From that time she continued to fail. Her faith however grew strong, and often the silence of her sick room was broken by words of praise from her lips. Said Bro. Chapin, the Methodist preacher, "Sr. Stocking died well." So she did, and in good hope of a glorious resurrection. She sleeps in Jesus, and though we sorrow, it is not without hope.

The writer was summoned to minister consolation to the afflicted friends. Opening the old family Bible, he found the passage, Isa 25: 9, "He shall swallow up death in victory," marked by the hand of Bro. Stocking, and by these words of hope he strove to give consolation to the afflicted and sad. He was assisted by Bro. R. Wendell, and Bro D. E. Chapin of the M. E. Church. Five children survive their parents; Sr Rosa, the eldest, having now a double care to fill a parent's place to her two brothers and two sisters, one of them being but a little child. May God bless these dear afflicted ones, and may they know the God of their father. Pray for the orphans, brethren and sisters, that they may all meet the loved and lost ones in the better land.

H. L. H.

Died, in Worcester, Mass., March 5th, Sister Emeline, wife of Bro. Samuel Ayres, aged thirty seven years.

Sister Ayres experienced religion in early life, but not proving faithful to Christ, she fell into a backslidden state, from which she was awakened by the faithful preaching of Eld. F. G. Brown, in 1843, and was soon after baptized by Eld. I. R. Gates.

She ardently loved the great truths of the gospel relating to Christ's first and second advent, resurrection of the dead, and the establishment of God's everlasting kingdom. She maintained a life of christian integrity until her death, although she expressed some regret upon her death bed that she had been no more faithful to Christ, especially in the family devotions. She was a dutiful and affectionate wife, a kind and indulgent mother, a faithful and sympathetic friend. She has left a husband and three children to mourn her loss, who mourn not as those who have no hope.

Died, in Warner, N. H., March 16th, 1861, Bro. David E. Harriman, aged sixty-eight years.

He was a great sufferer for about two years, but more especially for the last few months of his life, his disease being a combination of gravel, strangury and dropsy. But the "blessed hope" of the gospel gave him divine support in his sickness and in his death. May the Lord bless his surviving widow, children and other friends in this affliction. A discourse was delivered at his funeral by the writer, founded on 1 Thess 4: 18.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices of the 14th.]

The French Corps Legislatif was engaged in debating the address, the main topic being the Italian policy, which several members strongly denounced, asserting that the English policy had proved victorious in Italy. One member warned the Government against suicidal policy, and predicted internal dangers ahead. Ministers protested against his speech and defended the Emperor's course.

Another conference on the Syrian question was to take place on the 11th. An agreement was soon expected.

The French papists publish despatches announcing the threatening attitude of the Mussulmen towards Christians in Syria.

It is denied that Sardinia is negotiating at Rome.

All is quiet at Warsaw; but it is asserted that agitation, though muffled, was increasing. Russian troops continued to arrive.

Naples, 13th. An encounter had taken place between a French regiment and seven hundred Papal Zouaves. A French colonel was killed and forty-three men wounded.

Romano has tendered his resignation as Minister of the Interior at Naples.

The Italian army is to be divided into six corps d'armee. The fourth corps under Cialdini goes to Bologna.

Warsaw, 13th. A separate Council of State has been granted by the Emperor to the Kingdom of Poland; Zornisky has been appointed President.

Paris, 13th. The Patrie denies that Prince Napoleon is about to visit Italy.

War had broken out between the British and [illegible] river. The town of Saba was attacked. The Windinges were defeated with great loss of life. [illegible]

Shanghae, Jan. 24. Pekin is quiet. The troops at Tien Tsin were healthy, and the treaty was working satisfactorily. The rebels were defeated by the Imperialists at Ching Jiang was peaceful.

Canton, Feb. 1. Lord Elgin had left. The American ship Vesperus had been burned. Trade was depressed.

Singapore, Feb. 7. The Java cable is lost. The French had been victorious at Saigon. The French transport Weser was wrecked. Every thing was quiet.

ITALY.

The Queen of Spain has offered to the Pope her royal palace at Madrid. His Holiness, however, intends remaining at Rome. He has recalled all his soldiers to Rome, with the exception of three companies of Papal Zouaves, which are still at Anagni.

Naples, March 6. The Archbishop of Naples refused to be present at a Te Deum celebrated for the surrender of Gaeta. Popular disturbances ensued, and the Archbishop's palace was attacked by the people. Strict orders have been sent respecting the resistance of prelates.

A letter from Rome says: Francis II., the Dukes of Modena and Tuscany, the Pope, and the Emperor of Austria, have formed a secret alliance to act together with money and arms against the new kingdom of Italy.

The Movimento of Genoa publishes the following letter from Garibaldi to one of his friends:

"Caprera, Feb. 15.—Dear Bandi: I have received our Duff with great pleasure, and I sincerely thank you for the good news you have given me, in telling me of the patriotic enthusiasm which animates the youth of Tuscany. Tell those brave sons of the mother country that we are approaching the time when the slavery of our brethren of Venice and Rome must cease, and when each of you will be at his post. Your friend,

G. Garibaldi.

SYRIA.

The Paris papers publish telegrams, dated Beyrout, Feb 25th, asserting that the Mussulmans had redoubled their insults and provocation against the Christians at Damascus. The Mussulmans were said to have thrown down the crosses and trampled them under foot, as they did before the late massacre. The Paris papers add: "It is asserted that consular reports confirm the statement that the Christians are in danger. The emigration is said to have recommenced. The Druses of the Hauran threaten the most implacable vengeance should Fuad Pasha order the execution of the condemned Druses."

It was reported at Paris that the French ambassador at Constantinople was on the point of concluding an agreement, in virtue of which the French army in Syria would prolong its occupation for six months beyond the time originally agreed upon.

A Paris correspondent says France certainly will not withdraw her troops from Syria at the end of the six months named in the convention, and will as certainly keep them there after the proposed extended period.

SPAIN AND THE POPE.

Madrid, March 7th. The Ministry have pronounced themselves in favor of the temporal power of the Pope. They have declared that they consider the project of the partitioning of Rome between the Pope and King Victor Emmanuel as unworthy of serious discussion. The idea of transferring the Papacy to Jerusalem they stigmatized as absurd, and stated that Europe must preserve within her the chief of the church.

FAMINE IN INDIA.

We take the following from the Overland Times and Standard —

"The famine is great in the land. Horrible accounts reach us from the Northwest Provinces of human beings dying at the rate of 400 or 500 a day, while the desolation is not even limited to the vast expanse of country from Lucknow to Lahore. According to a Cochin newspaper, mothers in Travancore are selling their children as slaves for 6d. each, that they may have wherewith to purchase bread, if only for a single day.

While so many millions of the people of India are thus afflicted, it is at least a consolation to know that both the government and the public have exerted themselves with liberality and promptitude to lessen the weight of this terrible calamity. In Bombay from 70,000 to 80,000 reals have already been collected; and Calcutta and other great cities have also responded nobly to the appeal of the Famine Relief Committee. In the Northwest, the showers of rain that have lately refreshed the earth have, it is hoped, saved the spring crop; and, bad as our situation is, the worst, we believe, is already known."

DOMESTIC.

From Washington. We copy the following from the correspondence of the New York Tribune:

"Neither Capt. Fox nor Col. Lamon was permitted, while at Charleston, to examine the military works and fortifications made by the State authorities. They both visited Fort Sumter, under escort, and did not go beyond it. The chief object of their mission was to confer, personally, with Major Anderson concerning some points about which the President desired fuller and more explicit information than has previously been obtained.

The extent and nature of the works have been the subject of constant correspondence with the War Department by Major Anderson, so that the Administration is well informed on that score.

Notwithstanding the unauthorized contradiction in regard to the landing of 400 soldiers on board the Brooklyn at Fort Pickens, the fact is nevertheless true, and the order left here by a messenger two weeks ago. He is daily expected back, and it is quite probable the public may learn at any hour of the result of his presence there. It depends entirely upon the character of the secret orders which Jefferson Davis recently sent to General Bragg, whether these troops are landed peaceably or not.

Notwithstanding the reports from abroad, there is authority for stating that none of the great powers will recognize the Montgomery government, until the United States have first admitted or accepted it as an accomplished fact. The position of the Administration in that respect will be soon defined, since the instructions to the new Ministers must cover this ground completely.

The President has no power, under the Constitution, to acknowledge secession, and therefore he cannot receive the Commissioners sent here by Mr. Davis in any official capacity, to treat concerning the public property. This position was clearly and emphatically stated in the inaugural, and the President has in no way departed from it. But the Federal laws are entirely ignored in the seceded States, and a conflict of authority is about to occur in regard to the tariff and other questions, which will soon morally determine their exact status, one way or the other. Our government or their government must prevail. Both cannot exercise functions at the same time."

The Newark Daily Advertiser publishes the following:

"We are permitted to make the following extract from the letter of a young man at Fort Pickens to his father in this city. The young man was one of thirty marines sent from the U. S. sloop-of-war Brooklyn (on which he had been shipped) to the fort:

Fort Pickens, March 17th, 1861.

I have devoted my life to uphold the star-spangled banner, which waves over Fort Pickens. Two or three days before the navy-yard was surrendered, thirty of the ordinary seamen were picked out to protect the fort. I was one of them. I have been under arms for the last three or four months, and don't [illegible] may be attacked. The rebels talk strongly of opening fire from the other two forts (Barrancas and McRae) opposite us. There are 6000 rebels around us. The two forts and the yard are a mile apart. Fort Pickens is right between them. We are 160 strong, and defy the whole South. Every night since I have been here I have been stationed with another sailor at a ten-inch gun, which carries 120 lbs. solid shot. The gun itself weighs eight tons. We fire out of it grape and canister. We will fight till the last man is killed before we will surrender, though we hope the trouble will be settled peaceably. I have not had any money for the last three months. We shall get extra pay for our service here."

From the Herald's correspondence:

"There is no real ground for any apprehensions of civil war, at least not so far as the agency of the administration will go. Fort Sumter is about being evacuated. High authorities assert that no order has been issued to reinforce Fort Pickens, notwithstanding the statements of the New York organ. No attempt will be immediately made to collect the revenue in the seceded States by men-of-war. In fine, nothing will be done likely to precipitate a conflict.

The unaccountable delay in the eagerly-expected evacuation of Fort Sumter, together with the mysterious negotiations pending between Major Anderson and the Administration at Washington, occasion much anxiety in Charleston, and have exasperated the war spirit of the Carolinians to the 'sticking point,' apparently. Even the Courier, which has heretofore quietly opposed the impetuous war policy of the Mercury, now clamors for the evacuation or the surrender of Fort Sumter. Noticing the arrival there on Monday of members of the South Carolina Convention, which reassembled on the 26th, the Courier of that date says:

'The Convention has the war-making power of South Carolina, and Fort Sumter must and shall be under the Palmetto flag before any questions of Federal accession or alliance are considered.'

Troops for Pensacola.—Memphis, Tenn., 27th.—Five hundred Mississippi troops passed through this city to-day en route for Pensacola. A military reception was given them, and considerable enthusiasm was manifested.

Mobile, 27th. Advices say that troops and ammunition are constantly moving to Pensacola. Several companies are expected from Northern Alabama.

New York, 28th. The Tribune says that orders were sent ten days ago to retain a portion of the dispersed troops in Texas, subject to the order of Gov Houston, in repressing any attempt to overthrow the State authorities.

The Washington correspondent of the Tribune says orders were sent on the 14th inst. to land the 400 troops on board the steamer Brooklyn to reinforce Fort Pickens. No intelligence of the execution of the order has reached the Government, as all communications have been cut off by the Secessionists.

Castle Pinckney, in Charleston harbor, is now garrisoned by the troops (chiefly from Baltimore and elsewhere) and commanded by the officers of the regular army of the Confederated States.

A large nine-inch Dahlgreen gun, weighing 9073 pounds, is now at the wharf of the Northeastern Railroad Company. It was made in 1855, and is destined for service in the army of South Carolina. A large number of bombs of a large size were also received.

Philadelphia, March 29th. The Methodist Conference to day adopted a report repealing the new chapter on slavery, inserted in the discipline of the last Conference, leaving future conferences to make their own regulations on the subject.

The Conference also concurred in the resolution of the East Baltimore Conference, requesting the General Conference to repeal the chapter on slavery.

During the discussion on the various resolutions, there was much excitement.

The Inquisition in Power.—The French correspondent of The New York Observer gives an account of the arrest and imprisonment of Manuel Matamoras, at Barcelona, Spain, for circulating the Bible contrary to the laws of that country. Some three weeks ago we gave the facts in this case from an eye-witness who had conversed with Matamoras after his arrest. "G. De F., however, adds some particulars from letters of Matamoras, which show his present position:

"If I am condemned," writes he, "I will still protest through the press, in every country in Europe, against the iniquity which punishes for the single crime of professing christianity. The world ought to know that the Inquisition still exists in Spain, every one ought to know that it is a crime in this country to love the gospel."

He says further: "I cannot recall without sorrow the sad scene which I witnessed the day that I was arrested. When my beloved and unhappy mother saw that I was taken, she fainted away; my young brothers cried aloud and wept, believing that she was dead. I wished to go to my mother's relief, but I was prevented. Base cruelty! The remembrance of that terrible moment always causes me anguish. . . . But be not discouraged. Our imprisonment has rendered great service to our sacred work. All Spain knows that we suffer for the cause of Christ. Tyranny is the work of man; therefore it will have an end. Our work is of God; therefore it must finally triumph gloriously. As for me, I am perfectly calm. Let us pray to our great Master to pardon our enemies and persecutors." Ex.

Religious Movements in England.—The preaching in the theatres and public halls is signalized by the divine blessing. The converted miner, the converted sweep, and others, attract crowds to their services. Another of those deeply interesting midnight meetings with unfortunate females has been held in the metropolis. About two hundred of these outcasts were brought together, and Mr. Noel addressed them in his own touching and affecting style. About twenty young persons accepted offers of the refuges, and expressed their willingness to return to a virtuous life.

John F. Palfrey has been appointed Postmaster of Boston.

Conference.

There will be a conference holden in Pawling, N. Y., at the Union meeting-house, [illegible]

For the church, S. B. Munn.

General Conference in Boston.

A General Religious Conference will be held in Chapman Hall, Boston, commencing Tuesday evening, at 7 o'clock, April 9th, and continuing each day and evening through the week and over the Lord's day.

The object and design of this meeting is not so much for the passing of resolutions or the transaction of ecclesiastical business, as for the advancement of pure christianity among us in true revival and reformation. What we as a body want and need, is not disputation or hobbies, but earnest, direct labor for the immediate promotion of the work of God in awakening the careless and indifferent, stirring up the luke-warm, and quickening into life and activity the too sluggish energies of the whole church in the personal work of preparation to meet the Master, who is before the door. In fact, we are too dull, too barren, and want more faith, zeal, love—more religion. And not only is it to be hoped that our meeting may prove a great means of grace to the waiting saints, but our hearts' desire is to see sinners converted to God, and thus made ready for the approaching great day of doom. Let those, then, who are asleep, awake and be strong. Let the righteous gird on their armor. Let sinful men be alarmed. All signs point to the speedy coming of the Lord, and it is high time that those who look for him be up and doing with their might their last solemn work. Let earnest and faithful prayer go up to heaven for the success of this conference. Ministers of Christ, plead with him for the spiritual interest of the meeting, and come to it in humility and faith, that our God who is now working among our churches in various places, may also pour his Spirit upon the worshipers at Chapman Hall. We invite our dear brethren and sisters from abroad to come. Come, all who can. Provision will be made by the friends for all needful entertainment.

Influence.

The rain is fast descending
From yonder vaulted sky,
And drop with drop is blending,
To swell the river high:
Word after word is falling
Upon the ear to-day,
Each helps to swell life's current
As it swiftly glides away.

Star after star appeareth
As darkness closes round,
Till a mighty host unnumbered
Dispels the gloom profound:
Smile after smile is given
To the sad, desponding soul,
Till hope springs in the bosom,
And makes the wounded whole.

Beam follows beam at morning,
And darkness hastes away;
The stubborn iceberg pineth
Beneath the glowing ray:
Act after act, in kindness,
Subdues the heart of stone,
Diffuses joy and brightness
On souls bereft and lone.

The rain drop, star and sunbeam,
Perform a noble work,
And teacheth man a lesson
That ne'er should be forgot:—
The word, the smile, the action,
A living influence hath,
An influence that will flourish
When the giver sleeps in death.

THE COMING STRUGGLE
Between the Church and the Powers of Darkness:

SHOWING THE MISSION AND DESTINY OF SPIRITUALISM.

No. 8.

But I will quote further to show that the Spiritualists design to carry out this regulation, and hence all who possess land from that time must become loyal to their atheistical religion, [illegible] false Christ, etc. About a year since J. S. Loveland lectured in Boston on the "Future of Spiritualism." In announcing his subject, he said he should prove, among other things, "Spiritualism to be the little stone of Daniel cut out of the mountain without hands and filling the whole earth." He stated in his discourse that there was to be a "general distribution of land" when Spiritualism is perfected. In the Spiritual Age of Jan. 14th, 1860, a writer, in giving the future of Spiritualism, says:—"In due time, through the intervention of Spiritualism, these servants of Christ (?), duly invested with authority from him, will make their demand upon the proprietors of the earth's surface, to yield up their illegitimate rights thereto, cancel their deeds, and submit that God's earth shall never more be sold, or held at a price nor even the fulness thereof." The writer says, "To effect this is the mission of Spiritualism."

In this trying time, if the children of God should attempt to hold on to their land, they will be dealt with as rebels to the ruling power; but if they accept of the land at the price of royalty, receiving the mark of the beast, God will judge them as rebels; hence, christians at this time will have no treasure in this world. Here, no doubt, will be the time when none shall buy nor sell save those who have the mark of the beast, for the assurance that they shall neither buy nor sell seems to imply that they shall not possess. I have already quoted their predictions of the false Christ, but I will allude to them again briefly:

"A youth is now living upon earth unknown to man and to those spirits who at this time are most generally in communication with us. He is the type of a perfect man. He is a sample to which the race shall ultimately attain. . . . . . He has a brain with new organs affording a broader forehead and a higher reverence. . . . . . He will possess powers of which men now have no conception. The wonders wrought by Jesus will be thrown into the shade by the more wonderful which shall be witnessed from this person and his twelve principle mediums, who are also in process of preparation for the work assigned them. These twelve are also as yet in obscurity. The youth will be prepared to act at the time of the greatest need. He will restore order from the confusion which shall arise in our country. The process of purification must first be here endured and when the paroxysm shall have passed, then will restoratives be judiciously administered by this person and his associates."—Christian Spiritualist.

He is alluded to also in the Spiritual Telegraph for last Jan. 7th, as the "Coming Man," "a Messiah," "not a Christ," "but one whom Christ said should come after him." But Christ has not told of any who should come after him before his second coming except the false Christs. I have seen other notices of this "coming man" by the Spiritualists and have heard them speak of him, but am not able to quote anything further now.

In the quotations from Spiritualists given in this article thus far, we have the outlines of an arrangement which will develop the image to the beast and its union of church and state, by which the world will be so far deceived as to accept it for the state of things to be introduced at the coming of Christ. I cannot forbear remarking here that whoever will mark the general operation of Spiritualism among men or the policy of individual Spiritualists in their conversation and writings, they will observe that while they deny the Bible [illegible] christianity as utterly unworthy of our [illegible] they will still seek to build up [illegible] the reputation which christianity has gained, and urge us to accept of their future arrangements as a fulfillment of the predictions of that very Bible which they tell us to despise. Though Spiritualism denies christianity, its Bible, its God, its Savior, its salvation, its coming of Christ, and its attending consummation of all things; it has still the audacity to counterfeit all these things and encourage the world to look for the development of their future arrangements as the fulfillment of the Bible predictions concerning the "Millennium," "The New Jerusalem," "The kingdom of heaven on earth," etc.

All the leading features and predictions in christianity are by it counterfeited, and appropriated to its own use. By it God is counterfeited in making him Nature, merely. Christ, as the Son of God and our Savior, is counterfeited, in making him only a man of ordinary birth, but a good though fallible man, and whose death availed no more for our salvation than the death of any one of the martyrs. Man as a mortal being—a candidate for immortality—is counterfeited in making him already immortal. Death as an end of life is counterfeited, in making it an introduction to a fancied world of departed spirits. Angels are counterfeited, in making them spirits of our friends who have died. The resurrection is counterfeited, in making it a fancied change from this to spirit-life at death. Our appearing before God to give an account at the day of judgment is counterfeited, in making God mere nature, to which we answer when we violate its laws. The destruction of the wicked is counterfeited, in making it a lower sphere or attainment in society in the world to come. The battle of the great day of God Almighty is counterfeited, in making it the general struggle now coming between liberalism and conservatism. The success of christianity in that battle and the setting up of the kingdom of God are counterfeited, in making it the success of liberalism over conservatism in the coming general revolutions and their "reconstruction of society" or "New Dispensation." The principles of christianity and their coming triumph over infidelity and all opposing errors are counterfeited, in making them the principles of infidel liberalism and their impending triumph over conservatism and the religious systems of the world generally. Christ's coming at the battle of the great day to set up, and become the head of, the kingdom of God is counterfeited, in making it fulfilled in their "Coming Man," who shall appear in the coming distress of nations, "showing great signs and wonders," restoring order from the confusion then existing. The twelve apostles associated with Christ in his kingdom are counterfeited, in making them "twelve principal mediums" or "teachers of philosophy" attending the false Christ. Christ's proposed work of taking possession of the earth and giving it to his saints at his coming is to be counterfeited by this false Christ, in taking possession of the earth and giving it to Spiritualists. Christ's proposed work of subduing the world to himself is to be counterfeited by this false Christ, in his subduing the world to himself.

In short, the spiritual movement is designed by the arch deceiver to bring about soon a state of things answering plausibly to the changes to be introduced at the coming of Christ, and which will, deceive the world generally. I would say then to the reader, BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS! Study well your Bible—your only "detecter"; and prepare for "the hour of temptation that shall come upon all the world to try them."—Rev. 3:10. Pray to God for "eye salve." We will now return and consider the policy and work of the two-horned beast in developing the "image to the beast."

It seems that after this two-horned beast "causes the earth and them that dwell therein to worship the first beast," there is a special effort to seal the deception of this world by an increased display of miraculous power in order to prepare their minds for the inauguration and support of this persecuting power. For there are many who can be persuaded by no ordinary means to give countenance and support to the inauguration of a system of intolerance and persecution, especially by those who obtained their power in avowing the right of individual sovereignty. But Spiritualism is capable of any audacity, with sophistry enough to speciously justify it, and miracles enough to give it an apparently divine recognition. Their principles of individual sovereignty will cease when they get the power to rule, when they will plead, no doubt, "the law of progression." This special effort to discipline the minds of the people, seems to be implied in the language —"He deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast which had the wound by a sword and did live."

It must not be understood that in this general departure to Spiritualism each church will endorse it as a body; though it will probably be so with the Catholic, whose leaders rule the body and will unite with the Spiritualists as a matter of policy, by a contract or bargain; but the right of private judgment prevailing in others, each member will act for himself. Hence, there will be individuals in all churches at this time who, recognizing their right to think for themselves, and cautious about the manifest corruptions of Spiritualism, will be slow to join the movement, while others will oppose it as utterly wrong. And besides these, there will be many who have made no profession of religion, but from various causes will not join them. All these together, with those who are "strong and do know their God," would never, probably, become Spiritualists while the ruling powers recognize the right of every man to think for himself in these things. But, believing that their mission is divine and all should submit; encouraged by their past success and future prospects; intoxicated with the hope that they are ever to enjoy a free and full indulgence of all their desires; and, directed and cheered on in these things by the continual communications from the invisible world, they do not hesitate, now, to compel those who connot be persuaded to adopt what they deem the only true religion and philosophy. Praise to the name of God.

THOUGHTS SUGGESTED FROM THE EIGHTH PSALM.

O Lord, how excellent is thy name,
To endless ages still the same;
The heavens above, the earth below,
Thy glories speak, thy wonders show.
From out the mouths of babes thy praise
In purest accents seem to blaze;
And in the suckling doth appear
Ordained in strength thy holy fear.
And then to view the heavens above,
That sphere of pure and perfect love,
The moon, whose pale yet beauteous light
Removes the dark'ning shades of night;
The stars, that in their order stand,
Waiting their course through ether's strand,—
Bright in themselves, but brighter still
While shining forth thy holy will:
Yes, these and all things else beside,
The vast creation, far and wide,
Every flower, shrub, and tree,
All speak harmonious, Lord, of thee.
Then what is man, thou mighty God?
That thou should'st from thy blest abode
Behold with pitying eye his frame,
Still mindful of his humble name,
Unworthy of thy smallest care,
Or of thy bounty still to share;
Yet thou hast made him in the form
Of angels, who around thee throng;
His head with glory thou hast crowned,
And honor's chaplet o'er him bound;
To rule the work of thine own hand,
Man thou hast set with all command,
With all dominion o'er the field,
Oxen and beasts, which labor yield,
The fowls and fishes of the sea,
Whose secret path is known to thee:
All these to man thy love hath given,
And more than these, a hope of heaven.
A hope of heaven,—but hush! my soul,
Thy muse can never reach the goal,
That place of pure celestial peace,
Of perfect, never ending bliss;
Which human eye hath never seen,
Nor sound of mortal ear hath been,
Of which the heart cannot conceive,
Nor mind of man the thought receive;
Of joys and treasures, where decay
Can never reach in endless day,
Of flaming seraphs, angels bright,
Eternal and immortal light.
Dear Lord of all, is this divine,
That man, like thee, is yet to shine
In worlds of beauty ever fair,
As kings and priests reign with thee there;
To sit on thrones of glory bright,
Be clothed in robes of living white,
Forever joying more and more,
As greater heights they still explore?
And does the appointed time draw near,
When Christ will in the clouds appear,
And place triumphant by his side
His weary, waiting, anxious bride,
And all his ransomed jewels place
Before him, rich adorned with grace,—
Wind up the scenes of earth below,
Give all their doom of bliss or wo?
Us for that time, oh Lord, prepare,
Of glory seal our souls an heir;
With rapture may we hail the day
When heaven and earth shall pass away,
And then a thousand years remain,
To share with Christ his blessed reign.

For the Crisis.

Toil on, Christian, better joys await Thee!

How cheering to the christian is the thought (as he toils on through this world of trouble) that he will ere long, if faithful, be permitted the fruition of joys far more pure than he has ever realized on this sin-cursed earth. This world affords no true pleasures to the humble follower of Jesus, for he has become as a pilgrim and stranger here, seeking for a city to come which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. Some of God's dear children are blessed with a quiet little home, kind friends, and just enough of this world's goods to make them comfortable. Others are far differently situated. Many without a foot of land that they can call their own. Still in the true sense of the word they are not poor for they have a promise of God's tender care, and he inspires them with a living faith to believe that if they do his will he will not let them suffer for anything that is really needful. Surely they that are chosen of God are rich for they have the promise of the glorious land promised to father Abraham and his seed; for the good word says, "If ye are Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed." Then will the poor despised people of God be far better off than those wealthy persons who trample them down with a look of scorn, as though they thought themselves much better because they could make a more brilliant outward appearance. Thank God! those who are so happy as to have an admittance to the inheritance of the earth made new will rejoice that they were not inclined to place their affections on anything here below. For the new earth will not bring forth thorns and thistles as this does. Neither will there be any need of a sun to light it, for the blessed Lamb of God will be the light thereof. Everything will shine forth with new beauty. And we (if faithful here) shall be permitted to enjoy these delightful scenes forever, even forever and ever. O delightful thought! There will be no sorrow, sighing or sickness there. Our loved ones will not be torn from our embrace and laid under the cold clod. There will be no need of funeral scenes and graveyards. No, thank God, our bliss will not be interrupted by any of these things. But the grave will not hold its power over our dear ones long, for ere long the trump of God will sound, and they will rise shouting victory over death and him who hath the power of it, which is the devil. Thus, although we are poor and forsaken, if we are Christ's we shall soon be rich. Then toil on, wayworn pilgrim, better joys will yet be thine!

"Oh may it ne'er of us be said,
No soul that's saved by grace divine,
Has called down blessings on our head,
Because that we have led them home."

Preach the Doctrine.

There never has been a time in the history of the christian church when doctrinal preaching is needed more than at the present day. As long as dark and unworthy views of God obtain, christian doctrine must be preached. Preach the doctrine of the gospel, to enlighten the mind, to pluck out from the soul the fear which has tormented it, to eradicate the old theological errors of the world, to bring man to the knowledge of the truth, to bind up the broken hearted, and give man a hope of blessed immortality through Christ, which can comfort him amidst all the sorrows of life, and enable him to triumph over death.

Thousands are yet to be brought to the knowledge of the truth who are now subject to the bondage through fear of death, and can only be saved from mistaken apprehension of God, his character and government, by the doctrine of the gospel. We say, preach the doctrine of life through Christ, in demonstration of the Spirit, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. A. M. M.

Selections.

Dr. Guthrie of Scotland.

BY REV. H. D. NORTHRUP.

Rev. Dr. Guthrie of Edinburgh is widely known both as a preacher and reformer. In Scotland no name is more beloved. Visitors to the "Modern Athens" invariably make it a part of their programme to hear this distinguished orator. With hardly an exception, all are pleased and profited by his ministrations.

Dr. Guthrie's pulpit talents are of the highest order. In person he is very tall, very slim, very erect, and very lean. He might be a "better sight to behold" if he answered more nearly to Irving's description of a Dutchman—"five feet six inches in height, and six feet five inches in circumference." He is now upwards of sixty years old, yet appears young, vivacious, active. He is beginning, however, to carry marks of age in his wrinkled face and long, neglected iron-gray locks. In the pulpit he invariably wears the gown, so common in churches of all denominations in Scotland. Probably in this respect he complies with the popular demand, for everywhere there seems to be a traditionary impression that a minister cannot be "clothed with salvation" until he is clothed with a surplice.

It is evident that Dr. Guthrie's sermons are prepared with the utmost care. Rumor says there are written out in full, and, as he preaches with only a scrap of paper before him, they must, in this case, be committed to memory. His discourses are good to read as well as to hear. He has a happy faculty of illustration, and has been accused sometimes of carrying it to excess. A lady remarked, as we were entering his crowded church one Sabbath afternoon, "You will be sure to hear something about a ship and a child." The prediction was correct.

A reference to "the gospel in Ezekiel," and "Inheritance of the Saints," will show that his sermons are generally a series of word-pictures. He does with thought and language what Angelo and Raphael did with pencil and canvass. Yet his similes are never used merely for their own sake; they are a medium for conveying truth. Brilliancy and beauty are conjoined with simplicity and directness.

In short, the whole style and manner of Dr. Guthrie is such as to attract all and offend none. Although his thoughts, often deep and subtle, are sometimes concealed by poetic imagery and description, yet the most intellectual can be fed, and the most illiterate can be interested.

He is not so giant-like as Chalmers was, or Edward Irving. He rarely arouses his audiences as much as they are narrated to have done. He has few of those grand climaxes and impetuous bursts of eloquence which characterize Rev. Mr. Punshon, the Methodist celebrity of London. But his delivery is graceful and forcible, his voice is well-toned and full, and he wins your attention and enchains you to the end. He has fluency, earnestness, directness; he has simplicity—he does not need to explain his sermon after he gets through—he has those characteristics which must of necessity belong to every successful preacher. He likes those things which reach the popular heart.

When he heard Mr. Spurgeon, he resolved, he says, to watch the effect of the sermon upon a couple who appeared to be a greengrocer and his wife. Some expressions were to him ludicrous and shocking, but these would inevitably turn the delighted faces of the ragged greengrocer and his wife toward each other, with a meaning look, which seemed to say, "Wasn't that fine?" Hence he indorses Mr. Spurgeon.

Dr. Guthrie is foremost in every work of reform. He knows that truth in the abstract is worth very little—that it becomes a power only when it has a practical application. His business is not to talk about the Bible, but to apply its truths. He is one of those "misguided," "fanatical" men who will persist in preaching against sins after they become "popular." Whoever has read his "Plea for Ragged Schools," will learn how much value he attaches to reformatory measures. His sympathies are large; he loves all whom Christ loves—universal humanity. He takes decided ground in favor of total abstinence. He believes that drunkenness is the curse of Scotland, and he fights the drinking customs both by precept and example. He is almost sure to be found at every public meeting in Edinburgh which looks toward restraining vice and bettering the condition of the working classes. On the platform he is fluent, witty, bold, popular. He is resolutely hostile to American slavery, and affirms that the North is quite as much to blame as the South, because Northern ministers and churches do not blow the trumpet-blast, as they ought, against this iniquity.

Dr. Guthrie is a most agreeable man to meet socially. The poor and polite, the high and low, share alike in his attentions and kindness. Would that the world had more of such eloquent preachers and reformers, whose life is a blessing, whose example is so Christlike, whose good deeds will live long after them—Independent.

One Drop at a Time.

Have you ever watched an icicle as it formed? You noticed how it froze one drop at a time until it was a foot long, or more. If the water was clean, the icicle remained clear, and sparkled brightly in the sun; but if the water was but slightly muddy, the icicle looked foul, and its beauty was spoiled. Just so our characters are forming—one little thought, or feeling at a time, adds its influence. If each thought be pure and right, the soul will be lovely, and will sparkle with happiness; but if impure and wrong, there will be final deformity and wretchedness.

RECOGNITION.—"I read an account of a man who, traveling at night, not long ago, in the midst of a snow-storm, and seeking a house, but concluding that he should not be able to reach it, turned over his sleigh, and wrapped himself in his buffalo robe, and waited till morning, when he found that his sleigh was turned up against the door-yard fence of the very house that he was seeking.

Now, hundreds of christians are sleeping in God's door-yard, and do not know it! They have fulfilled every condition of the gospel, and nothing is wanting but that they should look up and say, 'Why, there is the very house that I was looking for!'" —Beecher.

CONTENTMENT.—"I never complained of my condition," says the Persian poet, Sadi, "but once, when my feet were bare, and I had no money to buy shoes; but I met a man without feet, and was contented with my lot."

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

For the Crisis.

We must eat Salt.

Why? 1. Because deer and buffaloes eat it! But deer and buffaloes eat grass; must I eat that? Hundreds and thousands of deer and buffaloes never saw a salt lick. Can any body tell wherein they come behind those deer and buffaloes who once or twice a year stick their noses in a salt spring? But do hogs and horses frequent the salt licks? Why are not they as good patterns as deer? Some horses will spit salt out of their mouths as fast as you can put it in. Suppose I follow their example?

2. Because every sacrifice must be salted with salt, and our bodies are "living sacrifices," and therefore they must be salted with salt too. This is pretty near a knock-down argument; that is, it ought to knock down any cause that needs its support. If a man cannot be accepted of God unless he is pickled with Turk's Island salt, why then what will become of us poor souls who have not eaten an ounce of salt for a year or two? The old sacrifices were not salted by feeding salt to the sheep, and I would suggest that if a man would stand up to his neck in a barrel of strong brine Sunday morning for an hour, that would salt his "sacrifices" sufficiently if he had not a grain of salt in his victuals.

3. Mr. Professor somebody, who has always eaten salt from babyhood, says that somebody else said that in barbarous times they used to kill people by giving them "saltless food." Fudge! they must have been fools. Give them the salt without any food, and I warrant you it would kill them a thousand times as quick. Try it on a toad or a chicken, if you doubt it. I know persons who have not eaten an ounce of salt, I think, in several years; they die "'mazin slow." I should like the proof that ever a criminal was killed by eating a good supply of well cooked, healthy food without salt in it. I have known several persons to die that have been salt eaters. Some have had all the salt they wanted, and died too; did that kill them? One man was once killed by turning a little stream of warm water on his arm while his eyes were bandaged. He thought he was bleeding to death, and died just as quick as if a vein was opened. A man might die for want of salt in the same way. Make him think that maggots and death are after him, and his fears might kill him.

4. Mr. Professor somebody says if you do not eat salt, you will get full of maggots, and the worms will eat you up before your time, for ancient writers say so. Yes, no doubt. And ancient writers say that terrible diseases can be cured by "moss that groweth on a dead man's skull," and all such things; but what dunce believes it? What makes maggots in the backs of cattle who do eat salt? Did not Herod eat any salt? Worms do eat salt eaters finally, I believe. If there ever was a foolery that "ancient writers" did not support, what is it? I do not eat salt. Now fetch on your maggots. How would tobacco do as a preservative? Here are plenty of persons who let the stuff alone; they don't seem to be very "wormy" yet. The most trouble they have is when they get a mouthful of salt food, which some dear soul assures them "isn't salted the least mite," into their mouths, and can't get the feverish taste out all day.

5. Animals crave salt and will get sick without it. So do topers crave rum, and get sick without that till they get weaned. Who salts hogs that run in the woods and pastures all summer and autumn? Men that have tried both ways, say horses and cattle are better without salt than with it. Milk men feed cows salt to make them drink largely and produce lots of milk—i. e., those who don't take the milk cans to the pump direct.

6. There is salt in large quantities in the blood, bile, sweat, etc. Yes, so there is rum in large quantities in the blood and bile and sweat and in the brains of an old toper. If a man believes his carcass must be salted so that he may be an acceptable "sacrifice" to God, of course he will keep pickled, blood, bile, sweat and all. My bile, digestion, cartilages and all the rest, get along well, and I say, the less salt for me the better. I never heard of any one's blood being analyzed but those who have eaten salt all their days. You can find tobacco in some men's blood. Thank God, I think there's none in mine, and not much salt. But suppose there is salt in pure blood, what then? There is salt in grass, herbs, plants, fruits, etc., and enough of it, I think, for my use; and this salt, taken up and elaborated by nature, is fit to go into the human system and supply all needs, without shovelling rocks down a man's throat. Inorganic matter is not very good nutriment, I believe.

7. Somebody says salt is just as needful as water, for water has not any nourishment in it except the little animalculæ it contains! Well, let somebody live as long without water as I can without salt, and he shall have my hat—(no great prize, but he's welcome to it.) No living creature can exist without water. Take water out of a man, and he is dried up if not blown away. You weigh, my good friend, some one hundred and fifty pounds. Take the water out of you, and you might weigh thirty pounds, and would be a parchment-faced mummy. The food we eat is from three-fourths to nine-tenths water. This is the essential element everywhere. Without it our planet might be a heap of dust, and we should find our level very soon in dust. Now for the benefit of those who are willing to concede that I am not a "natural born fool," I want to say a few words.

1. I was never convinced by anybody's arguments that salt hurt me. I loved it too well, just as most of my readers do.

2. I never quit it until, in spite of my own wishes, I found to my positive knowledge that every time I ate it it hurt me.

3. Since then I have occasionally examined medical works, and having once practiced medicine some myself, I was surprised to find that there are laid down in medical works more pains, aches and ailments, which have been demonstrated by careful, rigid experiment to have been caused by salt, than I could write the names of in two such articles as this. I have now before me a small work, "Jahr's New Manual of Homeopathic Practice," which fills more than nine large, closely printed pages, with the mere statement in the briefest possible form, of the symptoms and diseases produced by "natrum muriaticum," or common table salt. I could give plenty of facts and authorities on the point, but I forbear.

4. I do not propose to give my experience at present. I may do so some time. But if any body wants me to eat salt, they must bring me some better example than buffaloes, deer, and wild asses, or I shall still take the liberty of letting what hurts me alone, till my mind changes somewhat.

5. Against all your buffalo stories I put the fact that Indians had no salt before the coming of Europeans; and now at the west, though they sometimes eat salt as a child would sugar, loving that as well as "fire water," for its pungency of taste, yet they would laugh at you to see you put salt on your meat. They never do it, I am told by those who have spent years among them. Said Bro. G—— to a Canada Indian, "How is it you go up hunting in the woods and bring down such great heavy packs of furs on your backs? How can you carry them?" "O! when we go up in the woods we eat no salt—all our victuals fresh—so we stout, our knees no shake—we no sweat—no have to sit down, so we carry big load. When we eat salt, then we sweat, our knees shake, we weak and have to sit down and rest."

I will thank the friends where I go to cook my food without salt. They may keep my portion for some one who loves it better than I, and yet is not able or willing to earn it. Yours,

H. L. HASTINGS.

The Reform Dress.

DEAR EDITOR:—

As I frequently read in your columns articles on dress, I infer that some of your readers are interested in this matter; and therefore, although unaccustomed to write for the public eye, I have ventured to write a little of my experience. It is nearly a year and a half since I commenced wearing the reform dress, as worn and advocated by Miss Austin; and although I have many times been laughed at, and ridiculed in public as well as in private, yet I am not at all discouraged. I have received great benefit from the change. It is not only a more comfortable and convenient dress than the long hooped skirts, but it is much more economical, which should have some weight in these hard times, or indeed in any times, with those who profess godliness. We are bound to obey the laws of life as far as we understand them, and we cannot expect health as long as we disobey.

How does any one suppose a man would feel or act dressed as most women dress? And is it because they are afraid we shall feel too strong and healthy, that any of them should want us to wear fetters that they could not endure? No. I think as a general thing it is pride that opposes this reform; if it was only the fashion, and that fashion only originated in Paris, one of the very wicked cities, it would do. Now I have no sympathy with any such nonsense. If we have common sense, we know that it is a great saving of time, labor and strength, and with some this will be greater argument than fashion. However, as a general thing, so far as I have been able to judge, women are far more bitter opposers of "this way" than men. Many of the best men of my acquaintance are in favor of it, and more would be if they were not too proud. An experienced physician once told me if the American women would adopt this style of dress, in three years disease would diminish one quarter among them, and I believe it. I am persuaded that the numbers wearing this dress are yearly increasing, among those too who make the change from good motives, and not for notoriety or fashion. Let all who think it a reform use their influence in its favor. W.

Stimulation vs. Nutrition.

Never was mortal man more unfortunate than when he mistook the relation between stimulation and nutrition. This mistake, in the physiological sense, may well be called the fall of the race. This has been for many centuries, the great grand error of the scientific world, and of the people at large. It has led to the use of the grossest compounds, under the name of food; of all sorts of alcholic combinations under the name of drinks; and all the most virulent poisons under the name of medicines. It is the root and starting-point of all manner of false theories and bad habits, and its practical application is spreading disease and multiplying infirmities all over the civilized word.

No two ideas can be more intrinsically different from each other, than stimulation and nutrition. They are exactly antagonistic; and yet learned men are continually confounding them with each other, or mistaking one process for the other. Stimulation always wastes the vital tissues, nutrition always supplies them. The perfection of all our organs and structures, and their fullest power to endure, depend upon their being nourished without being stimulated. Nature demands pure nutrition and nothing else. And pure nutrition is obtainable only from pure food. Food is the material capable of conversion into the substance of our bodies. Pure food is entirely destitute of all stimulating properties. And permanent health and the longest life our machinery is capable of attaining, are only compatible with entire absence from everything that will stimulate, whether found in combinations of alimentary substances, in the various forms of intoxicating drinks, in narcotic fumes, or in pungent condiments.—Life Illustrated.

God Loveth All.

'T is not our Heavenly Father's will
That one poor soul should die,
But that each one should turn and live,
Seek pardon from on high.
He heeds the sinner's faintest cry—
His mercy knows no end,
And when the contrite bow to him,
He 'll peace and comfort send.

He kindly offers life to give,
No price does he demand—
Only requires that we desire
The bounties of his hand.
His greatest pleasure is to dry
Repentant sinners' tears,
To fill their hearts with peace and joy,
To banish all their fears.

And if the sinful slight his love,
And scorn his mighty power,
Though deeply grieved, he 'vengeth n t
Till time shall be no more.
And while old Time still onward rolls,
His mercy seeks no rest,
But ever waits with open arms
To fold them to his breast.

A Condensed Report

Of a Discussion held in South Ashburnham, March 19th–22d, 1861, between Rev. Jacob Baker and Eld. Miles Grant.

REPORTED BY J. D. MERRIAN.

The questions discussed were as follows:

1. Does the Bible teach the final salvation of all men?

2. Does the Bible teach that any of the human family shall finally cease to exist?

The first question was discussed two days, and then the second received the same time. Mr. Baker taking the affirmative, commenced the debate.

His first statement. We are all the offspring of God. Proof, Gen. 1: 20, 24, which refers to the creation of the lower animals, the account being different from that given of the creation of man. "Let the waters bring forth," etc. "Let the earth," etc. Then it is said of man, 27th verse, "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him." The image of God is the noble powers of his spiritual nature. Christ's words are referred to, John 4: 24, "God is a spirit;" therefore man is a spirit. Man, though composed of body, soul and spirit, the higher essence of his nature is spirit, created in the image of God. Man is gone astray; therefore provision is made for his return. Proof, Lk. 19: 10,—"For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." John 3: 35,—"The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hands." This was made a strong point. All things embrace the whole human family. John 6: 37,—"All that the Father giveth me shall come to me." Referred to the lost sheep. He will seek till he find it. Rom. 5: 18,—"Therefore as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men, . . . the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." Another strong passage, 1 Cor. 15: 22,—"For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." The same number made alive in Christ that die in Adam. This passage compared with 2 Cor. 5: 17, "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature." Phil. 2: 9, 10,—"That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow," etc. Rev. 5: 13,—"And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them heard I saying, Blessing and honor," etc. This is spiritual worship, acknowledged by all to be such. As all engage in it, therefore all must be saved. Statement. God had a design in the creation of the human family, and he will accomplish it. Did God purpose to save the world? Another passage, Rom. 5, 6,—"In due time Christ died for the ungodly." Another strong point, John 12: 32,—"And if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." Judgment and punishment were designed as reformatory. Gen. 3: 15,—"The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." The serpent is to be destroyed.

ELD. GRANT'S FIRST SPEECH.

The first point to be noticed—"The offspring of God." It might be taken in different senses. If he means that God is the Author of Adam, it is true. But if that he begat them, it is not true. When the lower animals were created, they were pronounced good. They are changed now. "The image of God." In very many particulars, we are not made in the image of God. We are not omniscient, omnipotent, nor omnipresent. In what respect, then, is he made in the image of God? We shall endeavor to show that it refers to his physical organization. In reply to Phil. 2: 9, 10, see Ps. 2: 8, 9, "Thou shalt break them in pieces like a potter's vessel." When we dash a thing to pieces we have done with it. John 17: 2, "That he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him." This implies that some may not be given to him. Again, "Ye will not not come to me, that ye might have life." Some, it seems, will not come. The lost sheep are not goats. Rom. 5: 17, 18,—"Much more they which receive abundance of grace shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ." Does it mean that all receive it? "They which receive the gift of righteousness." Some are not righteous. Many does not mean all. 21st verse. The grace comes by being righteous. 1 Cor. 15: 22, "For as in Adam," etc. Death is not moral, but literal. Every man is literally alive or literally dead. 23d. "But every man in his own order," or band, or company. "Christ is the Savior of all men, especially of them that believe." All men are to be saved from literal death. Death came in consequence of what Adam did; but we are not to blame for it. Heb. 5: 9, "And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him." "Every knee shall bow." That does not make them good. Many deny him now, but will have to confess at the judgment. Rom. 14: 10, "We shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ."—The purpose of God. God purposes to save the righteous, those that obey him, and destroy the wicked. It will be done, certainly. It is not his purpose that men should lie, and steal, and murder; yet they do it.—Capital punishment is never designed for correction. Some do the will of God, some do not. Some are God's children, and some are of their father, the devil. What is to be done with them? The Bible teaches they will be destroyed, and I believe it.

MR. BAKER'S SECOND SPEECH.—A. M.

In reply to the argument drawn from the 2d Psalm, he quotes John 18: 1–4. The vessel that is dashed to pieces is made into another. Objects to the idea that the death of Adam was a literal death, and quotes, "In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." They died a moral death that very day. The effect of it,—they were afraid and hid themselves. The term, as used in the Bible, expresses moral death. Proof.—"And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins." 1 Cor. 15: 56. The sting of death is sin.—No one is to be saved in their sins. As God is good to all, he will use means to bring them all in. If necessary to break us to pieces, he will make us all over new.

ELD. GRANT'S SECOND SPEECH.

I call upon Mr. Baker to prove that man is a spirit. Gen. 2: 7.—"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." That is man, according to the Bible. To illustrate the likeness, he referred to the statues of Webster and Franklin. Because these were stone or metal, it did not follow that Webster was made of stone! Asks for proof that man is made over after being broken to pieces. Conditions of salvation referred to. Rev. 5: 27,—"He that overcometh," etc. Chap. 19: 15,—"And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations." Is that salvation? "They which receive abundance of grace and the gift of righteousness, shall reign in life." Does that mean all? If my friend proves all are righteous, he has gained his point.—The word rendered "surely die" is used twenty times in the Bible, and always signifies literal death. Moral death is the crime for which he must die. It will not do to confound the punishment with the crime. He referred to different translations of the passage. One, "Thou shalt be mortal in the day thou eatest thereof." Another, "Thou shalt be subject to death both of body and soul." Gen. 3: 19. Literal death. Adam lived 930 years, and he died. Gives a few passages for consideration. Matt. 26: 24, "It were good for that man if he had never been born." John 8: 21, "Ye shall die in your sins." Matt. 12: 32, "The blasphemy against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, neither in this world nor in the world to come." 1 Thess. 4: 16, "The dead in Christ shall rise first."—Some dead ones not in Christ. Acts 24: 15, "Resurrection of the dead both of the just and unjust."—So they die in their sins and come up unjust. Will my friend prove that they will come into Christ after this?

P. M.—MR. BAKER'S FIRST SPEECH.

He explained the text, "Every man in his own order," to mean in the order of moral excellence. Quotes John 5: 24,—"He that believeth . . . hath everlasting life . . . is past from death unto life." This is not natural death, but spiritual. Jesus came for judgment. John 12: 32. He referred to Mark 5, concerning the legion of devils that were cast out of a man, and expressed his belief that the devil and all his works would be destroyed. 1 Cor. 3: 13. The man's works burned up, but he himself saved, so as by fire. Works burned, but the man saved. Matt. 25: 46. Brings the testimony of Miles Grant to show that the everlasting punishment here referred to does not mean eternal torment.

FIRST SPEECH OF ELD. GRANT.—P. M.

1 Cor. 15: 22 again referred to, and presents different translations of the word rendered "in," as in, by, through. Our friend asks, Did I sin in Adam? No! I did not sin when Adam sinned; but I die, and little children die in consequence of the sin of Adam, and die literally. The order of the resurrection, "Christ the first fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's, at his coming;" then the remainder, those who are not Christ's. This corresponds with Rev. 20: 6. According to my friend's view, what are men saved from? Not from sin, for some die in their sins. Not from punishment, for all are punished. Not from hell-fire, for there is none. What then? John 5: 28, 29,—"All that are in the graves." What graves? moral graves? "They that have done evil, unto the resurrection of "salvation?" No! Justification? No! of "damnation!"—Reply to the idea that the judgment came at the first advent. John 12: 31. The judgment of this world in condemning Christ, compared with verses 47, 48. He came not to judge the world, but to save it.—What is the resurrection of damnation? After being dead and buried, out of Christ, how can they come up from damnation to salvation? John 8: 44, "Ye are of your father the devil." What is going to be done with those children? Mark 3: 29, "He that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation." What does that mean? Parallel passage in Matt. has been quoted.

SECOND SPEECH OF MR. BAKER.

He argues from the fact that the lower animals came from the earth, that the image of God in which man is created is of a spiritual nature. As God is spirit, so man must be.—Punishment is again referred to as correction, and quotes Heb. 12: 6–10, "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," etc. The lake of fire and brimstone is represented as being used for the purpose of bleaching souls from their sins. All for correction. After going through it, they shall be where tears shall be wiped from off all faces. They seem to be brought alive after the second death.—Quotes Gal. 5: 22, 23, to show that the spirit grows and bears fruit. Expresses surprise that John 12: 31 should be used to express the judgment of this world in relation to Christ. Now, this world is judging Christ. What an idea!

SECOND SPEECH OF ELD. GRANT.

He referred to passages in relation to the nature of angels; though they are spirits, are shown to be literal, tangible beings. One came to Peter and delivered him from prison. One rolled the stone from the door of the sepulchre of Christ. They resemble man, but are not made of dust. The Lord God formed man; not a body to put a man into; but formed MAN of the dust of the ground.—He quotes passages to show that the image and likeness of God, in which man is created, relates to the form of his material organism. Shows from Scripture that God has bodily organs. The idea we have, no God of personality, is only Pantheism. The correction referred to in Heb. 12 is to be received here in this world. But capital punishment is not correction or chastening. If we endure chastening, God dealeth with us as with sons. What if we do not endure? Rev. 22: 11,—"He that is unjust, let him be unjust still," etc. Fire and brimstone to bleach out sins! A new idea. The destruction of Sodom was set forth as an example. Did the fire and brimstone with which the cities were destroyed, bleach out the sins of the Sodomites, and take them all off to glory, and leave just Lot? No, this fire burned them up.

THIRD SPEECH OF MR. BAKER.

The reign of Christ spoken of in 15th of Cor. refers to his mediatorial kingdom. The last enemy, death, shall be destroyed. Inference. If there is no more enemy after death is destroyed, then the individuals who were under its power are delivered.—There is a spiritual body within this literal one; and when the resurrection of the dead is spoken of, it refers to this spiritual body. There is nothing to be saved, unless there is a spiritual nature in man. Quotes Matt. 16: 28, to show that the Son of man came at the destruction of Jerusalem to judge the world. Refers to Mal. where Christ is spoken of as a refiner and purifier of silver, and saves the whole of it.—There is a germ of excellence in every man: that is, the spiritual part of him. Quotes 1 Cor 15: 50, to show that the physical body cannot inherit the kingdom of God. We must be delivered from this bondage of corruption, be raised out of this tabernacle of flesh and bones, and be brought into that spiritual state, where we shall be as spiritual as they are in the other world. Jer. 31: 31–34 compared with Isa. 25: 6–8.

THIRD SPEECH OF ELDER GRANT.

My friend speaks of a mediatorial kingdom. The Bible says nothing about it. As to the arrangement,—God is spirit, therefore man is spirit,—God is not dust, therefore man is not. Here is a man building a wall of stones. The man is not stones, therefore the wall is not. Our Creator made the world. He is dust, because the world is made of dust! What kind of an argument is this? It is man that is to be saved, the whole of him. I make the assertion that nothing leaves the body at death but the breath of life. Matt. 6: 28, refers to the transfiguration, and was a vision. He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption, not salvation; but he that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reap life everlasting.—The purpose of God: To reward the righteous, and destroy the wicked. Christ was possessed of flesh and bones after his resurrection, therefore flesh and bones can inherit the kingdom of God. If I am saved, I am saved as a man, not some little immaterial essence, that has gone off into space somewhere. Rev. 21: 8. The last mention of the second death. No account of any deliverance from it.—Passages to show that some will not inherit the kingdom of God. Gal. 5: 19; 1 Cor. 6: 9, 10.

Eld. W. Pratt's Reply

To a lecture of Mr. Leo Miller, on "Comparative view of Ancient and Modern Spiritualism," in the Temple at Portsmouth, N. H., Sunday evening, March 3d, 1861. Reported by Mr. James Mitchell.

No. 4.

A spirit, who calls himself Thomas Rice, when speaking of some friends says:—"I want to tell those friends that there is no God. I know there is no such gentleman. . . . . There is no devil either. . . . . Seems to me as though man must be devoid of good sense to believe any thing of the kind." Mr. Miller said, to attribute Spiritualism to satanic majesty was blasphemy. I ask, blasphemy against whom? Cannot be God—the creator of the universe—for they say there is "no such gentleman." "There is no devil," they tell us. And none but "those that are void of good sense can believe any thing of the kind" they say. A query might arise in this congregation, to what family do these spirits belong? If we judge from their teachings, I think we can readily decide that they belong to him who was a liar from the beginning—the devil.

We will now listen to some of the spirits that are living on the earth in the flesh, and see if their theology is any better than the so-called departed spirits. I quoted Mr. Kellogg of Newton Falls, who wished it distinctly understood that "he believed nothing in the Bible; that it was all a lie, and that only knaves and fools would pay any attention to its commands." Said Mrs. Henderson, a noted Spiritualist, when speaking at the Melodeon in Boston:—"Jesus had natural parents. . . . . We cannot believe that there was anything marvellous, either in his birth, his life, or in his death. . . . . You claim that there may not be another Christ on earth; but we see no reason why there may not be myriads of them." Gibson Smith, a prominent Spiritualist and one of the earliest believers, in giving a synopsis of his belief says:—1. "I do not believe in the personality of God." 2. "I do not believe that the person who is called Jesus Christ was, or is, God's only Son. . . . He is no more the Son of God than was John Howard or George Washington." 3. "I do not believe that he who is called Jesus Christ is a Savior of the immortal souls of men." 4. "I do not believe that the Bible is the word of God. I believe it is the word of man in the body, and of men out of the body. I believe that ministers of all orders, who hold up to us the Bible as the word of God, and as being infallible authority in matters of faith and practice are dead weights of society, and serve as clogs under the wheels of the car of progress. They will surely be crushed to death under those wheels. Amen."

At the Spiritual Convention held for the purpose of inquiring into "the cause and cure of evil," Dr. R. T. Hallock said, as reported in the Spiritual Telegraph (their own paper) when speaking of the sentiments of another:—"Now, we may cheerfully sympathise with his mirthful explosion of the popular Divinity; no merciful man will object even to his expunging from his vocabulary the three hateful little letters [G-o-d] which express it."

Elder Grant, speaking of the discussion he held with Leo Miller in Plymouth, Mass., about one year ago says, "The great truths of the Bible were treated with contemptuous sport; and yet at the same time he claimed that modern Spiritualism is ancient christianity revived. We brought forward many facts from the writings of eminent and experienced Spiritualists, showing that Spiritualism is tending directly to sensualism and atheism. Among others, we mentioned the case of John Spear, the noted medium, through whom a number of advanced spirits communicated the materials for an octavo volume of 680 pp.: who has become the father of an illegitimate child, in the midst of his spiritual career; which act is defended by an able writer in the Spiritual Telegraph; and of which Mr. Miller said, "he (Spear) had an illustrious antecedent," referring to the birth of Christ." Among his (Miller) sayings are the following at that discussion: "There never was a time when God began to create men." "Paul never taught the literal resurrection of the dead." "Spiritualists reaffirm the principles of Christ." "Christ is not in a real body." "It is impossible for a demon to transfer himself into an angel of light." "Christ did not care a fig about the resurrection." "Spiritualists are performing as great cures now as Christ ever did." "A being higher than man is higher than God." "The soul is a spark of Deity." "God is in all things." "Man has all the attributes of God." "God cannot raise the dead," etc. Dr. T. L. Nichols, a noted Spiritualist, says: "Spiritualism meets, neutralizes and destroys christianity."

Did I say more than was true, when I remarked not one half of them believed in a God? These are the men that say God has a special care for them. These are the men that tell us Spiritualism has opened to us a new dispensation far more glorious than the gospel of Jesus Christ. These are the men that have come to revive primitive christianity. These are the men that claim the holy prophets as their ancestors. That the prophets were the ancient spiritual mediums, like these modern ones in our own day. These are the men that tell us they do all the miracles that ever were done by holy prophets and apostles and Jesus Christ our Lord. Yea, they tell us they do ten, yea, a hundred, where the apostles and primitive saints did one. You can see they make high claims, and to hear them talk in this way you would think they were the most devoted and pure people in the universe, and they hold so near a relation to the spirit world their doctrine must be harmonious and as pure as angels themselves. And furthermore, when they tell us of the wonderful miracles that are wrought by them, all would conclude they were men of great faith in God, the Bible, and all that is divine. But when you find out what they are, you learn to your great astonishment they are a set of infidels, pantheists and atheists. They are as corrupt, and more so, if possible, than the Pagans ever were. There is so harmony among them in faith, unless it is in rejecting the Bible, Jesus Christ, and Jehovah the creator of the universe.

Their wonderful works they tell us about never come to light. They are all done in the dark, and if ever seen it must be in the dark. All can see there is no affinity between these spirits and christianity, either in practice or faith. Their true relation is found in the text. They are the modern Jannes and Jambres who withstand truth. Men of corrupt minds reprobate concerning the faith. We will make a few remarks in relation to the miracles of the Bible, and we shall see quite a contrast. The miracles of the Bible were performed in the most public manner, open and above all jugglery. Moses performed his miracles before Pharaoh and all the wise sorcerers of Egypt, and they, (the sorcerers,) like the modern Spiritualists, pretended to do the same but were exposed. Elijah was another instance. But the New Testament abounds with accounts of miracles that were done in a manner that could readily be detected if there was any deception practiced. When our Savior turned water into wine, all at the wedding were witnesses. When he fed the multitude with five loaves and two fishes, there were five thousand beside the women and children to detect any deception. Thus it was with the restoration of the blind, lame and sick, that were healed among the crowd at all times and places. So in relation to Christ raising the dead Lazarus,—all knew Christ restored him to life,—daughter of Jarius also. The widow's son at Nain was restored as the funeral procession was moving in the streets. All, even the most bitter opposers, confessed these miracles were wrought, hence, I say, the miracles of the Bible were performed openly, and above all deception, in the most public manner. Do you see any thing like this among modern Spiritualists? If so, where? Does anybody know? Has any one of this congregation ever seen any thing of the kind? I do not ask whether you have heard Spiritualists tell of these things. But among the hundreds of Spiritualists in this region who claim to do ten miracles where Christ and the apostles did one, have any of you ever been present (that was not a Spiritualist) when one of these great miracles was performed? I have traveled in thirteen different States and Canada, and I never was so fortunate as to ever see any one that was healed by the spirits of the dead.

Before you can believe any of these pretended miracles you must first separate them from the lowest kind of jugglery, compared to the miracles of the Bible. Second, Imaginative—Psychology. Third, deception. Fourth, if there are any miracles wrought by these pretended spirits they are demoniacal—spirits of demons working miracles, Rev. 16: 14; for all miracles wrought by the apostles were done in the name of Christ. As Spiritualists do not believe there is any more power in the name of Christ than Tom Paine, it follows they do not perform their works by the same power or spirit, and if they really do any thing that they pretend to do, it is by the agency above referred to (Rev. 16: 14). (Here I will say, as I am not favored with the rest of the report from which to copy, I shall conclude the lecture from my own notes and recollection. W. PRATT.)

For the Crisis.

John 11: 43.

"And when he thus had spoken, he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus! come forth."

From the time I first commenced reading the Holy Scriptures, I have been very much interested in the resurrection. The text which I have quoted above is one that my mind has been very much exercised upon. Why did our Savior speak with a loud voice when he raised Lazarus from the grave? It is but a short time since my mind has been settled upon this question. It will be remembered that the old adversary interrupted our first parents' happiness by stating a falsehood, "Thou shalt not surely die." Jehovah's statement was,—"Thou shalt surely die." The happy pair believed the former statement, and the consequences followed. They were driven out of the garden. No more could they be permitted to hear the glorious voice of Him who commanded them not to eat of the forbidden fruit; no more to hear the footsteps of that blessed One who gave his only Son to die, that perishing men might be saved. No more to look upon that glorious fruit, which if a man eat thereof he should live forever.

And why all this? It was because of unbelief. If they had believed the command of Jehovah they would have gone on in prosperity and peace. It has been ever since the command of God was broken, believe, and obey and live, disbelieve, and disobey and die. The next development of this lying spirit is in the 4th chap. of Gen. in the transaction of Cain and Abel. In their offerings, Cain's offering not being accepted, he was wroth and contrived to kill his brother; and when called upon by God to give an account of his brother, denied knowing anything about the matter, which was a barefaced falsehood, and for this great sin, God pronounced the curse upon him. He was driven out from the face of the earth, and from the presence of the Lord.

Again, in Ex. 7: 11,—"Then Pharaoh also called the wise men and the sorcerers. Now the magicians of Egypt, they also did in like manner with their enchantments." A wise man, a soothsayer, a magician, or one possessed with a spirit of divination. The art of the magician, or soothsayer, was often the art of one skilled in natural magic, acquainted somewhat with the laws of chemistry, and able therefore to produce appearances among an ignorant people that would surprise them. It is evident that the spirits by which these individuals performed their appearances were spirits of demons, or devils, or lying spirits. Again, in 1st Samuel 28: 6, 7,—"And when Saul inquired of the Lord, the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophet. Then said Saul unto his servants, seek me a woman that hath a familiar spirit, that I may go to her, and inquire of her; and his servants said to him, behold a woman that hath a familiar spirit of Endor." The word familiar, applied to spirits, is supposed to have been used by our translators to imply that they were attended by invisible spirits, that were subject to their call, or that would inspire them when they sought their direction. The Hebrew word is used to denote a necromancer, a conjurer, particularly one who was supposed to have power to call up the dead, to learn of them respecting future events. Deut. 18: 11. The word is most commonly applied to woman as it was almost entirely confined to women to profess this power. Lev. 19: 31; 20: 6. The idea was that they could call up the spirits of the dead who were supposed to have seen objects invisible to the living; and who could therefore inform them in regard to things which mortals on earth could not see. The LXX render the passage thus:—"And if they say to you, seek the ventriloquist and those speaking from the earth, and speaking vain things, who speak from the belly." From this, it is evident that the art of the ventriloquist, so well known now, was known then; and it is highly probable that the secret of the art of the soothsayers consisted very much in being able to throw the voice with various modifications into different places, so that it would seem to come from a grave or from an image of a dead person, that was made to appear at the proper time. "And when they shall say unto you, seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and that mutter, should not a people seek unto their God, for the living to the dead?"—Isa. 8: 19. "That peep.' This is properly used of young birds, and means to chirp, to pip, and also to make a small noise by the gentle opening of the mouth. It is then applied to the gentle whispering which the ancients ascribed to departed spirits; the small, low voice which they were supposed to use, and which, probably, those attemped to imitate who claimed the power of raising them to the earth.

It was believed among all the ancient nations, that departed spirits did not speak out openly and clearly, but with an indistinct, low, gentle, suppressed voice. Matt. 12: 24,—"But when the Pharisees heard it, they said this fellow doth not cast out devils but by Beelzebub, the prince of the devils." The Pharisees heard it. It was necessary for the Pharisees who had determined to reject Jesus of Nazareth, to account in some way for the miracles he had wrought. Here was a manifest miracle; an exertion of power unquestionably superior to what men could do. The common people were fast drawing proper inferences from it, and coming into the belief that this was the Messiah. The authority and power of the Pharisees was declining, and about to become extinct; unless some way should be devised to account for these facts, their influence would be at an end. Whatever way of accounting for them was adopted, it was necessary that they should acknowledge that there was superhuman power. The people were fully persuaded of this, and no man could deny it. They, therefore, ascribed it to the prince of the devils, to Beelzebub. In this they had two objects to present to the people; that here was a miracle, or a work, above mere human power; and to throw all possible contempt on Jesus.

Beelzebub was an approbrious name given to the worst and vilest even of the devils. Matt. 10: 25; Luke 10: 15; John 8: 48. By giving this name to our Savior, they poured upon him the greatest possible abuse and contempt. Verse 25th, "And Jesus knew their thoughts." To know the thoughts of the heart belongs only to God. Ps. 139: 2; Jer. 18: 10. Their subtle and cunning devices were completely foiled, and Jesus made their arguments recoil on their own heads. A kingdom or family can prosper only by living in harmony with the different parts, and members must unite in promoting the same objects. If divided, if one part undo what the other doth, it must fall. So with the kingdom of Satan. It is your doctrine, that Satan has possessed those whom I have cured; it is also your doctrine, that he has helped me to cure them. If so, then he has helped me to undo what he had done. He has aided me to cast himself out, that is, to oppose and discomfit himself. At this rate, how can there be any stability in his kingdom? It must fall, [illegible] have less than human [illegible] of Christ here, [illegible] actually the power of [illegible] but only that they claimed it and practised magic or jugglery. Acts 19 : 13.

And so it has been ever since the days of Adam, Satan has charged home upon the prophets whom they have had any great work to perform, that they did the work with the spirit of devils. In all the instances of Scripture which I have examined, it has been the case; and so in the case of our Savior, and with the apostles. Acts 8 : 9, the case of Simon the sorcerer. Also chap. 13 : 6, to the 10th verse. In the 6th verse the man is called Bar-Jesus. In the 8th v. he is called "Elymas, the sorcerer; (for so is his name by interpretation,) who withstood them, seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith. Then Saul, who also is called Paul, filled with the Holy Spirit, set his eyes on him and said, "O full of all subtlety and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?"

And now I would come to the text which I quoted at first. "And when he had thus spoken, he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth." A loud voice,—Greek, a great voice—Syriac, a high voice. This was distinctly asserting his power. He uttered a distinct voice, that there might be no suspicion of charm, or incantation; no performing the art of the ventriloquist, to make it appear that his voice came from some distant grave. No peeping, nor chirping, nor making a small noise by the gentle opening of the mouth; no gentle whisperings, which were ascribed to departed spirits. No suppressing the voice to speak with an indistinct, low, gentle speech; but with a loud voice, so that people might not be deceived, who were gathered at the grave, and so clear himself from the blasphemous charge that he cast out devils by the Spirit of devils.

This miracle shows that it is possible to raise the dead; shows the way it will be done by the voice of the Son of God, and demonstrates the certainty that he will raise the dead. O, how important it is that we be prepared for that moment when his voice shall be heard in our silent tombs, and he shall call us forth again to life.

Words of the Savior.

"Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you."

It is a noticeable fact that most of the miracles performed upon the afflicted by our blessed Savior, while here on earth, required the co-operation of those who received the cure or benefit of this healing power. The palsied limbs of him who had kept his bed thirty and eight years, at the command of Jesus, took up his bed and walked. The blind man who had been in darkness from his birth was sent to the pool of Siloam, and bade to wash, and as a result returned rejoicing in the glorious light of day. The withered hand that had long hung as an incumbrance to the enfeebled body, must be stretched forth in order to be made whole. And thus those who received the light of God's glorious countenance, were commanded to walk while they had the light, lest darkness should come upon them. What a bright and precious light that was and still is to the benighted sinner; light, to believe on the dear Redeemer; light, to love and serve him, to obey his commandments, to run and not be weary, to walk and not faint, to mount up as on wings of eagles, while in the faithful performance of duty, of waiting upon the Lord, in all his requirements, according to his holy word.

There is always light in the christian heart, so long as there is effort. Hence the caution of the blessed Savior,—walk, not loiter nor linger by the way, nor sit quietly down to rest when duty calls, but walk, keep going, keep doing, be active, full of life and energy in all conditions, and under all circumstances. Suppose it is crossing to the flesh, mortifying to the pride, and difficult to bring the body under in order that it may make steady progress towards the stature of men and women in Christ, yet the command of God is imperative and must be obeyed; there is nothing that can substitute the activity of the christian, but he must go forward, must walk, according to the word of his Lord and Master. Is not this one great reason why so many among the professed followers of Christ are dwarfish and sickly in their christian graces? Is it not from the fact that they have mostly forgotten to walk to the closet, to the family altar, the Bible, the prayer-meeting and the sanctuary; that they are faint and feeble, and possess but little relish or ability for the delightful service of their blessed Redeemer? O, we have seen and conversed with those whose names are recorded in the earthly court of the Lord's house, who have taken upon them the vows of holy baptism, and before many have witnessed a good confession, but because the way of Zion is steep and rugged, and requires constant climbing to gain its high summit, they have tired in the race, have ceased to walk, and hence darkness, according to the divine word, has come upon them, and they are now unable to see their way clearly, but cold, heartless, and murmuring, they appear like the restless sea, whose turbid waters continue to cast up mire and dirt; these, also, find fault and [illegible] the straightness of the way, and the necessary walking in order to keep therein, when the fault is all their own, and lies concealed in the issues of a hard and impenitent heart.

O, when will professed christians learn that God is not mocked, but what they sow they will also reap, and that as they go along, if they sow to the flesh, darkness, sorrow and distress, and in the end of their weary and unhappy journey, the wages of sin which is death. But if they sow to the Spirit, and continue to walk in the light, no darkness will come upon them, but they will have rejoicing all the way through, and at the conclusion of their faithful warfare, they will receive the gift of God, which is eternal life." "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Suffering, and Glory to Follow.

Yes; no less than the death and sufferings of the Lord Jesus, the Christ, on Calvary's cross, for just such worms of the dust as you and I, dear reader. Only once reflect! Left his Father's glory that he had with him before the world was, to suffer and die for us. Although rich, became poor for our sakes, that we by him might have eternal life. Also the love of the Father—how great! "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life." Think of Gethsemane's garden, where Jesus sweat great drops of blood, pouring down to the ground. Of his carrying his cross till failing to bear it further, and another takes it. Of the rough nails piercing his hands and feet. Of his dying struggles. Of his prayer, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do!"

But oh! the glory that is to follow. That is to be eternal! After lying three days in death's embrace, he arose triumphant, to die no more. Hear him; "I am he that was dead, but I am alive forevermore." After forty days he ascended to his Father, and is privileged to sit on his throne till his enemies are made his footstool. Then in the glory of his Father and the holy angels, to come in his kingdom and sit on his father David's throne, and reign over the house of Jacob forever; "And of his kingdom there shall be no end." Then, and not till then, will the kingdoms of this world become our Lord's, and he shall reign forever and ever. Not till then will the glory of the Lord cover the earth as the water covers the sea. Not till then, will God's will be done in earth as it is now alone in heaven.

This, dear waiting ones, is only a faint sketch of the glory that is to follow, and it does appear to me that all those that love Christ's appearing, must feel to rejoice to think that his glory is so near to be revealed; and not only his glory to be revealed, but we are to be made like Christ's glorious body, and to be heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ. Hallelujah! We read, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor yet hath it entered into the heart of man what God hath in store for them that love him"; but, it is good enough, and it is ETERNAL. Amen.

Evening Shadows.—No. 3.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth, and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake like a dragon."

Dearly Beloved:—Having been a scholar in the school of Christ for many years, and believing knowledge to be progressive, in humility and brotherly kindness I submit the following as the result of much prayer and study over the precious word of God.

First. This power was to arise out of the earth. Bro. Miller, and the Rev. Edwin Ruthven McGregor in his excellent work on "Figures and Symbols," and many other expositors, admit the earth to be the Roman kingdom. If the above be correct (which I do not doubt), then it follows, that we must find the rise and maturing of this power on the Roman territory.—Daniel beheld a horn whose look was more stout than his fellows. The same horn made war with the saints and prevailed against them, until the Ancient of days came. Thus 'tis written. Now, then, if another power is yet to arise and fulfill this prophecy, the testimony of Daniel must be ignored. A horn being a symbol of a monarch, we shall present the succession of Roman Pontiffs as that power.

He is seen in vision, coming up, having two horns. We consider the western and the eastern Roman kings to be the two horns. When the Popes were coming up to the acme of power, which was finally attained, they were having these two horns under their control. Thus:

Pepin, King of France, the Western horn, who did submit to the power of the Pope.	Justinian, king or emperor of the Eastern division, the Eastern horn, who did submit to the power of the Pope.

Second. Did the papacy become a dynasty, a beast power? Dupin, a Romanist, declares that Hildebrand, who took the name of Gregory VII., no sooner became Pope than he formed the design of becoming lord spiritual, and lord temporal. Koch, in his "History of Europe," says: "A new and powerful monarchy rose on the ruins of the German empire, that of the Roman Pontiff, which monopolized both spiritual and temporal dominions, and extended its influence over all the kingdoms of Christendom. The court of Rome was then the only school where politics were studied, and the popes the only monarchs that put them in practice."

Third. The lamblike features of the two horns consisted simply in this: as a lamb is subject to the care of, and submits to be led by, and follows its dam; so these two horns did submit to be led by, and followed, the controlling influence of the Pope. And instead of drinking the sincere milk of the word of God, submitted to be fed with the corrupt milk drawn from the breast of the "Mother of harlots."

Fourth. This power possessed a very prominent mark. Historians report that Constantine prayed for light, and that while marching his forces, a miraculous cross appeared to him in the air with the inscription, "Conquer by this";—that the same night Christ appeared unto him in his sleep with the same sign of the cross and directed him to make it his military ensign. In the course of time it did become a military and religious ensign. The cross is emblazoned on the tiara of the Pope, the hierarchies' robes, the popish mass house and their place of burial, and was the talismanic emblem during the Crusades; and I think it is traced by the finger of the priest with holy water on the forehead of the infant at its christening. But a sort of holy reverence has inspired the hearts of many with the idea that the cross is a sacred emblem, because Christ our Lord hung, bled, groaned and expired thereon. But I differ therefrom. For this reason the cross is a relic of cruel barbarity, a beastly invention, an instrument of cruel and lingering torture—in my humble opinion, the mark of the papal, two-horned beast.

In conclusion let me say, if the earth was designed to symbolize the Roman empire, we see that just such a power has come up thereon,—a beastly power, with two horns, and just such a mark as seems identical with the cruel propensities of that prodigious institution. If I am correct, then, instead of looking for the future fulfillment of the same, look round and behold the day goeth away and the shadows of the evening are stretched out. "Tekel" on the monster's brow is written. Soon he will consume in flame.

Ripe is the vintage of the earth,
Its clustering grapes are round and full,
And vengeance, vengeance bursts to birth,
Sudden and irresistible:
Messiah comes to tread amain
The wine-press of the battle plain!

Report

Of the second annual meeting of the church of God at Blooming Valley, Crawford County, Pa.

Met according to adjournment on March 2nd, 1861, for business, it being appointed at our last meeting to elect our officers annually. On account of the roads breaking up, making it almost impassable, but few attended. After a season of singing and prayer, Bro. T. H. Dunn was appointed chairman. Bro. J. R. Hall, clerk, pro tem, in the absence of the clerk. After the duty of officers and the proper time for doing church business was discussed, adjourned to meet on the first day of the week after services, for electing officers, etc. Sunday morning met for worship. Preaching by Bro. Dunn. Subject, church order, from 1 Tim. 3 : 15, and Heb. 3 : 6; after which the meeting was called to order by the chairman, and following Brn. elected as officiating Brn., or elders. E. F. Canfield R. Harrow and Wm. G. Davidson. Daniel Cowen, E. Tyler and J. R. Hall, deacons. Bro. Davison treasurer, J. T. Ongley clerk. The report of the Evangelist was then read and received, and voted to be sent to the Harbinger and Crisis for publication, and also that he still act as an Evangelist the ensuing year as far as he is able, and can get means for his support.

Resolved, That we meet every first day of the week, for the breaking of bread, etc.

On account of its being a bad time of the year for holding a general meeting, the time was changed to the 1st Sunday in January, 1862. We then met around the table of the Lord, to show our faith in the Christ as the only hope of salvation, and to look for his return, which, as a people, we believe is truly near at hand.

Voted, That this report be sent to the Harbinger and Crisis for publication.

John T. Ongley, Clerk.

P. S. We hope those brethren that have promised to aid us this spring, will not forget us. A word to the wise is sufficient.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, APRIL 10, 1861.

The State of Europe.

All things in Europe appear to be approaching a grand crisis. The great event seems near at hand. The nations are circumstanced like several long trains of cars, bearing thousands of passengers, and approaching a common depot, from different directions, on a long down grade, upon which they have been running till their speed is so great that there is no power in the breaks to stop them, hence an awful collision is inevitable. Beholders stand aghast at the sight, with no possible means to afford the least relief. Horror-stricken, many turn from the scene, unwilling to behold the terrible results of the final meeting. Thus the great political powers of the world are rapidly nearing the battle of the great day—the battle of "Armageddon." They dread the onset; indeed, their hearts are trembling in view of the coming struggle, but it is too late to avert it now. Blackness already covers the political heavens, and the approaching hurricane must soon burst forth in grand sublimity, while the angry nations meet for their last great conflict.

The following speech, delivered by the celebrated Sir Archibald Alison, a short time since in Glasgow, shows how great men feel. He says:—

"I much fear that the horizon of Europe is overcast, and that a severer contest than has ever yet awaited us, yet awaits us in our own quarter of the globe—a contest which will strain to the uttermost the military and volunteer resources of the country. This very day we saw in the papers that Russia and Austria have concluded an alliance, offensive and defensive, and that the Russian ambassador has left Turin. There is war beginning between the North and the South. The war in the South is headed by Napoleon—a man of great ability, of great power, and who is actuated by one principle, which he has told us himself, for early in his career he said:

'I represent a principle, and that is universal suffrage; I represent a dynasty, and that dynasty is that of Napoleon; I represent a defeat, and that defeat is Waterloo.' He has got universal suffrage; he would fain elevate the dynasty to the power which it once held; and he is anxious to wash out the disgrace of Waterloo in the occupation of London. Then there is what is now going on in Europe. A gallant, brave and honest man—a great general, and an honest republican sails from Genoa, and overturns the monarchy of Sicily and Naples. Garibaldi, who does the whole thing, and fights the whole battles, the moment they are over, is dispossessed, and Napoleon through his vassal, the king of Sardinia, quietly steps in and takes the whole of the country that Garibaldi had won in a noble cause. He will tell Europe that he has given so much to Sardinia, that Sardinia is so powerful that he must get something to counterbalance it, and that something will be the island of Sardinia and Genoa, which will at once give him the command of the Mediterranean, and the entire command of his vassal Sardinia. I am afraid that a great war is rising on the continent, a war between the Northern and the Southern powers. You will see on the one hand Austria, Russia and Prussia; on the other side France, Spain and Italy. I do not know which will be victorious, but of this I am perfectly sure, that we have equal cause to dread the victory of the one as the other—that if the French are victorious we will be at once exposed to the dangerous policy of the first Napoleon; and if the Russians are victorious the whole of Europe will be flooded with cossacks. The only way for this country to preserve its position is, to assume such an attitude as to prevent the liberties of Germany and Britain being crushed by the democratic despotism of France or the Imperial despotism of Russia."

"The State of Souls."

Many candid and thinking men have been carefully examining the Scriptures, and do not find what they supposed was there; viz., passages to show that a part of man never dies, but remains conscious between death and the resurrection. They expected to find proof on almost every page, but after a careful investigation have not succeeded in finding one passage.

Says the New York Independent, "There is a certain dimness left in Scripture upon that section of our being which lies between the death and the resurrection of the body. . . . The place of the disembodied spirit is one of the conditions not clearly defined to us."

The reason is apparent, from the fact that there is no "disembodied spirit" that leaves man at death, to live between "death and the resurrection." The Independent truly remarks, "All the senses go to sleep in the grave, and whatever is dependent upon them becomes quiescent." It is certain that man, as an accountable being, is dependent upon his five senses for all the knowledge obtained in this world; and hence, when they are "quiescent" in the sleep of death, the whole man is unconscious, as the Bible most plainly teaches.

The Independent still further remarks, very sensibly and truthfully, that, "Paul, for example, in comforting the christians at Thessalonica, concerning their deceased brethren, makes no mention of their being at that time in a state of blessedness, but refers only to the joyful resurrection that awaited them. The apostle, in the passage alluded to (1 Thess. 4) leaps over this intermediate state, and springs to the great fact that God will bring them up, and perfect, and glorify them in the resurrection."

It is evident that the reason why Paul, or any other Bible writer, "makes no mention of their being . . . in a state of blessedness" between death and the resurrection, is because they are not in such a state. He "refers only to the joyful resurrection that awaited them," and "leaps over this intermediate state," for the reason that neither the Spirit of God, nor Christ, nor the Scriptures, taught him to the contrary, but common sense, facts, the Bible, and the Holy Spirit, all united in harmonious testimony to prove beyond all dispute that in the "intermediate state," the whole man is unconscious, hence he takes no note of time, from the moment he falls asleep in death till he is awakened in the resurrection morning. This is the obvious reason why the apostle "springs to the great fact that God will bring them up, and perfect, and glorify them in the resurrection." We think no point of doctrine is more plainly expressed than this; and none farther from the truth, than that a part of man continues in a conscious state while the physical organism is dead.

Teachings of Demons.

A spirit speaking through Mrs. E. A. Ostrander, at Allston Hall, Boston, Dec. 16, 1860, said, "Both the Son of Man and the Holy Ghost are myths of the past, and both will pass away." A "myth" is "a fictitious or fanciful narrative, having an analogy more or less remote to some real event." Then, according to the teachings of this spirit, the Son of Man and Holy Ghost never did and do not now exist as realities, but are only introduced as objects of fancy or fiction. This sounds much like the language of antichrist, who is known by denying "the Father and the Son."—1 John 2 : 22.

A New Book.

"Thessalonica: or the Model Church." We are glad to learn that a new volume from the pen of H. L. Hastings, bearing the above title, is now in press. It will probably be issued this week or next. The publishers are Messrs. Rudd & Carleton of New York. It will be for sale however by the author and at this office. Price about 75 cents. Our friends will be interested in it. The stereotyper, who has read all his works, calls it the best thing he has written. We shall speak more of it hereafter.

Effects of Novel Reading.

Read the following, and see the ruinous effects of reading fiction. It is to the mind what tobacco and intoxicating liquors are to the physical system. It flatters while it inserts its death sting. Satan-like, it promises good; but, like the drunkard's bowl, it may produce a joyous laugh and a merry joke, but it ends in remorse. If you value eternal life and the approbation of God, let the poison alone.

Observe the effects of indulgence:—

"A whole family brought to destitution in England, has had all its misfortunes clearly traced by the authorities to an ungovernable passion for novel reading, entertained by the wife and mother. The husband was sober and industrious, but his wife was indolent and addicted to reading every thing procurable in the shape of a romance. This led her to utterly neglect her husband, herself and her eight children. One daughter, in despair, fled the paternal home and threw herself into the haunts of vice. Another was found by the police chained by the legs to prevent her following her sister's example. The house exhibited the most offensive appearance of filth and indigence. In the midst of this pollution, privation and poverty, the cause of it sat reading the latest "sensation work" of the season, and refused to allow herself to be disturbed in her entertainment."

Spiritualism in the Churches.

While many, who are not posted in the facts, think that Spiritualism is not advancing, it is a sad truth that its doctrines are spreading very rapidly, and are being embraced by large numbers of church members, and many clergymen, who have not yet identified themselves with Spiritualists. The enemy of all righteousness is making earnest efforts to cause men to believe that it makes no difference what men believe, if they only live about right; and after he has persuaded them to adopt this sentiment, he is sure of getting them to believe that his doctrines are the best, and thus switch them off from the road that leads to life, into the one that ends in destruction; while at the same time, he endeavors by every artful wile to make them think they are all right, and on the way to glory. His success in this direction is truly alarming, and ought to arouse every lover of truth and the Lord to the most earnest action against the insidious but powerful foe, who, in this way, is fitting millions for eternal ruin.

Christian soldier, arouse! Do not sleep in these last days of peril, till you are gagged and bound hand and foot by the arch deceiver, and left in the care of demons to perish.

The following question and answer, from the Herald of Progress, a leading Spiritualist paper, edited by A. J. Davis, will give the reader a very correct idea of the present state of the churches in relation to Spiritualism.

J. B. B., Worcester.—"Bro. Davis: Is it your impression that what we now call 'Spiritualism' will ever be adopted by the American churches?"

Answer: Our impression is, that Spiritualism (meaning the ministry of angels realized by the senses of men) is in danger of popularity. The churches of America like "Spiritualism" very well, with the above definition both as a prelude and explanation; but the same churches and ministers very stoutly repulse Spiritualists and mediums, because they will not submit to any definitions or articles of faith.

Consequently, you may expect the churches to shut Spiritualists out and "Spiritualism" in; and the day for all this is not far distant. The churches will become gradually powerless. When skeptical minds get their questions answered outside of the churches, then the churches will accept "Spiritualism." Be careful, good friend, lest you also forget and go to the churches; do not be absorbed by them. There is danger in becoming too popular. Beware, when the churches begin to consider it profitable to invite you to take a seat in their beautiful compartments. Accept this, and you are on the road to popularity. Yes, when the churches consider Spiritualism reputable enough to endorse it then consider that you are all on the broad road to certain mischievous prosperity; an easy thriftiness which will turn into conservatism, like all the past, and build up institutions against another Dispensation.

For the Crisis.

Meetings in Starks, Me.

This being a new field of labor, and as some are interested to hear of the progress that truth is making, I concluded to give a brief account of the meetings through the Crisis. I first visited this place in Dec. 1860. Found but one family that believed the truths that we are advocating. As is usual in new places, the people having heard many evil reports in relation to the Advent people, were prejudiced against us, but many acted the part of wise men and came to hear for themselves; while a few that would not hear were very diligent in circulating false reports, saying, that we preached that men had no souls,—did not believe in change of heart, etc., etc. I am sorry to have to say, that those that were the most engaged in this wicked work were those that professed religion. I think if that class would read Prov. 18 : 13, they might find some good instruction that would be profitable to follow. Those that came to hear a few evenings, became interested, and some few confessed the truth. After holding a few meetings in the schoolhouse, I went to Starks Village, and gave a few lectures in the Hall; the people were much interested to hear and began to search the Scriptures to see if these things were so; and many were ready to confess that they had heard the truth. Our meeting closed with a great interest on the part of the people to hear more. In this village we found a pleasant home with friend Griffin, who was called a Universalist, and became such, undoubtedly, from seeing the inconsistencies of popular theology, but I found him to be a true friend to truth, and seemed to take pleasure in acting the part of a christian. God bless him and his kind family who administered to my wants, and made me at home in their pleasant family. I met with some opposition from a Methodist preacher in this place; in his zeal for party interest he overstepped the bounds of propriety, and many became dissatisfied with his course, and thought he did not act much like a christian. Much good, I trust, will be the result of our meetings.

When I left town in January I promised to return, and did so in March; commenced meeting the 24th in the meeting-house just out of the village; the hall being occupied by the Methodists. Although it was stormy, we had out a goodly number that manifested an interest to hear. Some that were wise in their own conceit did what they could to keep many away from the meetings, but we had a crowded house almost every evening. Most of the people in Starks feel that liberty is a great blessing, and they used it in coming to meeting to hear for themselves, while a few seemed to fear the elders, or were so wedded to party that they would not hear. The truth has taken root in this place, and the spirit of papacy that was manifested, only made error and wrong look more hideous than before. The people became interested so much that they came together and formed a society to raise funds to sustain Advent preaching a part of the time; over thirty dollars were subscribed by them in the house, and much interest was manifested to sustain the truth. I would here say to the preaching brethren, if any should feel that it is duty to travel that way, that the people in Starks claim the privilege of asking questions at the close of the sermon, and any that are fearful of having their sermons questioned, had better not call. If the truth will not bear investigation we had better give it up. The people will be glad to have preachers come that can rightly divide the word of truth, and labor in word and doctrine to the edification of the hearers.

While holding meetings, I received many invitations to visit different parts of the town, and give some lectures in the school-house. Having two evenings that I was not engaged, I gave appointments for meetings in a school-house on what is called Union Street. The origin of the name I did not learn, but concluded that there was a union in sectarianism, which bound the people in sectarian bonds. This one Mr. Sectarianism, concluded that his craft was in danger, but not being able to meet the enemy face to face, resorted to an underhanded mode of warfare, which was to create prejudice in the minds of many by telling them that it was wrong to hear such preaching; and, lest some should venture to hear for themselves, meetings were appointed in order to keep the people away. But when the time for our meeting arrived, the house was filled, so that all could not obtain entry; a good part of the congregation, however, came from other parts of the town where I had held meetings. As Mr. Sectarianism could not deprive us of a congregation, it seems that he thought we had too many seats, for the next evening we learned that the boards that were used for making extra seats were missing; but a good neighbor furnished some in place of those taken away, and we had a good season in speaking the truth to those that had "ears to hear."

The time has come when every true man should protest against the sectarian spirit that prevails, to some extent, in the churches, and binds the consciences of the people, so that they dare not be free men to hear anything that is not in harmony with their creed. The truth is gaining ground, and the fabled doctrine of eternal torment and immortality of the soul must give way before the burning truth of God. Sectarianism may cry out "Infidelity," but the car of truth is on the track, and the steam is up, and sectarianism must get off the track or be run over. Our weapons are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of the strongholds of satan.

We find before us an open door to preach the gospel in new fields of labor, so that we feel it to be our duty to leave the old established churches for awhile, that we may raise up churches in new places. For the last year the most of the time I have been out in new places; sometimes I have to engage a hall at my own expense, and seek for board at the hotel, or where I can find it; but I soon find hearts that beat with love for the truth when they can hear it, and homes are provided, so that I lack no good thing; and sometimes it does me good to get into a straight place, for it learns me to trust in God more. I wish my preaching brethren generally would get a little more of the missionary spirit, and push out into the "regions beyond." Suppose you do get a little hard fare and some opposition? A good soldier will endure hardness. It is not enough to stand only on the defensive, but we must charge upon the enemy's ranks, and make an aggressive war, and release the captives from satan's bonds. Let us be up and at work while the day lasts. Soon the Master will come, and then, if found faithful, we shall have the crown of immortality and eternal life.

For the Crisis.

Millennium.

Perhaps the most satisfactory view of the opinions on this subject which many sincerely pious and well instructed early christians deemed themselves warranted in entertaining, is that which Semisch* has collected out of the writings of Justin Martyr. After the lapse of the appointed time which the prophet Daniel has foretold, Justin expected the visible return of Christ to earth. The prophets, he affirms, foretold two advents. One had already taken place. In that Christ appeared as a sufferer, in a mean and despised form, dishonored, and at last crucified. It will be otherwise at his second appearing. Christ will then visit the earth in splendor and glory, on the clouds of heaven, and surrounded by the angelic hosts as the judge of mankind. In the very place where he was crucified, his murderers will recognize him whom they pierced, and all the tribes shall mourn, tribe by tribe, the men apart and the women apart. Dial. Tryp., pp. 128, 137. But before this advent takes place Elias will come agreeable to the prophecy in Mal. 4 : 5; also the man of apostasy and iniquity, who will utter blasphemies against the Most High, and commit outrages against the Christians, must precede the re-appearance of the Son of Man. This will soon happen, for already the adversary is at the door.

The immediate object of this return of Christ is the erection of the Millennial kingdom. Christ, Justin says, will come again in order to make a new heaven and new earth, to reign as king over Salem, and to shine in Jerusalem as an unchangeable light. The fallen city will be restored changed, and beautified, all the saints, that is, believing christians, will rise from the dead, and be assembled in Jerusalem and the Holy Land, in order to take possession of it, there to receive the eternal and unchangeable blessings promised to them, and to rejoice in communion with Christ. Justin dwells with deep emotion on this hope. It was, in his esteem, a sacred fire at which he kindled afresh his christian faith and practice. That this hope might possibly be vain, never entered his thoughts. He believed that it was supported by Scripture. He expressly appealed to the New Testament Apocalypse, and from such passages as Isa. 65, 35, 34; Ez. 34, 37; Jer. 33, how could he doubt it? He certainly expected physical enjoyments, and believed that Christ would eat and drink with the members of his kingdom. He depicted the state of the elect under the personal reign of Christ as one of blissful unchangeableness, repose, and exemption from pain.

Thus he says, "At his glorious advent Christ will in every way confound those who have hated him and unrighteously apostatized from him; but his own people he will bring to [illegible] all their expectations." And in another passage, "whoever is faithful to the doctrine of Jesus, him will Christ raise from the dead at his second advent, and make him immortal, unchangeable, and free from all sorrow." At the close of the thousand years of the personal reign, to enjoy which the saints were only to be raised, Justin expected that the general and final resurrection of all the dead would take place; but this being the term of the millennial period we need not proceed with him farther. Correspondence.

*Semisch's Justin Martyr, his life, writings and opinions, translated by J. E. Ryland. [illegible]

From Sr. L. P. Hastings.

Dear Bro. and Sis.:—Although I cannot see you, I have the privilege occasionally of reading your communications through the Crisis, and I would that I could read more from the pens of those that used often to cheer the hearts of sad and lonely ones by their faithful warnings and comforting words. Remember, there are lonely ones scattered here and there all over the land, that once used to hear from your mouths the words of consolation and instruction, and they wonder why your pens are still, and not telling the dealings and works of God to those that are now far away. O! let us be up and doing, for soon the night cometh when none can work. I feel that we have of all hopes the best, of all comforts the greatest, and of all prospects the most glorious! If you have light or love, joy or sorrow, write and touch a chord that will vibrate in every heart that loves Jesus and his friends, whether free or bond, black or white. We see the nations of earth preparing to heave their last throes, and Spiritualism coming in to make war with Him whose name is called the Word of God, and thus fill up the picture in the great panorama shown to the beloved John on Patmos Isle. And while we see these things passing before our eyes, how can we rest and not be striving to save some from coming destruction?

If there are any of God's watchmen that feel they have a message for this place, may God speed them on their way. The Lord will furnish his servants with means to do his work.

Galesburg, Mich.

From Eld. M. Chandler.

Bro. Grant:—I am still a pilgrim and stranger, journeying to the land of promise. The Guide shows we are most there—journey most at an end—soon we shall rest. O how sweet! I am bound to see the end.

My lungs are some better, still tender. I am trying to do all I can for God and truth. I have just returned from Ironton, Sauk Co. Had a very good time. Eld. George Turner lives there and has been doing good. Raised up a small church, and a good interest in the community—Bro. Shelden preaches there every four weeks. He is much beloved in that region. I think he and Bro Turner are both true yoke-fellows. God blesses their labors. I hope they will abound more and more. We have a small church here, and I think an increasing influence in community. I expect we shall see better times.

I would say through the Crisis that I expect to use the Mission Tent in Iowa and Wis., mostly, this season. If the friends anywhere in this region wish for tent-meetings in these localities, and can meet the expenses, they will write me at Seneca, Crawford Co., Wis. I could go into the northern part of Ill., if desired. We shall be ready by the middle of June. Friends wishing tent-meetings will inform me in time to make the arrangements and advertise. The tent will hold about one thousand people.

From S. A. Elmore.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—"The arm of the Lord is not shortened that it cannot save, neither is his ear heavy that it cannot hear;" but "his eyes are over the righteous, and his ears open unto their prayers." Jesus says, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit remain; that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name he may give it you." We are living in the days when "iniquity abounds," when love waxes cold, when perils thicken; when we must be vigilant, or we shall be "devoured," and it is ordained that we must bring forth fruit if we would have our prayers answered.

The few waiting ones here have proved that the fervent, effectual prayer does still avail much. God has strengthened our hearts by the work of his Spirit in reclaiming backsliders and converting sinners, and now the song of praise and the voice of prayer is heard from many hearts who but a few months since cared for none of these things. Between twenty and thirty have professed to give their hearts to the Savior since Jan. 6th. On March 10th, Eld. Brewer baptized nine, and as many are expected to be soon.

Now are there not some who read this ready to say, how I would like to see this state of things with us; but what can I do? Well, you can pray, you can be a "living epistle," and others may thereby be lead to glorify your Father in heaven. Not being so jealous about some point of doctrine as to forget to "walk in the Spirit," and bite and devour one another, and be consumed one of another, as with pain I hear some do. To take such a course looks much like having friends just sinking beneath the waves, and leaving them to dispute with some one about the probable manner of their death—whether they will rise once or twice before they are completely drowned. Would it not show our love and sense of their condition far better to point them to the "life-boat," and strive to save them from death? O my friends! leave this strife, if you have any love for and any wish to see your impenitent friends prepared to meet the Savior in peace, and try to win them to him, not with "the works of the flesh," but with the "fruits of the Spirit." If we believe God's word, let us take it as the "man of our counsel," sit at the feet of Jesus, and learn of him, and so be found about our Master's business when he comes.

South Windsor, Ct.

From Sr. L. Gilman.

Bro. Grant:—Last spring was the first time the Advent doctrine was preached in this place. We found some six or eight here that were from the eastern states and had once heard and loved the doctrine, but after coming West had not stood at their post, had lost their confidence and gone into some of the churches. They stated they felt they were living almost without God or hope in the world. These with us took a decided stand to meet together every Sabbath and exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching. Soon after we took this step the Lord commenced adding to our numbers. Last fall, our only daughter, who has been the subject of so many prayers, followed the footsteps of her Savior down into the water and arose to a newness of life. We still had two sons right in the midst of life, who, as many of our brothers and sisters East will recollect, with us have been the subjects of many prayers and tears. Last February the Lord directed hither the steps of Bro. Calkins, formerly from the state of Ct. He seemed very near to us. When he came here, he did not intend to stay but two or three evenings, but the Lord seemed to hedge him in by the streams rising so he could not get away. Saturday evening the Lord commenced to work. Sabbath, backsliders began to confess their wanderings, sinners began to inquire what they must do to be saved. The hardest cases seemed to be reached. The next Sabbath Bro. C. led eleven happy souls down into the water—six young men—two of them were our sons. My dear brethren and sisters, pray for us, that we may be an unbroken family in the kingdom of God. We expect Bro. C. with us again soon, and shall try to have him labor with us, if time continues, half of the time this season. We keep up our meetings, and the good work goes on. There are others that will follow Christ when Bro C. returns. There are about thirty now rejoicing in the blessed hope soon to be consummated.

Long Point, March 1st.

Obituary Notices.

Our dear Brother Adam Wagoner died in Jersey Co., Ill., near Grafton, Aug. 8th, 1860, aged sixty years.

By request of the friends I will pen a few thoughts in relation to this brother, being acquainted with him and his history. In 1824 he professed the religion of Jesus Christ and joined the Baptist church. About 1836 he joined the Anti-Slavery Society. He was one of Lovejoy's right hand men in that vicinity on the anti-slavery question. He stood by Lovejoy to the last—was present when he was killed in Alton, and they sought his life and threatened to burn his house and barn. However, he was satisfied he was engaged in a righteous cause, hence trusted all in God and moved forward. He was a very successful conductor on the under-ground railroad, being one of the first that ever went over that road after its completion. Many a slave's heart, no doubt, has been made glad to find so dear a friend to aid them, and many a "God bless you, masser," in return has been poured upon his devoted and worthy head.

He was also a pioneer in the Advent cause; receiving the light from the "Signs of the Times," (published by J. V. Himes, Boston,) a copy being handed him, which caused him to subscribe for the paper. He scattered tracts and books on the Advent question all through that region. He embraced the glorious doctrine of life only through Christ, and did much toward enlightening men on these great truths. I never shall forget what he said to me the first time I ever visited that region: "I have long been praying and waiting for our heavenly Father to send some one this way that could tell the people the truth. O how thankful I am he has heard my prayer, and you have come." His kindness to me I shall ever appreciate, and I trust he will not lose his reward.

Many other things I might mention concerning him which shows his object and aim was to glorify God. But I must close before I exceed the bounds for an obituary notice, by saying there are many that no doubt mourn the loss of our brother beside his near relatives. May the affliction be sanctified to all, and each of us heed his admonitions, and greet him in the coming kingdom with all the redeemed. W. Pratt.

Died, in Wolcott, Feb. 15th, of typhoid fever, Bro. Luther B. Peck, aged eighteen years and eight months.

About two years ago Bro. Luther embraced the Savior, and we had the blessed privilege of burying him with Christ by baptism, since which time he has endeavored to honor his profession by a well ordered life and a godly conversation. He did not cease to warn his fellow men to flee from the wrath to come until his eyes were closed in death. A short time previous to his death his mother asked him if he felt ready to go. He looked up, and smiling said, "Yes, glory to God!" He sought and obtained a promise from his father, mother, brothers and sisters, to meet him in the kingdom, after which he quietly fell asleep in Jesus, after a fortnight's sickness. May the Lord grant the whole family grace and strength in this time of affliction, and enable them always to trust in the great I AM, that when the last loud trumpet shall rend the skies, they may be re-united with their beloved son and brother. Eld. S. W. Thurber performed the funeral services.

Geo. A. Otis.

Joseph Riggs Gatchell died, Jan. 28th, 1861, aged sixty-nine years, two months, and twenty-three days.

He died with the hope of receiving his crown with Paul. He was a strong believer in the immediate coming of Christ.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

SYRIA.

Beyrout, Feb. 25th. The proposed plan of the Porte for the future government of Syria has become very generally known here. To Fuad Pasha and all the advanced party of the Turks it is a death blow, but it has raised the hopes of the fanatic party, and has caused no small rejoicing among the Druses.

The christian population are preparing as one man to leave the country, and nearly all the European merchants say that if it is carried out they will liquidate their affairs and abandon Syria.

Since writing the foregoing I have heard a most astounding piece of news, which I should certainly hesitate to put upon paper were not the source from which I learned it so good as to leave little room for doubt regarding its truth. It is as follows: It would appear that France is the power which objects to the scheme of the commissioners for the future government of Syria being adopted, and that it is France which insists upon the counter scheme which has been proposed by the Porte being accepted by the other powers. In other and plainer words, after the scheme of the five commissioners had been drawn out here, the Emperor objects to its being adopted, so that Syria will be thrown back into a system of government much worse than that of the past, and this by the European sovereign who professes to be her greatest friend. If this is true—and I only wish I saw reason to doubt it—the province is ruined, and the occupation of the French troops may be continued for the next ten years. It is the case of the doctor keeping his patient ill in order that his visits may continue.

ITALY.

The following occurred in the Parliament at Turin, on the 11th ult.:

"Count Cavour then laid before the House the bill, already approved in the Senate, for the new appellation of the King, consisting of the single article: 'The King Victor Emanuel takes for himself and his successors the title of King of Italy.' A thundering applause and tremendous cheering, as a matter of course, received the announcement. The bill, however, cannot pass by acclamation only, but must be submitted to the examination of the offices and a commission issuing from them. It is expected that some discussion may arise in the Lower House on the motion of Baron Ricasoli for substituting the number I, instead of II, at the end of the name Victor Emmanuel, with a view to break all dynastic associations, and establish that the old Piedmontese or Sardinian monarchy merges into a new chieftainship of Italian nationality."

The Naples correspondent of the Daily News thinks that this month and the next are pregnant with important events. Great military movements are being prepared. Thus the four divisions now under the walls of Gaeta are ordered to be in readiness to march to Bologna; the third, which is in Parma, under Gen Durand, will enter Naples; and the 5th, amounting to 8500 men, will proceed thence early in April to occupy Frosinone.

The discussion of the Roman question continued in the Italian Chambers. The Speakers generally advocated the separation of the temporal from the spiritual power. Several speakers on the left proposed the simple proclamation of Rome as the capital of Italy, and calling on Napoleon to withdraw his troops.

Count Cavour has announced to the Italian Chamber that the Ministerial programme was unchanged. In a speech on the Roman question he claimed that Italy had the right to have Rome for the capital, but she must go there with the consent of France; he said that the union of the temporal and spiritual power of the Pope was the source of evil.

Reactionary demonstrations had taken place in Sicily.

FRANCE.

Letters from Paris intimate that a notable change has been suddenly produced in the Italian policy of the Emperor Napoleon; that the temporal power of the Pope, which had been doomed, is not to be destroyed at present, but that the existing state of things is to continue for six months longer. This decision is said to have been formed on the 18th inst., and the result is that Gen. Trochu is not to go to Rome to replace Gen. Goyon, and that the announced reply of M. de la Guerroniere to Carnidal Antonelli has been suppressed.

DOMESTIC.

Excitement increasing at Washington.—New York, April 5th.—The Post says it is rumored that the government agents sent to England and France have returned, and report that both of these nations will set their faces against the Southern Confederacy, and in no manner recognize or assist it, and that the President and Cabinet have determined to take immediate and vigorous measures for the enforcement of the law at all hazards.

The Commercial says a committee of leading Virginia politicians have had an interview with the President and Secretary of State, and were assured most positively that the President contemplated no hostile movements; that he should not attempt to collect the revenue for the simple reason that Congress withheld from him that power.

A special dispatch to the Post from Washington says the rumor is that the Pawnee goes to Charleston. The excitement hourly grows more intense, and all sorts of conjectures are afloat as to the point where the blow will first fall. Leading Republican members express an opinion that an extra session of Congress will soon be called.

The Express says it is supposed in well informed quarters that Texas is the point where the troops will be landed, and that they are sent out at the request of Gov. Houston to repel the Indians and Mexicans.

Fort Lafayette in this harbor has been garrisoned. The soldiers from Governor's Island will proceed to Fort Hamilton to-day, to embark thence on steamers for parts unascertained.

At the Navy Yard and all the army depots great activity prevails, and laborers are working day and night at the former on war vessels. Large numbers of naval and army officers are continually arriving and reporting themselves for duty.

A Charleston dispatch to the "World" says there is great activity there, and it is believed Fort Sumter would be attacked immediately. It is reported that orders have been received from President Davis to cut off Major Anderson's supplies, and that no more communication is to be allowed between Fort Sumter and the Federal authorities.

Important Army Movements.—New York, April 5th.—The Government has chartered steamers Baltic and Ariel to carry troops under sealed orders. The Baltic will carry Capt. Barry's company of Flying Artillery and ninety men, and the Ariel seven or eight companies of infantry and marines. They will sail on Monday.

The frigate Powhattan goes to sea to-morrow morning, fully equipped and provisioned, and will take three companies of troops.

The impression at the Navy Yard is that Forts Sumter and Pickens will both be reinforced.

A company of 100 men on Governor's Island has received marching orders, and others will speedily follow. There are now 2600 troops at different stations in this port.

The steamship Atlantic has also been chartered by the government, and cleared this afternoon with provisions, stores and property of the government.

The Harriet Lane has not sailed, but is lying in the bay in consequence of information given Captain Faunce by the Collector, which may result in the seizure of other vessels bound for the coast of Africa.

The government has chartered steamer Illinois, which will go to sea under sealed orders to-morrow or Sunday. Her mails and passengers for Europe will go in the City of Baltimore.

Much alarm exists on account of the military preparations of the Government, which preserves entire silence.

The Governor of Mississippi has issued a proclamation, dated the 22d ult., calling for fifteen hundred troops of the infantry arm, "to be mustered into the service of the Confederate States as soon as assembled, for the period of twelve months, unless sooner discharged."

The Governor of Georgia has, it is said, ordered nine military companies in that State to hold themselves in readiness to march to Pensacola.

The Pensacola Gazette of the 28th ult. states that there were at that time upwards of sixteen hundred men in the different fortifications in that neighborhood.

Col J. M. Sanborn, late Land Commissioner of Michigan, has offered to take the contract to supply Fort Sumter with men and provisions for the sum of half a million of dollars.

The Holly Springs Herald learns that the county of Chickasaw, (Miss) has ten companies of volunteer soldiers ready to be mustered into the service of the State. It adds that in addition to these: "The county has a regularly officered and drilled company of young ladies, who have pledged themselves, in the event that the men are called into service, to protect their homes and families during their absence, and see that the farms are properly cultivated, and full crops raised not only for the support of the country, but of the armies of the Mississippi."

From the Herald's correspondence:

"The Administration preserves the most ominous silence in regard to their movements. The knowing ones persist in stating that the St. Domingo imbroglio is mixed up with the operations of the government. The developments of the next few days will disclose the fact that the mouth of the Mississippi will be one of the scenes of their naval operations.

One of the oldest Commodores in the navy says that these vessels are ordered on a tour of observation to the Southern ports for the purpose of ascertaining the possibility of collecting the revenue, and, if necessary, to blockade the ports.

Lieutenant Gilman, who arrived here late last night direct from Pensacola, stopped a few hours at Montgomery.

The force which the Confederate States now have at Pensacola is very formidable, composed as it is of the best men in the South, and officered by men who occupied distinguished positions in the army of the United States. He says it will be impossible to continue the armistice existing between the two governments much longer. They are getting very restless, and appear anxious for a fight.

I questioned Lieutenant Gilman particularly about the reinforcements which it was alleged the Brooklyn had thrown into Fort Pickens in the night. He said there was not a particle of truth in it. He said it was next to impossible to throw reinforcements into that fort without their knowing it. He says they keep up a vigilant watch night and day."

The New York Tribune's Charleston correspondent writes as follows:

"A gentleman who has very lately been in communication with Fort Sumter informs me that the garrison is on exceedingly small allowance, and that matters begin to look serious with them. Should the supplies now daily obtained in this market be cut off, the situation of the men would be highly critical, and it is not impossible that Major Anderson may be compelled, on his own responsibility, to abandon his position. As heretofore has been the case, the garrison will no doubt continue to derive no slight advantage from their facilities for catching fish around the base of the fort. But there will be no similar way of recruiting the supply of fuel, which is now nearly exhausted."

[Despatch to the N. Y. Herald.]

Important from Charleston.—Charleston, April 6th.—Reliable information has been received from the North that reinforcements are ordered to Fort Sumter, and will be accompanied by a squadron under command of Commodore Stringham.

Five thousand Southern men, in addition to those at present in the fortifications, are ready to take the field within twenty-four hours.

The ultimatum, siege or surrender, has not yet been sent to Major Anderson, but with the supplies sent to-day he was notified by General Beauregard that they are the last, which is equivalent to a declaration of hostilities. This is positive.

Troops have been ordered to rendezvous at points remote from Charleston, but within supporting distance, to watch the movements of the enemy. They move at once.

Gov. Pickens has all day been inspecting the batteries, accompanied by a portion of his Council and senior officers of the army. Everything throughout was in a state of efficiency.

Bloodshed is inevitable, and if one drop is spilt no one knows when it will end.

A formal demand for the surrender of the fort has not been made, and may not be made at all.

For obvious reasons the intentions of the Confederacy are involved in mystery.

The excitement is intense, and everybody is in fighting humor.

Considerable activity is manifested in military quarters. The indications are that matters are approximating to a crisis.

The Sun going out.—There are now more spots on the sun than have been seen for many years: some of these are visible through a smoked glass to the naked eye. Several stars—some of them of great brilliancy, which, from their ascertained distance, must have been as large as our sun—have totally disappeared from the sky; and the question has been raised among astronomers whether the light and heat of the sun are failing away. As this would be accompanied by the destruction of the plants and animals on the earth, it is rather an interesting question. The sun's light and heat are diminished by the dark spots at the present time about one per cent.

The Largest Church in Europe.—An English paper informs us that the largest church in Europe is at St. Petersburg. It was begun in 1771, and in twenty years two thousand men had not completed the walls. It is of polished marble, outside and in; the pillars are of one piece, fifty feet high, the base and capitals of solid silver; but the greatest curiosity of all is a wooden box, made to cover it from the weather.

My Home.

My home is by the river's side,
Where dark and still the waters glide;
A home of sweet
And calm retreat,
With grassy lawn and shade trees tall,
That cast their shadow on the wall.

I have an aged father there,
A mother, too, whose tender care
Guarded my youth
In paths of truth;
Of sisters, who my joys have shared,—
A remnant yet to us is spared.

Another home less fair and bright
I have, though in the gospel's light
The silent tomb
Hath lost its gloom;
I'll sleep on Jesus' loving breast,
A holy, sweet, unbroken rest.

The rich, the poor, the great are there,
My long, long home they all must share;
I will not fear,
The Shepherd's near;
And though death's valley dark be passed,
I wake to endless bliss at last.

I have a home in purer life,
Beyond this world of care and strife;
A home so bright
It knows no night;
There I'll receive my full reward,
And live forever with the Lord.

THE COMING STRUGGLE
Between the Church and the Powers of Darkness:
SHOWING THE MISSION AND DESTINY OF SPIRITUALISM.
No. 9.

THE BEAST AND HIS IMAGE.

They now introduce the image to the beast providing that all shall worship according to its dictates or be put to death. They not only provide that such as refuse their atheistical code and system of worship shall be killed, but they also arrange, as a prudential regulation by which to designate them at sight, that those who do accept shall receive a mark in their right hand or forehead. And determined to subdue them by all means, they attempt to starve to terms those who still refuse the mark of loyalty by providing that none shall buy nor sell save those who have this mark. It is manifest that by these oppressive measures, accompanied with a sore persecution, the opponents of Spiritualism will be reduced, principally, to those who accept the Bible and its religion, and will stand by it unto death, if need be. The assurance that "if any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God"; and that "they have no rest day nor night who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name," shows that whoever worships this beast or his image is guilty of such blasphemy and contempt of God, as to deserve, and shall suffer, his judgments poured out upon him, insomuch that such shall have no rest day nor night.—Rev. 14: 9—11. And since those who get victory over the beast and over his image stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God (Rev. 15: 2), and reign with Christ a thousand years (Rev. 20: 4), it is evident that this image to the beast makes a division of the christian world generally; supported by those who are ripe for destruction, and opposed by those who love God and keep his commandments.

Thus Spiritualism, in its development and demand upon all to accept its blasphemous and atheistical, though popular religion, through the image to the beast, becomes a test to the world—"The hour of temptation that shall come upon all the world to try them."—Rev. 3: 10. Here also the strong delusion, when those who receive not the love of the truth shall believe a lie and seal their damnation.—2 Thess. 2d chap. Here will be the false Christ showing great signs and wonders, insomuch that if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.—Matt. 24; 23—27. By this test men will be left without excuse, since God gives them a choice between the two extremes—Atheism and Christianity: Atheism in all its licentiousness and blasphemy, but popularized; and Christianity in all its self-denial, its reproaches, and its persecutions, but its blessed hope, made more blessed because so soon to be realized. It is not probable that many under these circumstances would be lukewarm christians, since a mere assent to christianity would as surely endanger their lives as if they entered zealously into its defence and secured a right to all its blessings. And on the other hand it is very likely that those who have renounced christianity at this time for atheism will seek to drown all scruples which may arise, by making the most of their opportunities of self-indulgence now so popular and profusely offered. Here no doubt we shall have the cry of peace and safety. Having everything in their own way, and supposing that their kingdom is the kingdom of heaven, to stand forever, they become intoxicated with their privileges and prospects, and promise themselves eternal "peace and safety" in the free and full indulgence of all their passions.

When the christian world generally have [illegible] in their choice between popular atheism [illegible] despised, persecuted christianity, God [illegible] to pour out his judgments (as [illegible]) rejected him and received the mark of the beast, and turned persecutors to his people, by sending upon them the seven last plagues which will end their cry of peace and safety.

THE SEVEN LAST PLAGUES.

Rev. 15: 1—8, and 16: 1.—The belief that these "plagues," otherwise called "vials of wrath," are in the past, is more general, and their particular application more uniform, than is the case with the two-horned beast and the image which he causes the world to make and worship. But this difference betrays a strange inattention to the subject in its various bearings, and a lamentable looseness in the interpretation of these prophecies. For though the Scriptures assure us that the first of these plagues or vials of wrath is poured out on "them which had the mark of the beast and them which worshiped his image," yet, I think so far as I can judge, not half of those who place the image and most of the vials in the past, but have several vials poured out before they have the image developed; while there are others who regard the vials mostly in the past but the image in the future. I conclude they cannot be in the past, but must be in the future, for the following reasons:

1. Because the particular results of the pouring out of these vials are not to be found anywhere in the past.

2. Because as these seven are all said to be last—"the seven last"—and they complete or "fill up the wrath of God," they must belong to the closing scenes of this age.

3. Because most, or all of them, commencing with the first, are judgments poured on the beast and his image, and those who worship them, and receive their mark, all of which are yet to be developed.

"The first went," it is said, "and poured out his vial on the earth and there fell a noisome and grievous sore on them which had the mark of the beast and them which worshiped his image." If we spiritualize this passage we can have it mean anything and fulfilled anywhere, according to our fancy; but if we take it according to the reading of the passage, it must have a particular application and a future fulfillment. I have already shown that there is to be the beast and his image developed through Spiritualism, and that they shall seek to compel all to worship as they direct under penalty of death, and that all who do worship shall receive a mark of loyalty in their right hand or forehead. And this Scripture shows that when men have made their choice and assumed such relations, God will send upon them, as a judgment, a sore, noisome and grievous.

We are assured that "the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea, and it became as the blood of a dead man, and every living soul died in the sea" Taking this literally we can understand it without difficulty; but if we may spiritualise it, we are afloat without anchor or compass.

"The third angel poured out his vial on the rivers and fountains of waters, and they became blood." The language that follows shows this to be literal;—"And I heard the angel of the waters say, thou art righteous, oh Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus. For they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink, for they are worthy." Does it mean that they have spiritually shed the blood of saints and prophets and therefore deserve to spiritually drink blood? Or that they have literally shed the blood of saints, etc., and therefore deserve to drink blood literally, which they must do when all their "rivers and fountains of waters are turned to blood?"

"The fourth angel poured out his vial on the sun, and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire." If this is taken literally, it will represent, like those preceding, a terrible judgment from God; but if we take it to mean something else than what it says, the language is "shorn of its strength," and may be applied to the most trivial thing, according to the fancy or whim of the interpreter. Literally, we read that because this increased power of heat was given to the sun, "men were scorched with great heat." Why should not this scorching heat come from the sun, the continual source of light and heat? With this view all is plain, and the language has a terrible force, as foreshowing a judgment from God on these deniers of his existence, and persecutors of his people. These judgments convince them of God's existence, but do not lead them to repent, as the following language will show; —"They blasphemed the name of God which had power over these plagues, but repented not to give him glory."

"The fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast, and his kingdom was full of darkness; and they gnawed their tongues for pain and blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds." This allusion to their "pains and their sores" shows that the sufferers from this fifth vial have also suffered from the former vials and are bearing the pains and sores of the former ones when this fifth is poured out.

It is evident from the language used concerning the vials that they are so many successive judgments from God poured out upon the same generation of men—haters of God and persecutors of his people—the worshipers of the beast and his image. They seem designed of God not only as judgments for their sins, but also as so many practical arguments against their atheism. The first vial is poured out upon the earth causing every one who worships the beast to receive a noisome and grievous sore. Thus God disproves their "infallible law of Nature" by suddenly sending on them a new and terrible disease, but withholds it from his own children whom they persecute unto death. The second causes the sea to become as the blood of a dead man. Here again their "infallible law of Nature" fails them, in that the ocean which has never been known to change her waters has all at once turned to blood, and the fish find their hitherto natural element a poison to them, and die in consequence. The third causes the rivers and fountains of waters to be turned to blood, and these disciples of the infallible laws of Nature as their God, have to taste the fruit of their own folly in finding their hitherto faithful springs and rivers giving them blood and blood only for their drink. The fourth is poured out on the sun, whose rays have ever been steady and congenial to all, when all at once it commences to "scorch men with fire"; and "men are scorched (margin, burned) with great heat." Here again they learn that the laws of Nature are not infallible, but that they may be suspended when it shall be for the glory of Him who made them. L.

Let Me Go!

BY VESTA M. CUDWORTH.

AIR.—The Captive Indian.

Let me go to the land where the curse resteth not,
Sweet home of fruition, bright goal of my hope;
Where the conflict of ages no more shall be known,
And the great life-work 's ended,—oh! let me go home.

CHORUS.
For the exiled captives sigh for home,
There 's a wail on every breeze;
Let the reapers come with a harvest song,
And bind up the golden sheaves.

Let me go! for the heart boweth down o'er the tomb,
I fain would escape from its portals of gloom;
And Lethe, cold wave, murmurs darkly and lone,
I shrink from its slumbers,—oh! let me go home.

Let me go! for I pine for the dear ones again
That went down in the battle, and scorned to complain;
The bravest and truest the dark night bemoan,
And sigh for the morning,—oh! let me go home.

Let me go! in the dim misty future I see
Sweet islands inlaid in a bright crystal sea,
Where the pure of all ages, with beauty and song,
Share in love's richest banquet,—oh! let me go home.

Let me go! ere the hopes of the wicked shall fail,
Ere cheeks that have bloomed shall wax deathly and pale;
Yes, hide me, dear Savior, from earth's final groan,
Let me go with the dear ones,—oh! let me go home.

Perils of the Last Day Church.

The great Apostle to the Gentiles has clearly shown in his second letter to Tim., chap. 2d, that the last days will be characterized by moral peril. For 1260 years men had stood in imminent danger of extreme tortures and death by professing the true faith of the gospel, and while those days are clearly portrayed by the prophets as well as the Savior, they are not spoken of as perilous to the true church as are the last days. Though their natural life was imperiled, their property in danger of being confiscated, yet what was the most consequential of all things, "their eternal interest" was not, as it would be in the last days. The apostle so clearly elucidates these last day perils, that the "little flock" need incur no danger while nearing these shoals and quicksands on the coast of time; for these perils appear sculptured in high relief by the Divine hand; but such is our propensity to forget these figures, we need to take close and frequent views, that every lineament be so indelibly fixed on the mind that we may be able to descry the same while at a distance, lest we be drawn within the vortex of danger, which in brief is this; that the professed church of God abound in the fruits of the flesh, instead of those of the Spirit. Though these are, as the apostle says, "contrary the one from the other," yet the one stands where the other should, without the surreptitious charge being noticed by the party sustaining the great and eternal loss.

"Pride" is mentioned as being a special characteristic in the professed church of Christ in the last days. The idea is, that church members will be as tenacious of maintaining their aristocratic manners, will vie with each other in dress and equipage generally, as those who make no profession. And while Inspiration discards "costly array," church members will seek costly gewgaws just as eagerly as those who make no profession. If the last days have fully come, we have only to look around to see this picture hastily filling before our eyes.

"Selfishness" is another prominent fruit in church members in the last days. It is not, as with former worthies, "how shall I demean myself in order to accomplish the greatest good to my fellow beings" "But how shall I be aggrandized? How shall I enjoy myself best? Instead of how can I best glorify God? Another feature is "covetousness," that is, an eager, longing desire for those things which are another's; whether it be riches, beauty, talents, pleasure, etc., it proves that love of self instead of the neighbor is prominent. It is also said they will be "heady," that is rash, disposed to rush forward in an enterprise without thought or deliberation. Again, covenant-breakers, showing that slight value is put upon their word; for if in a few days or weeks they will violate their church covenant, their word in other matters may not be reliable. And then there are the ungrateful, unholy, boasters, blasphemers, incontinent, fierce, traitors, false accusers, and lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; yes, church members will love pleasure more than they love God, which may be demonstrated by the interest they manifest in pleasure rides, parties, balls, etc., instead of the worship of God. But the blackest feature in this dire catalogue of carnalities is, that these very persons despise those that are good! Their characters are so well known for integrity, and uprightness, that it baffles these church members to allege any evil against them, and so they resort to their only resource to injure them; they despise them, it may be, by gestures, looks, or some canting phrase; perhaps while they pass quietly to their business it may be said, "there goes old A or B," as the case may be. I know not whether this part of the picture is sufficiently filled to be particularly noticeable to all that may read this, but I have seen it carried out to the letter in more places than one; where persons long resident in a place had sustained such an irreproachable christian character, it was impossible for these calumniators to start an evil report of them, but yet, oh how they despised them! Please read the whole catalogue of sins, found prominent in the professed church of God in the last days, in 2 Tim. 3d chap., as I have not mentioned all of them. It is quite apparent these characters profess religion from the fact they have "a form of godliness."

But it was not my design to expatiate on these fruits of the flesh, or to prove the fulfillment of this prophetic picture; the reader has only to look about him to be satisfied for himself; but my idea was to show why such a state of things would be perilous to "that remnant humble" unless they "take heed to the sure word of prophecy" instead of the traditions of men. It will not be safe to take men and women for an example, even if they belong to the church! Christ must be our example and the word of God our chart. When young converts have tasted the sweets of pardoned sin, they determine to be ever loyal to their King; but after a time, temptation steps in and says, "it is not necessary to be so very particular. Only see Bro. A. and sister B., they do so and so,—they do not observe such punctilious exactness, and you can be saved without it," etc. They first sip the cup of pleasure sparingly, but, emboldened by the example of older professors, they quaff it to the very dregs. Thus ends the spiritual life of how many the judgment alone will reveal.

No marvel that the prophetic eye looked upon it as perilous! If the sheep have become so diseased, the lambs will be very likely to die! Alas! how many have stranded their religious barque on the shoals and quicksands of carnal professors. They have forgotten that self-denial was the very terms of discipleship to commence with, and that as they received Christ Jesus, so they were to walk in him. Let none be charmed by the syren of safety because they hold the form of godliness, unless, willing to deny self of all ungodliness and worldly lusts, they live soberly and righteously, looking for that blessed hope and the appearing of the Savior.

The Closing up of this Dispensation.

If there is any reliance to be placed on past history, then surely we are living in a peculiar point in the eventful chronology of this world. Events, which in past ages required years to bring to maturity, now come upon the stage, and pass in review like the changing scenes in a kaleidoscope. Before the closing up of the Jewish dispensation, how events multiplied as the time drew on so long predicted by Christ and his apostles. But still they were unheeded. Prayers and entreaties by the Son of God, fell unheeded by those to whom he was sent, but onward they floated down the treacherous stream of time, and were wrecked on rocks of unbelief, and there their ruins still remain—a sad monument of God's long suffering and final retribution on his own chosen people.

What was the great sin for which he destroyed the Jewish nation? Was it not for rejecting Christ who was sent to save them from the impending doom which hung over them like a funeral pall? But they turned a deaf ear to the voice of entreaty and passed on and were punished.

And how is it in regard to our own times? Cannot the true watchmen already see the aurorean tints flashing up the eastern sky, a sure token of the coming Sun of righteousness? Yes, poor pilgrim mariner, out upon the stormy ocean of time, consult carefully the great chart of time, the Bible; it will guide you safely across the seas of time and into the broad haven of eternal rest. Signs are rapidly sweeping on which should cause the desponding saint to take fresh courage. Deliverance is at hand. War, war, is the all pervading sentiment of the day. Not merely is the old world making herculean efforts for some dreadful struggle, but in our own boasted land of liberty is this all-pervading feeling of some great event. It speaks to the student of prophecy of the closing of the present gospel dispensation, and the establishment of the fifth monarchy, when He whose right it is to reign, will reign. His reign will be peace and security.

"Who is on the Lord's Side?"

DEAR EDITOR:—In view of the solemn fact that the day of the Lord's coming hasteth greatly, I send you the following appropriate extract for the edification of your readers. H. GREW.

Philadelphia, March, 1861.

"The question will be asked before long, Who are on the Lord's side? Who? ARE YOU FOR THE LAMB? Have you realized your need of his atoning blood? Have you looked in faith to him as the sacrifice for sins? Have you placed your reliance upon his perpetual intercession? And have you yielded yourselves—body, soul and spirit—to his service and for his glory? Is your life actuated by love to Jesus? Is your soul the temple of his presence? Are your energies employed in the advancement of his kingdom? Are you for the Lamb avowedly? Is it a fact patent to the world? Can men take knowledge of you that you are with Jesus? Are you living epistles, on whose open page you have inscribed these words, 'FOR THE LAMB?' Is there no shrinking from the confession of his name? Is there no following of your Savior afar off?

Are you for the Lamb exclusively? Has he all your heart, soul, and strength? Can you abandon the world, self, ease, wealth, renown, health, happiness—all that is endeared and precious,—in order to take your station in the ranks of the soldiers of the cross? For the Lamb! What a privilege! To fight for his cause, to receive his approval, to share his triumph!

Against the Lamb! How astounding! Against his love, his clemency, his patience, his gentle drawings, his intercession! O, the obduracy of a heart which can be opposed to Jesus! Against the Lamb! How alarming! A worm striving with its Maker—a criminal with his Judge! Behold the unequal contest! What can be the issue but shame and contempt, self-upbraiding, and miserable banishment from his love and presence!

WILL YOU NOT BE FOR THE LAMB? If you have been undecided, be decided now. Surrender yourselves to Christ. Determine to be his forever. Resolve that though other lords have had dominion over you, yet henceforth you will be called by his name, and make mention of his righteousness only. Do this in dependence upon that Holy Spirit, who will strengthen you with all might in the inner man."

Jubilees.

Can there be any jubilees established chronologically by the Bible? This is an important question, and if it can be answered, then we have the strongest argument on time that has ever appeared before the world; for if one or two jubilees can be established by the Word of the Lord, and the true chronology given, then it is easy to reckon backward or forward, every fiftieth year being a jubilee. By years of constant searching, and labor night and day, we fully believe that Bro. John Stevenson of C. W., has fairly answered this question, and according to his calculation there will commence a jubilee in the seventh month of 1866—our time,—but in the true christian era, 1847,—then all the prophetic periods reaching down to the end terminate, also the age of the world, being at that time 6,000 years old. Now if Bro. S.' reckoning is true, (and I am very strongly persuaded that it is,) then it is useless to talk about '66 to '68, for the Lord's time can't be stretched like an India rubber string. If the next jubilee takes place in '66, and our Lord should not come, then we need not look for him until fifty years more would come round, and the present condition of the world, politically, morally and religiously, would not admit of such a long stretch of time. No, no.

Bro. Stevenson is laboring night and day to hasten on, and complete his large chronological chart, and would, if he had means, have it published in book form, but he has not. It ought to be before the world, and it could be, if brethren east and west, north and south, would assist and take their pay in the work when published. We are satisfied that nothing like Bro. S.' chart has ever appeared before the world, exhibiting such a vast amount of DEEP searched knowledge and mechanical skill, and yet it has been scarcely noticed in our religious papers. Bro. S. is not a Rev. D. D., but a mechanic, and his earnings for years have been spent in the cause of truth.

Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart. The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path. Brethren, ye do well to take heed to the sure word of prophecy. Dig deep and lay your foundation on the Rock. The political atmosphere of our world is unsettled; it is storm after storm. But if you are firmly built upon the Rock, then let the rains descend, and the floods come, and the winds blow, you are safe. Let the peace of God rule in your hearts.

G. DILLABAUGH.

Seneca Falls, N. Y.

"Ready for Either."

An efficient Missionary Association is said to have adopted, not long since, a device, found on an ancient medal, which represents a bullock standing between a plough and an altar, with the inscription, "Ready for either,—ready for toil, or for sacrifice."

The whole history of christianity has proved that its great objects cannot be secured without both the toil and the sacrifice. Says the apostle, "I fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church." In the agony of the atoning sacrifice, Jesus had no sharers. Of the people there were none with him. But he has left, unexhausted, enough of the bitter cup of his previous toils and trials to remind his followers, amid their great work, what their salvation cost him. A readiness for hard work on the one hand, and for sacrifices on the other, can alone evince, not only our attachment to his cause, but also our love to him. O christian, let the love of Christ constrain you to fidelity in his service. Bring all your talents, your acquisitions, your possessions, your energies, and, binding yourself to the horns of the altar, there stand, ready either for work or for sacrifice. This is the spirit which under God will conquer the world. This is the consecration at which heaven rejoices, and hell trembles. Whether it be labor or suffering, doing or giving, living or dying, to which you are summoned, be ever able to say, "Ready for either."—Ex.

Not Alone.

A wife and her two little children left home to make a visit. Papa was left alone. When he came home to tea, and sat down to the table, with no mamma and no two little bright-eyed girls to love and welcome him, strange to say, he did not feel alone. He took off his slippers and sat down in his rocking-chair alone; but he did not feel alone. He went to bed; there was the empty crib; but he did not feel lonely. At his solitary breakfast the next morning there was yet no loneliness. He had the society of sweet and grateful thoughts, which made it very pleasant. He thought it was strange, he expected to miss them so; and miss them he did, but he was not lonely. The first letter from his wife explained it, "Mamma," said his little three-years old girl when they knelt down to pray the first night away from home, "will you tell God we left papa alone?"

The First American Poetry.

There are few girls or boys in this country who have not heard the nursery rhyme sung by their mothers while rocking the cradle,

"Lul-a-by baby upon the tree top;
When the wind blows the cradle will rock;
When the bough breaks the cradle will fall,
And down will come cradle and baby and all."

But how many of you know the origin of the simple lines? We have the following account from the records of the Boston Historical Society. Shortly after our forefathers landed at Plymouth, Mass., a party were out in the field where the Indian women or squaws, as they are called, had papooses, that is babies, and having no cradles, they had them tied up in Indian fashion, and hung from the limbs of the surrounding trees. Sure enough, "when the wind blew, these cradles would rock." A young man of the party observing this, peeled off a piece of bark, and wrote the above lines, which were, it is believed, the first poetry written in America.—Ex.

Whom Shall I Ask?

"Are you a good boy, Andrew?" This question was put by a Sunday-school teacher to a lad, when he first came to school. "I am willing you should inquire, sir," replied the boy. "Whom shall I ask?" said the teacher. "My mother," replied Andrew. It is a good sign when a boy can thus refer to his mother for his character. Some children can read and write very well, and repeat a great many verses of the Bible, and be very punctual and regular at Sunday school, and be always reading good books; and yet, when we ask about them at home, or at the day school, we find they are careless, cross, disobedient, and selfish. A child may say and do many very good things, and still be very wicked and unhappy.

Evening Song.

Slowly fades the rosy light,
Gently fall the shades of night;
While along the heavens clear,
One by one the stars appear,
Seeming as they range on high,
Angel-watchers in the sky.

Little children, kneel and pray,
Count your blessings through the day;
If with sin your hearts have striven,
Loved the right, the wrong forgiven;
God whose tender mercies keep,
"Giveth his beloved sleep."

Ere you rest upon her bed,
Mark the words that Jesus said;
Rich or poor, or bond or free,
"Suffer them to come to me;"
To his arms the lambs are given,
"Such the kingdom is of heaven."

☞ BE TIDY.—"Now, my son, be tidy; fold up your night-gown again; I must have it done neatly."

Such were the words addressed by a kind mother to her little boy. Years have passed since that time, and that little boy has grown up to be a man. A friend said to him one day, "How is it that you can get through so much work as you do?"

"By method, method! I am now reaping the fruits of my mother's lesson—BE TIDY," was the reply.

☞ "Do draw up the curtain, mother, do draw up the curtain," said a little child from her trundle-bed, "for I want the eyes of heaven to keep watching me all night. If I wake up, I love to look at them; if I don't wake up, they still love to look down on me."

Lines.

Darkly o'er the distant mountains
Heaves in sight the threat'ning cloud,
Lightnings flash o'er earth's deep fountains,
Thunders stir each deep'ning shroud.
What portends the awful dawning
That upheaves this struggling scene?
'Tis the day of God Almighty!
Time no more shall intervene.

Who can stay the tide of terror,
That already rolls in sight?
Nations, drunk with indignation,
Madly rush into the fight.
Nought of earth can stay its progress,—
Angels cannot stay the storm,
Wide it sweeps o'er earth's great empire,
Thrones are reeling—falling—gone!

Light beyond the gloomy billows
Breaks in glory on my sight;
Fields, with living verdure blooming,
Floods of never-ceasing light:
Life's fair tree, with healing fruitage,
Stands eternal on that shore;
They who eat its fruit immortal,
'Neath its branches die no more.

A Condensed Report

Of a Discussion held in South Ashburnham, March 19th–22d, 1861, between Rev. Jacob Baker and Eld. Miles Grant.

REPORTED BY J. D. MERRIAM.

March 20.—FIRST SPEECH OF MR. BAKER.

He comes to a definition of terms, or the use of the original words translated spirit. "Ruach," in the Hebrew, corresponding with "pneuma" in the Greek. Quotes Job 32: 8. "There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding. The spirit is the same essence of divinity. 1 Cor. 2: 11,—"The spirit of man which is in him." The spirit is that thinking, knowing, reasoning quality in man. Eccl. 12: 7,—"The spirit returns to God who gave it." Zech. 12: 1,—"Formeth the spirit of man within him." Referred to the case of Jairus' daughter. Her spirit, "pneuma," came again. Paul desired to depart and be with Christ. He read from Chambers an argument to show the impossibility of a literal resurrection. Paul says, for we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. When made alive in Christ, they will be new creatures, and the spirit will then grow.

FIRST SPEECH OF ELD. GRANT.—March 20.

He shows that the same word rendered spirit applies to animals as well as to man. Gen. 7: 22,—"All in whose nostrils was the breath of life . . . died." Eccl. 3: 19,—"They have all one breath." Refers to Job 32: 8,—"There is a spirit in man." The man is one thing and the spirit another. The word has four different significations. 1. A being. 2. A state of mind. 3. An influence proceeding from a being. 4. The atmosphere we breathe. Compare Eccl. 12: 7, with Ps. 104: 27. Job 27: 3,—"The spirit of God is in my nostrils." Isa. 2: 22,—"Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils." We read of the spirit of error, the spirit of bondage, the spirit of anti-christ. Are they separate beings? —"Thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust." We live by breathing. Luke 8: 54,—"Her spirit, (i. e. her breath) came again." Acts 7, 59,—"They stoned Stephen," etc. Where is Stephen? Dead and buried. My friend says he is alive. But we find not a word about the spirit's being the man.—Required proof that man's spirit is alive when the man is dead.

SECOND SPEECH OF MR. BAKER.

The difference between the account of the creation of animals and man, is pressed as a strong point, and seems to think that the Old Testament is not so clear on this subject as the New. The argument drawn from the use of the terms "nephesh" and "ruach" is this. God is not represented by "nephesh" or "pneuma," but by "ruach" or "pneuma." Referring to Stephen, he says, When did Jesus receive his spirit? Into the grave? No! but into the heavens where he was.—The case of the woman with seven husbands. He says that in the resurrection they are all as the angels of God in heaven. I do not see how men can be saved without a resurrection. Moses and Elias are seen alive at the transfiguration of Christ. John fell at the feet of the angel to worship him. He considered him to be one of the prophets. Eph. 1: 10,—"Gather together in one all things in Christ . . . even in him." All are gathered together in Christ, then as the dead are to be raised incorruptible, the word expresses the idea that they can never die; they become immortal. This compared with Isa. 25: 8,—"He shall wipe away tears from off all faces."—Paul was happy amid his trials. Could he desire to be in the grave and know nothing?

SECOND SPEECH OF ELD. GRANT.

In relation to the cattle and beasts and man; they have all one spirit or breath, all made of dust, and all go to dust again. What gives thought to man? An active brain, without which a man knows nothing. Suppose I take a hammer and dash a man's brains out; away he goes to glory, if my friend's position is true. Holy men of God spake as moved by the Holy Ghost. Were they ignorant of theology? Both the Old Testament and the New agree on this question. Are all accounted worthy to have part in the resurrection to life? All have a place in that world? The worthy ones only. It is an important admission that there is no salvation without a resurrection. What is dead? The spirit? No! The body. This, my friend says, cannot be raised. Therefore there is no resurrection.—Mark 12: 27,—"God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." He speaks of those things which be not as though they were. So Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are to be raised from the dead. Nothing said about the spirits of Moses and Elias being seen on the mount. If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature. Suppose he is out of him? What will be do with those who are of their father the devil? That earthly house, what is it? This whole arrangement of this world, which is compared to a tent, is to be taken down. Jesus has gone to prepare a place for the saints. John saw the New Jerusalem. Abraham looked for a city, which is the final abode of the saints.

THIRD SPEECH OF MR. BAKER.

The promise to Abraham is taken up. "In thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blest." The seed is Christ. He came and died for all—tasted death for every man. "He shall see the travail of his soul and be satisfied." "Behold the Lamb of God! which taketh away the sin of the world." There will be no sin in the world when it is all taken away. Men are to be washed, justified and sanctified. 1 Cor. 6: 11,—"But ye are washed," etc. You shall be raised up by Christ, because he is the resurrection and the life. He says, "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me." Compare with the prophecy of Isa. 45: 22–24. Admits that the spirit dies as well as the body. Resurrection means a lifting up. There shall be a power in Christ to lift them up higher and higher, by the power of truth over the soul. Compares the work of Christ in purifying men to a refiner, who separates the pure silver from the dross.

ELD. GRANT'S THIRD SPEECH.

Col. 1: 20,—"Having made peace through the blood of his cross," etc. Paul was taking to the brethren the saints. He gathers all such. "If ye continue in the faith." There is a condition. If you move away from the hope of the gospel, you are not going to be gathered. John 1: 29,—"Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." What! unconditionally? 1 John 1: 9,—"If we confess our sins, he is faithful," etc. My friend says they will all be cleansed, any how. "Draw all men." The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. Do all profit by it? "Ye do always resist the Holy Ghost." "The Spirit and the bride say come!" Do they all come? Says Christ,—"Ye will not come to me that ye might have life." Quotes Matt. 23: 37,—"Ye would not." My friend admits some die in their sins, will he show when they come? Compare Gen. 12, with Acts 3: 25, and Rev. 5: 9. "Redeemed out of every nation," etc. Matt. 24: 30,—"Then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn." Did they at the destruction of Jerusalem? A rule for understanding the Scriptures. When a condition is expressed relative to a promise or threat, in one place, it is implied in all others.—The prediction of Jonah relative to Nineveh. The people repented, put on sackcloth and ashes. A condition implied though not expressed. The promises apply only to believers.

MR. BAKER'S FIRST SPEECH.—P. M.

Another passage as further proof of my position. Luke 2: 10,—"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." God has a purpose in the creation of men, and will accomplish it. He made known his purposes to the disciples, not to the unregenerate. Admits there is a condition; but the sin of the world is to be taken away, yes, from every heart. Illustrates by a father's requesting his son to carry in a pile of wood. He carried in one armful, and said he did not feel inclined to carry it all in. My friend thinks Jesus will not feel inclined to carry in but a few of the human family. —Refers to the punishment of Cain. He cries out, "My punishment is greater than I can bear." The Bible teaches—"There is no peace to the wicked;" they are "like the troubled sea," etc. There is a judgment before the resurrection. Ps. 58: 11.—"Verily he is a God that judgeth in the earth." Prov. 11: 31. Paul says Christ came to condemn sin in the flesh. Rom. 11: 25, "Blindness in part has happened to Israel . . . . so all Israel shall be saved." The Deliverer shall come and take away their sins.

FIFTH SPEECH OF ELDER GRANT.—P. M.

Was Paul happy? He says, "If in this life only I have hope in Christ, I am of all men most miserable. Quotes Ezek. 18: 20,—"The soul that sinneth, it shall die." 23 verse. God has no pleasure in the death of the wicked. Matt. 25: 31.—Two classes brought to view. To one Christ says, "Come, ye blessed . . . . inherit the kingdom." To the other, "Depart, ye cursed." Is this a union of the righteous with the wicked? No! They are separated. Some will not come to Christ—die wicked; and it remains for my friend to show that they will have another offer of salvation after the resurrection and day of judgment. Rom. 11: 25 compared with Isa. 59: 20. Rom. 9; 6,—"They are not all Israel which are of Israel." 17th ver., "A remnant shall be saved." Does a remnant mean all? It is only those that obey God.—The refining process is to go on in this world, not in the world to come.

SECOND SPEECH OF MR. BAKER.—P. M.

The part of man, made in the image of God, is the kernel of wheat which will be gathered into the garner.—I am put in the crucible. There is a little silver in me, a little moral excellence. The dross will be burned up. The refining process is to go on, and the washing and rubbing is to continue until the work is complete and all saved. Compares Dan. 12, with Matt. 24, as referring to a work completed at the destruction of Jerusalem, making a strong point of the 34th ver., "This generation," etc. Job. 23: 13. Proof that what God desires he will accomplish.—The work of the potter referred to. When one vessel is marred, he makes it over into another. So he will do with us.

SECOND SPEECH OF ELDER GRANT—P. M.

The term resurrection is not used in a spiritual sense in the Bible. It is of importance that we believe something. We must believe in God, in the Savior, in faith and repentance, in order to be christians; but it is not belief that determines our character; it is our deeds. God has nowhere said he would save the wicked. Spiritual or moral death is the crime for which the man must die.—If Adam had obeyed God, he would have lived forever. Now he has got to go through the grave, and be raised from the dead, or not live forever. Refers to different renderings of the text. Thou shalt surely die in the day. The word rendered in may be translated thirteen different ways, three of which are admissible; viz., after, against, and in. Texts were brought where the word was translated in these different ways. So we may read, "After the day thou eatest," etc. 1 Cor. 15,—"The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam a quickening spirit," who is coming to raise us from the dead. He is talking to the brethren. They are not spiritually dead, therefore he refers to the literally dead. Death now gets the victory over the saints; but when the trump sounds, they rise from the grave, and sing the song,—"O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?"

MR. BAKER'S THIRD SPEECH.

The mercy of God is here introduced. The same mercy that seeks the salvation of one, seeks the salvation of all, because we have all one common Father. When God purposes anything, it is impossible to have it otherwise. He knew when he created me whether I was to be destroyed or not. All the dead are to be raised immortal, and of course cannot be annihilated. Were I to go to heaven, and not to see my loving friends there, I should say, Where are those friends I loved so well? If the answer came, I have blotted them out of existence, I should say, let me go with them. I could never shout glory if he was so regardless of my wishes as to strike one of the dear ones into oblivion. I could not love a God that should torment his children eternally, or blot them from existence.—Here is a quality of matter. Like brings forth like. At death, then shall the dust return to dust as it was, and the spirit returns to God who gave it. There is a resurrection for all who live unto him. When they pass from existence here, they enter another state of existence.

THIRD SPEECH OF ELDER GRANT.

God purposes to save all those who obey him. There is no such doctrine in the Bible that God made man to destroy him. If you sow a pear seed, you expect a pear tree will come up. If you sow a man, a man will come up. That which lies in the grave, is to come up to immortality. Acts 24: 14, "There shall be a resurrection of the dead both of the just and unjust." Rev. 20: 6,—A second resurrection. Luke 13; 23,—"Are there few that be saved?" I cannot believe Jesus and my friend too. Which ought I to believe?—There shall be "wailing and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out."—Adam was driven from the tree of life lest he should eat and live forever. Some overcome and enter the city, and live forever. "But without are dogs," etc. —He illustrated the subject of the resurrection by some vials, to show it was possible for God to raise the dead. God has said he will raise the dead. Will he do it? If there is no resurrection of the dead, then Christ is not raised; and if he be not raised, then our faith is vain, and there is no salvation.—The spiritual essence does not die, of course needs no resurrection.—A few assertions made by our friend which he has failed to prove.

1. Man's higher essence is spirit.
2. Christ came to judge the world at the first advent.
3. God made man's body, and put a moral image in it.
4. When the wicked are cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, it is to bleach them from their sins.
5. There is a spark of divinity in us all.
6. The wicked to be made alive after the second death.
7. Man has within him a spiritual body.
8. The redemption of the body is the spiritual body.
9. The Old Testament not so reliable as the New.
10. Animals not animated by spirit.
11. It is impossible for the body to be raised.
12. All are made immortal at the resurrection.

MR. BAKER'S CLOSING SPEECH.

In closing, he refers again to the strong texts which he has introduced in the discussion. God has said he will wipe away tears from off all faces; and inasmuch as he has said, "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth;" and has sworn by himself in righteousness, saying that "unto me every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall swear and say, "in the Lord have I righteousness and strength." It is Jehovah that speaks: he speaks to the whole world, and he will not fail to accomplish it.

ELD. GRANT'S CLOSING SPEECH.

"If there be no resurrection of the dead . . . . then is our preaching vain; . . . . they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." If our friend's arguments are sound, he proves the Bible false, and our hopes vain, for when we are dead, it is the end of us. But we read of bone coming to his bone, and sinews covered them, and the breath came into them, and they lived. Which is the most wonderful? to create a man, or to put him together again after being taken to pieces?—He referred to a few passages of Scripture. Christ is the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person. David said, Ps. 17: 15, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." Phil. 3: 21,—"who shall change our vile body;" . . . . fashioned like unto his glorious body." Rom. 6: 5,—"For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Christ was not morally dead. Phil. 2: 7,—"made in the likeness of men." Not morally, for he was not a sinner. We find that God is a being with a form. Christ says, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." God has bodily organs.—The face of the Lord is against them that do evil." "The eyes of the Lord are in every place." Moses says he wrote the commandments with his finger. Daniel saw him—Dan. 7: 9. Christ looked like him. Consequently our Creator is a personal being. We cannot conceive of a God without personality. We are taught to pray, "Our Father who art in heaven." —We are made literally, personally and physically in the likeness of God, but not morally. God did not make a moral likeness, but he made a man.

(To be continued.)

For the Crisis.

Secret Prayer.

My brother and sister in Christ, do you improve this privilege? Do you heed the advice and command of Christ? "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father who is in secret; and thy Father, who seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly." Christ expressly enjoins secret prayer. "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet," etc. There is a part of religion that demands the privacy of the closet. When withdrawn from the presence of every creature, alone by ourselves, we feel most solemn reflections, feel that "Thou God seest me." It is then that we prove the sincerity of our love to Zion, and pour out our prayers for her prosperity. And there each one can plead his own particular case. Where, I ask, is the true, genuine christian, who has not some important business to transact between himself and his God, which he could not do before any other person, however intimate? In the closet, the spontaneous language of an overflowing heart pours out before the great "I AM."

Although united public prayer is enjoined by the holy Scriptures, yet, when we design our own individual promotion, it is the strongest mark of hypocrisy.—Matt. 6: 5. Do not pray to be seen of men. Do not use religion for a cloak to hide some pet scheme, and to cover a sin-polluted soul. Remember, a hypocrite is the worst character you can bear. You are persecuted for appearing a christian in this world, and damned in the judgment for not being one, and perhaps you have the weight of other souls resting upon you, that you, by your hypocrisy, have led astray. I believe if we neglect secret prayer we certainly turn from God, and become of that class "that draw near to God with the mouth, but the heart is far from him."

The religion of the closet yields a rich reward. It is time well improved; "and thy Father who seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." To me, the worship of the closet is refreshing, and I believe it is to every true christian. It strengthens him for the performance of public duties, it gives him strength to assist others, to come and seek a Savior to their souls.

Secret worship is a means of public excellence. He that dares to neglect God in secret, because men cannot see this sin, may find that God dares punish openly, and men see his shame. But "he that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High, shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." The christian, who by secret communion with God, proves his sincerity and obtains the approbation of God, will often be surprised at the honors which God confers upon him before men. I cannot think that one who has been truly converted, and feels the love of God in his heart, will neglect the worship of the closet. Whatever pretensions to piety they make in public, if they neglect secret prayer it is to be feared they will be found of that number that turn "back to perdition"; but if we wish for that light that shines more and more perfectly, we shall seek for it in the closet, trusting in God, and "he will reward us openly." For the Crisis.

Minutes of the R. I. Quarterly Conference.

RIVER POINT, March 27th, 1861.

Conference met as adjourned from Providence. Moderator in the chair. Opened by prayer by Bro. J. T. Dixon, joined by several others. Minutes of the last Conference called for and read. Some questions were asked in relation to Bro. Hancock's discourse as it appeared in the report, by Bro. J. T. Dixon. Satisfactorily answered. Motion made that the minutes be accepted. Passed. Motion made that brethren with us, not members of the Conference, be invited to take part in our deliberations. Passed. Delegates were called upon to report from their respective churches. Bro. Carpenter appeared as delegate from Danielsonville church. Had no discouraging report to make, nor anything very encouraging. He was thankful that the church was in as good condition as it is. There have none joined the church by conversion. Several had embraced the Bible doctrine belonging to other churches, especially the Methodist. Conference meetings interesting, having four a week. The Sabbath school has had a great many hindrances—such as picnics and concerts in the Sabbath schools of other denominations. There was a prosperous school in the summer—partly suspended in the winter. They trusted in the Lord for the addition of such to the church, as should be saved, as they wished no others added. Bro. J. T. Dixon raised an objection to use of Sabbath, in contra-distinction to the use of that word by those who keep the seventh-day Sabbath. He would use "Sunday" or "Lord's day" instead.

Bro. J. D. Brown reported from the Providence church. Their meetings had been very fully attended. People of all classes of society were interested in coming. Most of the church was actively engaged and seemed to have the work of Christ at heart. There was something, however, that kept the work of salvation back in relation to some, who were once convicted, but seem to have lost former impressions. He did not know the reason of it. Two had been converted, and joined the church by baptism. The rowdies had come in who made disturbance in the meetings. Some of the brethren thought it best to have the Police called in, which measure was, at last, adopted, although he and a few others thought it not the best way of proceeding. He thought there was a lack of faith in some members of the church. Bro. Cameron reported from River Point church. He had not been able to attend the meetings on account of sickness, but knew them to be in a prosperous condition. Conference meetings well attended and spiritual. Do not have preaching every Sabbath. Several waiting to go forward in baptism. The clerk reported from Foster church. The conference meetings had generally been interesting. They have been having something of a revival interest. Three had risen for prayers. They seem to want a great excitement before they can work effectually. A few waiting to go forward in baptism.

Bro. E. Bellows said he had calculated to be in new places most of the time. Had been at Woodville part of the winter. Some backsliders reclaimed. Sinners converted. One Atheist convicted and converted in about the time the jailor was in Paul's day. He had been to Pontiac and the spirit of the Lord came down in great power upon them there. Some backsliders reclaimed. Went to Coventry to baptise and the power of God settled upon the audience around the water. Six were afterwards converted and baptised. Had been at River Point some. Went to Frekville. Seventeen converted. Baptized seven and Bro. Roberts seven. A few had been converted since in other places where he had been laboring. He was one of the members who organised the Conference. It is not its object to legislate for the churches. Its object was to forward the work of the gospel by uniting and consolidating the interest of the churches in the State.

Bro. J. T. Dixon said he had no very discouraging report to make. The reports of various Sunday schools had interested him very much. They are necessary—almost indispensable. The older ones have become hardened and the work, to a great extent, must be among the children. No great necessity of having a library filled with books peculiarly adapted by its doctrine to the belief of Advents. Those who make the most objections to library books on such ground, are generally those who have the least interest in the prosperity of the Sunday school. There is a large and prosperous Sunday school at Rocky Brook. It numbers seventy in the winter, including teachers, and one hundred in the summer. The reason of its prosperity is, the brethren and sisters are firm and always at their post. Some of the Sunday school children have been converted. Sacrifice is the very thing we need. Five were converted under the labors of Bro. Hancock. Self sacrifice must be the life of our christianity, if we have life at all. Chewing tobacco must be dispensed with or the cause of Christ cannot prosper. He thought the reason that the church prospered no more in Foster was because they used so much of the filthy weed. The church at Rocky Brook numbered about one hundred, but he dare not say there was more than twenty-five whose names were written in the Lamb's book of life.

Bro. H. L. Hastings said he had been interested. Was working on half strength. Hoped to get free from serving tables. Work of God had gone on some. Been pushing tract work. Gospel light had gone east, west, north and south. Expected a heavy discount in the day of judgment. Had lately preached at Mount Vernon, Brewster's Station, N. Y. and Carolina Mills. Had seen more or less interest at all these places, especially the last. Expected three-fourths of the seed was lost. We must labor notwithstanding. Labor at the West almost in vain. Spoke of a minister there almost discouraged. If a ninety-ninth part of the seed is lost and a one-hundredth part takes effect, it will pay for the whole. He meant to scatter enough to have a good harvest there. A man in N. Y. State went to meeting and got a little tract, went home and read it to his wife in bed. It unlocked the Bible to her. The man and wife and nine children, all but one married—seventeen in all—have been converted and baptized and now "Stand up for Jesus." It is working all through that county. They go fifteen miles to hold meetings in school-houses. A great many go to meeting and are willing to work when they get there. He liked quantity—preferred quality. He had just written a book entitled "The Model Church" in which he had looked at this thing. We are schooling. He was much interested in Sabbath schools. It takes a good temper to keep a Sabbath-school in good order. All the sheep had to be lambs once. What made the tree crooked was because it was trod on when it was small. Children must be educated right. Books of right doctrine are of little importance when they cannot be had. The only way to keep error out of children's heads is to fill them so full of truth there will be no room for any error. You cannot stop a child's reading. Learn them to select truth for themselves. A man that don't know only what he believes does not know much. Tobacco is unclean in itself and hinders the work of God. He knew a man at Rocky Brook who backslid because he would not leave it off. He had labored long and hard against it and had seen some good fruit. It, with kindred evils, kept churches in a state of everlasting babyhood. Bro. C. Goodrich stated, that he lived in the western part of Connecticut. Three or four preachers in that section engaged in preaching the gospel of Christ. Ought to be more. Mentioned several churches in that section. Most of them rather dull. Very little interest in Sabbath schools. None winters—hardly any summers. Not more than six or ten. Tobacco plenty. Hoped to see a thorough reformation in that respect. Tobacco a curse. Had been at Carolina Mills. Work progressing. One new one started last Sunday evening. It behooves us to use all possible means to carry on the work of the Lord. Bro. Babcock motioned that we adjourn until 9 o'clock Saturday morning. Carried.

Saturday 9 o'clock A. M.—Bro. Peckam reported from Central church. Was in a good condition. Several had been converted and baptised. The amendments to the Constitution which lay on the table were then called for and read. Art. 3d was adopted after erasing all but the last clause. Art. 7th was rejected and another offered to fill its place by Bro. J. D. Brown. Accepted. The other articles of amendment were rejected en masse. The amendments to the Constitution, as adopted, stand as follows: Art. 3d. "Churches failing to send delegates should not fail to send letters." Art. 7th. "And there shall be a collection taken up at each Quarterly Conference for this object. The Treasurer shall expend these contributions of money in tracts and distribute them at each quarterly meeting to preachers or any others, as the Conference may direct." A letter was read from Bro. S. C. Hancock, giving a short account of his labors. Also a letter from Bro. Macomber was presented to the Conference. After reading one page the Conference voted not to read more because of its great length and nothing interesting to the Conference here assembled. Bro. G. Champlin asked if it was proper for this Conference to ordain a man who held with those keeping the seventh day, Sabbath. Bro. J. T. Sweet thought it was proper to ordain any man who was guided by the Spirit of God, his every day life evincing it. He supposed special reference had been made to Bro. Hancock who was ordained at the Conference in Providence, and thought it was right to ordain him. Bro. J. T. Dixon said that he was willing to fellowship the seventh day brethren who were exemplary christians, but they would not fellowship those keeping the first day believing them to have the mark of the beast. He thought Bro. Hancock was a christian and not as radical as some of his brethren. He thought he ought to have been ordained among his own denomination. Remarks were made by the Moderator, Bro. J. D. Brown, E. Bellows and others which resulted in the offering of the following resolution by Bro. J. D. Brown: "Resolved, that the attention of the Conference be called to the duty of giving earnest heed to the instruction of Christ and the apostles in regard to the character and influence of those whom we ordain to preach. And we require candidates for the work of Christ, to bring recommendations from the church or churches with whom they have labored. And we recommend that ordination be made the special subject of prayer and thought." Moved that they be accepted. Carried. The question was asked if the Conference should adjourn? Request was tendered from the church at Foster that the next quarterly meeting be with them. Granted. Moved that the Conference adjourn to meet at Foster the last Wednesday in June. Carried.

at the Conference: Eld. H. L. Hastings, 1 Cor. 3: 7, 8, Friday evening. Eld. H. F. Carpenter, Heb. 4: 3, Saturday afternoon. Rev. J. D. Brown, Rev. 2: 24, Saturday evening. Rev. J. T. Dixon, 1 John 2: 24, Sunday morning. Rev. M. R. Phetteplace, 1 John 4: 3, Sunday afternoon. Eld. P. C. Rodman, James 4: 8, Sunday evening.

It would make the report too long and cumbrous to give a particular report of each discourse. The Spirit of God attended them and deep impressions were made on the hearts of many, we trust. The conference meetings were unusually interesting. They were free, earnest, cheering and powerful. The love-feast Sabbath morning was especially a blessed season. There were fifty-nine exhortations, several prayers, interspersed with spiritual songs, understandingly sung to the praise of God. Gentle showers of heavenly grace fell on us. The fire of love and union and holy perseverance was kindled deep in every heart. Many heartily thanked the Lord for the institution of the R. I. Conference of Reformers. The clerk was not present the last evening. Cannot state particulars. The meetings of the Conference grow better as each one occupies its appointed time, and we earnestly pray God that their pathway may grow brighter and brighter until the perfect day arrives.

My Journal.

Thursday, Feb. 21st, 1861. Having arranged to spend some months at the "Water Cure," under the care of Drs. James C. Jackson and F. Wilson Hurd, in Dansville, N. Y., I took leave of my family and friends, and took the cars for that place. I called on friends at Albany, Rochester and Springwater, N. Y., and arrived Feb. 25th, where I was cordially received; and especially by Bro. D. P. Paylon and family, Bro. Berry, and others of long acquaintance. I have now spent three weeks in the Cure, feeling quite at home, and pleased with the treatment, the food, and order of the institution. I have not been here long enough yet to get any special benefit, but feel quite sure of help under the Water Cure treatment, as they have not failed in any case of this kind. I therefore hope for help in the course of a few months, so as to enter again upon the work of publishing the gospel of the kingdom.

We have over one hundred persons here, of both sexes, seeking health, most of them cheerful and hopeful as to the result.

I am not able to say much at this time, and will close with the following notice of this institution, by a gentleman of high standing in C. W., who spent some time at this Cure.

"Very properly indeed is the institution called 'Our Home,' however strange that title may sound to the public. A person has only to visit it and live a few weeks under its hospitable influence to be made to feel as perfectly 'at home, as it is possible for one to feel when far distant from near and dear relations, and among those who, previous to coming here, were every one strangers to each other. Each new comer is welcomed to the institution scarcely more warmly by the physicians and proprietors than by the patients themselves, nearly all of whom, feeling the benefits of friendly hands extended to them upon their arrival, endeavor to get acquainted with and render 'at home' each accession to their numbers. And this one feature of the institution has very much to do with its marked success in the treatment of disease. The physicians often re-affirm that they seek to bring to bear, as nearly as may be, all of nature's forces upon those in ill health who apply to them for assistance, and of these the Social force is not the least important. Everything in the nature of an innocent amusement which can be made available for the purpose, is applied, to keep the minds of despairing ones from dwelling too constantly and morbidly upon their ailments, and to facilitate their cure. And the arrangements with this view seem to meet most cases admirably, insomuch that very few ever leave the institution without a regret that circumstances prevent their longer stay."

So far as my short experience goes, I can bear witness to the truthfulness of this statement.

For the Crisis.

"Follow Me."

"Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and follow me." Question. Deny himself of what? In the epistle of Paul to Titus 2: 11, we read, "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men." 12th verse, "Teaching us, that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world."

1. If I live soberly, I can calmly consider the word of the Lord in all its bearings. I can see that it points out to me many duties, as I read in Paul's exhortation to the Roman brethren, Rom. 12:—"I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Again, I read in 1 Cor. 3: 16,—"Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" How [illegible]

ters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind. Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God." Then I will live soberly, with the help of the Lord, and keep myself from idols; because I desire salvation, and I shall have it when Jesus comes to reward his people. I cannot reasonably expect it before, because I read in the word of the Lord, Rev. 22: 12,—"And behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Yes, thank the Lord, I shall receive my reward when those that died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, receive theirs; because the word of the Lord says, Heb. 11: 40,—"God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." So I conclude in my mind that death is not the gate to endless joy; for when the saints of God step over the threshold of death into endless joy, there must be perfection; but they without us cannot be made perfect: they saw them afar off, but I see them near, and am waiting, after fulfilling the requirements as above.

2. To live righteously and godly in this present world, I am convinced is to follow Christ, for he is the great pattern; and while we trace him from the cradle to the cross, and to his ascension, we find him teaching us as a wise governor, as recorded in Matt. 2: 6,—"And thou, Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda, for out of thee shall come a governor that shall rule my people Israel." To live righteously and godly we should conform unto this governor. We hear him saying unto Satan, "Get thee hence, for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God." Then it will not answer for me to worship any other except God. I read in Rev. 14: 9,—"And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture." etc. So we are to be careful as we travel on enchanted ground, that we worship none but the true and living God. Let us examine closely and see if we are not following some tradition, objectionable to Gods requirements, and in so doing worship some other, object but God. If we follow Jesus there is no danger of this, for he will lead us from all such.

We find by reading the word of the Lord that such things happened anciently, recorded as ensamples and they are written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the world are come. As in Ex. 32: 8,—"They have turned aside quickly out of the way which I commanded them; they have made them a molten calf and have worshiped it, and have sacrificed thereunto, and said, these be thy gods, oh Israel, which have brought thee up, out of the land of Egypt." If they so soon turned away from God, is there not danger in our case also? "Let us therefore fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it." O, let us at once leave tradition and all the appointments of the friends of Satan, and worship God, the creator of the heavens and the earth, and in so doing we shall love Jesus and follow him through evil as well as good report. We hear the Savior speaking by St. John, 14: 10.—"Believest thou not that I am in the Father and the Father in me? The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself, but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." Again in St. John 13: 20, 21,—"At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father and ye in me, and I in you. He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me, and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him and will manifest myself to him." Verse 24,—"He that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings; and the word which ye hear is not mine but the Father's which sent me." 31,—"But that the world may know that I love the Father, and as the Father gave me commandment even so I do."

God has a people on the earth and he knoweth them. They have received the spirit of adoption whereby they cry Abba, Father. I find they are spoken of in Eph 2: 19,—"Now, therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints and of the household of God. And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. In whom all the building, fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord. The followers of Jesus comprising this holy temple, are to be found without spot and blameless, as is written. 2 Peter 3: 14,—"Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent, that ye may be found of him without spot and blameless." Let us follow Jesus in every example, and then we shall be justified in the judgment of the great day, which is close upon us. Paul understood what was required of us to be justified. Let us read what he says in Romans 2: 13,—"For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified." Faith and works go well together, for one without the other is dead. The Lord is willing that we should have the Comforter to lead us into all truth. He is a present help in every time of need.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, APRIL 17, 1861.

The Boston Conference.—Our conference in Boston has closed up most gloriously. We have not found time to make any report of the meeting for this number; but would simply say the Lord has bestowed upon us rich blessings.

Notes from my Diary.

Monday, March 25th, returned to Boston, from the discussion at South Ashburnham, and attended class-meeting at the Crisis office. These meetings are well attended, and profitable. Our place is not large enough to accommodate all who come, but we hope for a larger one soon, of suitable size to hold the increasing numbers who wish to meet with us.

Tuesday evening, we commenced meetings at the City Hall, in Charlestown. Notwithstanding the walking was bad, some three hundred were present to hear on the evidences showing that the present dispensation is near its close. We find the people more anxious to hear on this subject than they have been for years. There has been but very little preaching in C. on the truths that distinguish us as a people.

Wednesday evening, a much larger number were in to hear concerning the cause of Spiritualism. At the close of the discourse, several asked questions, which aided in making the truth look more glorious, and error more hideous. The Lord was our helper.

Thursday evening, March 28th, our audience numbered some seven or eight hundred, who listened with excellent attention to the evidences of the literal resurrection of the dead. Many seemed astonished when they learned that our only hope of a future life, if we die, is in the resurrection of the very one we put in the grave. They had been taught that a part of man was immortal, and supposed that the Scriptures sustained such a position. We urged them to produce the passage that teaches such a doctrine, but none was presented. Several inquiries were made by different individuals, but they only helped to make the fact more prominent, that the Bible is plain and harmonious in teaching that, if the dead do not rise, then man's existence ends when "his breath goeth forth."

Friday evening, 29th. This evening the hall was full, and a number were standing. It was thought that nine hundred were present. A deep interest was manifested to hear on the subject of future punishment. The truth found a hearty welcome in many honest hearts. We endeavored to show that the Bible harmoniously teaches that all those who die in their sins will be raised, judged, and condemned to die the "second death," from which there is no resurrection; and that consequently, they are totally and eternally destroyed. Several questions were presented with the usual effect.

It is evident that the truth of the Bible is working with power in many minds in Charlestown. Several prominent members of churches were present, and expressed their surprise at the plainness of the Scriptures on the subjects examined; but were still more astonished at their own carelessness in reading the word of the Lord. Our success in C. surpassed our expectations. The audience requested that further lectures might be given as soon as opportunity would permit.

Saturday, March 10th. At 8 1-2 o'clock we left Boston for our appointment at Collinsville, Ct. On our way, we called on Bro. Wendell, at Hartford, Bro. and Sr. Stillman, and others. The church in H have hired a new and very pleasant hall, near the State house. They are resolved, in the strength of the Lord, to endure to the end, and be saved. They have passed under many clouds, but they find that they all have a "silver lining."

Lord's day, March 31st. We spent the day in Collinsville, where we found a remnant who are decided to seek for immortality, by "patient continuance in well-doing." They have passed through sore trials, but the faithful have found the Lord a present help in time of need. His grace has been sufficient for them.

Monday and Tuesday, April 1st and 2nd, we had no meetings, as the traveling was very bad on account of a snow storm. We spent the evenings at our boyhood home, but mother's seat was vacant.

Wednesday, April 3d, we attended a prayer meeting in Winsted, where we spent the night with Bro. Whitehead, and had a very pleasant season in talking of the Lord's dealings, and the glorious prospect before us.

Thursday evening, we commenced meetings in a pleasant hall in Plainville, Ct. Although the walking was still very bad, yet we had out a goodly number, and a profitable season. The Spirit of the Lord was with us. We continued our meetings Friday and Saturday evenings and over the Lord's day. As soon as the walking became comfortable, the hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, and several were obliged to go away for want of room. We found the people ready and anxious to hear the reasons of the "blessed hope." Several walked from five to seven miles to meeting and back again.

Sabbath day, we had a large gathering of Zion's pilgrims from Bristol, New Britain, Southington, and other places. It was truly heart-cheering to see so many faithful ones, with whom we have worshiped the Lord in by-gone days, and once more unite in prayer and song, while we talked of the speedy consummation of our hope. Our hearts were warmed with fresh love for Jesus and his dear children.

The truth took a firm hold of several minds in Plainville, and at the close of our pleasant communion season, on Sabbath evening, three requested prayers that they might be saved in the coming kingdom.

While at P., Brn. Goodrich and D. A. Jones called on us, with whom we had a very pleasant interview. They are laboring faithfully in the vineyard of the Lord. Bro. Jones is about moving to Bangor, Me. We commend him to all the churches as a true christian preacher, and hope they will give him a hearty reception wherever he may labor.

While at Plainville, we enjoyed the hospitalities of Bro. George Morgan's kind family. We need not say to those who have been there, that his is a pleasant home for pilgrims to the land of glory. They love the ways of the Lord, and are not ashamed to defend his noble cause. We parted in expectation of meeting soon at "the marriage supper of the Lamb."

"Men shall become Gods."

Who says so? The spirits who talk through mediums in these last days. So Satan said to our first parents in paradise. Yes, but he was a liar. Certainly; and so are all who teach what he taught. What! do you think all the spirits who talk through mediums, claiming to be the spirits of our friends, are liars? Most assuredly, every one of them. But they often tell the truth. So do lying men, when they think it best, in order to gain our confidence and sympathy.

These spirits affirm that "God . . . is the higher principle of human life." Hence, according to their teachings, when men adopt the "higher principle of human life," or, in other words, become genuine Spiritualists, they are "gods."

"A Desire to Depart."

Bro. E. Hibbard wishes an exposition of Phil. 1: 23, which reads as follows:—"for I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better."

Some time since, we gave an exposition of the Scriptures; but for the benefit of Bro. H. and others who were not then readers of the Crisis, we will give another brief explanation. Paul had been speaking of living and dying, and with reference to a choice between the two, he is in a strait. If he lived, bonds, imprisonments, whippings, beatings with rods and stones, would be his portion. He felt some like Job, when he said, "O that thou would'st hide me in the grave;" and yet, the church would be profited by his labors, if permitted to be with them. On this account, he is "in a strait betwixt" the "two." But as an offset against both, he would prefer "to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better" than either of the other.

When one says, "I would like to depart and see my friends, no one supposes that he means by such an expression, that he expects some little immaterial piece of him is going to make the visit, but that the whole man wishes to be there. So in Paul's case, if we adopt the present rendering, he would like to be translated like Enoch and Elijah, and not see death, which would be "far better" than living to be whipped and stoned, or to sleep in death.

The word analuo, here rendered "depart," occurs in but one other place in the New Testament, which is in Luke 12: 36, where it is translated return. The passage reads as follows:—"And ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding, that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately." The word analuo is employed in the Septuagint Scriptures to translate a Hebrew word in Josh. 22: 8, which always means return. The passage reads, "And he spake unto them, saying, Return with much riches unto your tents." The Hebrew word shoov, here translated by analuo, is defined, "to turn about, to turn back, to return," "to do again, to do a second time."—Gesenius.

With these facts before us, we cannot see any evidence in Phil. 1: 23, to prove that a part of man continues to live, and goes to its reward, while the physical organism is dead.

Paul must be in harmony with himself; and he has most plainly taught in other places that our only hope of a future life, if we die, is in the resurrection of the dead. He says, "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not." Again he says, "If, the dead rise not, . . . then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." This can never be harmonized with the idea that when man dies, "the real man" goes to his reward independent of the resurrection of the dead.

We think analuo, in Phil. 1: 23, where it is rendered depart, should be translated as in Luke 12: 36; or more properly,—having a desire for the returning and being with Christ; i. e. Paul would like to have Christ return, which would be "far better" than either of the other conditions named.

Civil War.

War has begun! Fort Sumter has been attacked by the people of Charleston, and blood has begun to flow. Sad scenes are before us, but Jesus is the hope of his people. Let all his children beware of drinking in the war spirit, either in religious or political matters. Be humble, watchful, and prayerful.

Says the Boston Traveller, "Suicides are becoming frequent. People get so weary of this excited world, that they rush to the grave in search of quiet. These are the most exciting times that ever have been known, and excitement is death on life."

All should keep in a continued state of readiness to welcome the coming King of kings and Lord of lords. "The end of all things is at hand."

"The Gates of Hell."

Bro. Grant:—Please explain Matt. 16: 18,—"And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter; and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

It appears necessary to take the context in order to understand the whole of this verse. Beginning at verse 15, we read:—"He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." Then follows the verse under consideration. Peter had said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." On this rock or Christ, the church was to be built, not on Peter.

Says Paul, "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."—1 Cor. 3: 11. Says Peter:—"It is contained in the Scripture, Behold I lay in Zion a chief corner-stone, elect, precious; and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded. Unto you therefore which believe he is precious; but unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, and a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient."—1 Peter, 2: 6–8. Again, when speaking of our Savior, Paul says,—"That Rock was Christ."—1 Cor. 10: 4. "Upon this Rock" the church is built.

But what is meant by the expression, "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it?" The word here rendered hell is hades, which represents the grave, or the state of the dead. The same word occurs in 1 Cor. 15: 55;—"O death, where is thy sting? O (hades) grave, where is thy victory?" The word is found again in Rev. 1: 18. "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of (hades),—hell and death." As this Rock, or Christ, has the keys of hades,—the grave—it cannot prevail against his church, because he has power to raise his children from the dead, and has promised to give them the victory when he returns.

Man is Mortal.—When speaking of the idols made by the heathen nations, Solomon says:—"Man made them, and . . . being mortal, he worketh a dead thing with wicked hands."—Wisdom of Solomon, 15: 17. It is very evident that this wise man, to whom the Lord gave special instruction, received no intimation that any part of man is immortal.

Again he says:—"Who shall praise the Most High in the grave, instead of them which live and give thanks. Thanksgiving perisheth from the dead, as from one that is not. . . . The Son of man is not immortal."—Ecclesiasticus, 17: 27–30.

"Truth at all hazards."—This is one of Martin Luther's sayings, and should be adopted as one of the principles of every true man. No one is fit for a reformer [illegible] in the strength of the Lord, to defend the truth and the right, if the whole world is opposed.

Then and Now.

The ancient christians were men who knew what it was to sacrifice for Christ, and to deny themselves, while they came out from the world, and were not conformed to its customs and fashions. They were men known and read of all men, and were not ashamed of their high calling. If they were living now, they would be considered as half crazy, and the other half deluded; being, as then, the subjects of ridicule and contempt.

When speaking of their habits, Gibbon says:—"Among the various articles which excite the 'pious indignation' of the fathers, were 'false hair,' 'white beard,' 'the practice of shaving the beard,' which, according to the expression of Tertullian, is a lie against our own faces, and an impious attempt to improve the works of the Creator."—Gib. Vol. 1, p. 549.

"Dead Souls."—In a report from a missionary, in Waushara Co., Wis., laboring under the patronage of the Home Missionary Society, he says:—

"We have had some things to contend with which, at the time, caused some anxiety. First, the "Soul Sleepers," or "Dead Souls," came with all their forces, and threatened to annihilate every thing. Unbelievers ran after them, and exultingly said, they will soon overthrow orthodoxy."

For the Crisis.

That Prayer Meeting.

It was excellent! So elevating and soul-cheering was it, that we almost forget the sorrows incident to this "groaning earth." Ah! indeed, and who conducted this extraordinary meeting? Was it D. D., and Professor —— and the President of —— College? And did they treat on the geological strata of the earth, and reason profoundly on the time it must have taken for the formation of each stratum, by tracing effect to cause? And did they treat largely of the wonderful phenomena of the celestial and terrestrial, clearly demonstrating the laws of gravitation, attraction, etc.? O, no, far from this. Though most of this prayer meeting company think philosophy and science, generally well enough in their place, yet it is altogether a secondary thing with them, compared with the subject matter of the prayer meeting. It is "foolishness," compared the one with the other. Indeed! What then could be the subject creating such intense interest, and producing such general satisfaction and such joyful emotions? It was the glorious kingdom of God which is soon to be established under the whole heavens, and kindred subjects that naturally follow in that train. If you please, I will give you a little idea of this company and the modus operandi of the meeting.

They were mostly people of plain address, and withal, a little "peculiar," at least, so the world said, and themselves seemed willing to concede the fact, especially those who had made much advancement.—Ex. 19: 5; Deut. 7: 6; and 14: 2; 1 Pet. 2: 9. There was nothing in their physiology or phrenology particularly striking, or differing from other people. There was the naturally grave, and the facetious, and temperaments varying from the nervous to the cool lymphatic. But having been baptized by one spirit into one body, they seemed quite congenial, while each stood in their proper lot and place, doing what they could for mutual benefit. It is a point well understood by them, that those members which seem to be the more feeble are necessary; the talent of each one, however small, being improved, consequently all had a word relative to the noble cause.

They first knelt and fervently implored the Divine blessing, and then spake of the Lord's dealings with them. The venerable sire, who for many years had been fighting the good fight of faith, declared the loving kindness of God manifested through the whole course of his pilgrimage—that as his day, so had been his strength—he had never seen the righteous forsaken nor his seed begging bread, though while passing through poverty's vale he had experienced temptations sore, but with the temptation he had always found a way of escape—he had met foes without, and fears within, and now he believed that the time was not far in the distance when he should feel through his sluggish veins, new vigor flow; eternal youth would be forever his,—his face meanwhile beaming with holy joy. Then there was the middle-aged, who gave in his testimony for the Lord, mentioning the formidable temptations of the adversary to turn him away from the truth, by suggesting the great importance of his business—that he must not spend too much time in attending to spiritual things, and also that it was rather inconvenient at times to attend family prayer, and had he not better drop it altogether, as he sometimes had company before whom it would be quite a cross to pray, as he possessed no very great gift in that way, etc., but thus far he had been enabled to overcome this vain sophistry of Satan, and for one, he was determined to be more valiant for the future, for he believed the time was near when God would marshal his angelic chariots to gather those that had made a covenant by sacrifice. Then there was one humble saint who felt so unworthy, but as Jesus Christ had died for the "chief of sinners" he ventured to throw himself upon the broad wave of his mercy, and though he sometimes trembled when he heard the thunders of Sinai, yet he did think God accepted him, while the grateful tear coursed its way down his meek visage.

Then sister Weak-faith ventured to speak, (for by the way, this company think "there is neither male or female in Christ Jesus") saying she had been much comforted as well as strengthened while listening to the testimonies of the evening, and was determined to venture forward, come what might, for the coming kingdom with its beauties and glories was perfectly ravishing: whereupon Great-heart arose and gave a new impetus to the whole meeting by his decision and lion-like boldness. He knew that our Captain never lost an army; and that he was well able to bring all his soldiers off conquerors, and moreover he has promised he will soon rout the enemy and put him and all his soldiers to an everlasting flight. Everything that can give offence to himself or his children, is soon to be gathered out of earth's territory, and his satanic majesty, with all his subjects is no longer to have a dwelling place, according to the prophet, "No place is found for them." Moreover, he added many encouraging words to Humble-mind and Weak-faith relative to the Good Shepherd carrying the feeble ones in his bosom, he also mentioned the comparison of the eagle watching her young, when they were learning to fly, and if they were likely to fall she would hastily dart under them and bear them up on her wings to their eyrie.

Then one Sorrowful-heart tried to speak, but so convulsed and weighed down with trials it was difficult for him to articulate so as to be well understood by those sitting a little way from him, but what the auditory nerves failed to communicate to the brain, was fully made up by the optics. His wan and sickly visage glistening with two crystal streams, bespoke sorrow within. His bodily sufferings were extreme at times, his pecuniary means quite limited; but what seemed most intolerable of all, was the fact that "his foes were they of his own household. Whereupon Bro. Bible-man drew from his pocket a precious little volume and read: "And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say unto you, there is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake and the gospel's, but he shall receive an hundred-fold now in this time, houses and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life"; and also that the Lord chastens all those he loves, in order to perfect them, and that he recognizes the trying of faith to be more precious than gold that perisheth, and furthermore that "all things shall work together for good to them that love God"; and when he had finished, there seemed to be one voluntary and simultaneous move of the whole company in bowing before the throne of God, imploring Divine aid in behalf of their afflicted brother and their faith seemed to say, our High Priest is not only willing, but able to succor all that are tried and tempted.—Heb. 2: 18.

Then they poured forth one of those thrilling, and soul cheering songs that breathe the air of heaven! Then little sister Modesty felt she must give in her testimony for Him that had done so much for her. She felt an ardent desire to praise Him in more noble and lofty strains. There were many other things of intense interest which I cannot now relate. But I assure you of all the meetings to facilitate a growth in grace, the prayer and conference meetings stand pre-eminent. Let persons listen to the preaching of an angel, and neglect the prayer meeting, and they will never become "doers of the Word." I really hope you will go next time, and not only go, but have a word to say. You can scarce conceive how highly every testimony is appreciated. If you feel in doubt with regard to your acceptance, and express a desire to be assured of the momentous fact, they will bear your case to the throne of grace with a fervor becoming the disciples of Christ. Now do not let some trivial affair keep you away, but show that you are willing to put yourself to some inconvenience to keep the command of meeting together and exhorting one another while we see the day of God approaching.

Correspondence.

From B. Spaulding.

Bro. Grant:—For the sake of the many kind friends and patrons who feel interested in me and in the blessed cause of our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ, and who are inquiring what has become of Bro. Spaulding, let me say, I have been feeble in health and down in spirits, owing to overlaboring, until my nervous system was all worn out and reaction came upon me, so that I was good for nothing, and thought I never should rally from my state of weakness. And I said in my haste, "Let me die," as said Elijah in his despondency. But I begin to think there may be something yet for me to do, praise the Lord! and I am more than willing to live and labor for God and my fellow-men. [illegible]

the living, the living, they only can praise God. Thanks be to the name of the Lord that I do live. Thanks to his name that I feel encouraged. The clouds are lifting, the light begins to shine.

I am on a visit to N. H., and the kindness and hospitality of friends affect my heart, and encourage and animate me, as last year at Boston Conference. I shall never forget the kindness of friends at that Conference. I went in the strength of it seven months. I have received many tokens of the fellowship and friendship of brethren and sisters since. Some I have acknowledged by letter, some by the "World's Crisis." But one donation which I received from Southboro, from (as I supposed) a brother and sister, as they gave only their christian names, I could not acknowledge by letter. They will see by this that I received it, and will accept my heartfelt gratitude, and excuse my not acknowledging it before, and when they write again, write their names in full, then I can write to them.

I would inquire whether there are any tracts for gratuitous distribution, as I hope now that I shall soon be able to be out in the field again, doing the work of a colporteur. I want a good many tracts on some conditions. If any are disposed to help, they can send their money to the "Crisis" office, and they may depend on its being economically used in scattering Advent tracts among the destitute families. My mind remains firm in the truth of God's Word.

"I love the Lord, I love his laws,
I love Religion's blessed cause."

Yes, and I love his people and his appearing too. I look for it, wait for it, expect it, and with the poet I can say,

"Fly swifter round, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day!"

Brethren, pray for me that I may have strength of body and force of mind to consecrate myself, time, talents and property, to God and my follow-men. Yours, praising God with all my heart, that I yet live to praise him.

Sutton, N. H.

From Isaac Clowley.

BRO. GRANT:—I thank the Lord that I am alive and enjoying the trials of the last days. The few in this place are still holding on to the blessed hope of the Lord's soon coming. We have had a few mercy drops in this place, for which I thank the Lord. Our prayer is for the Lord to send faithful laborers this way, men after his own heart. The time has come for us to say, "Watchman, what of the night?" Pray for us, that our faith fail not.

Obituary Notices.

Fell asleep in Jesus, in Adams County, Ill., Feb. 21st, 1861, MARY C., daughter of W. M. and Hannah Riley, aged six years and seven days.

She was a bright and lovely child. Her parents sorrow not as those that have no hope, for they believe that Jesus will soon come to raise their little one to life and immortality.

"Then, together, father, mother,
With our darling child will be;
By the peaceful, flowing river
Of life's water, we'll be free.
No more sorrow, no more weeping,
No more parting hand of death;
Soon will come the heavenly greeting
In the restituted earth.
N. W. RILEY.

Died, on Stillwell Prairie, Laporte Co., Ind., March 2d, 1861, Sister HELEN MANAGHAN, aged twenty-three.

I am requested to notice the death of this, another of the waiting ones, who has fallen a victim to the shafts of death. It is now a little more than one year since I had the great pleasure of burying in holy baptism this dear sister and her husband, who had each then but recently taken the vows of Christ upon them. After a wearisome and painful illness of more than eight months, during which she steadfastly maintained her faith in her Redeemer, she quietly fell asleep with a calm and joyful faith in "Jesus and the resurrection." She died of consumption. Among her last words were, "I am ready." A discourse was delivered upon the occasion by her pastor, Eld. George Moyer, from Job 14: 14.

She leaves a husband, who, with parents and a large circle of friends, mourn her loss. Let us, in imitation of our sister, be able to say in whatever event may overtake us,—whether it be the demands of death, or the coming of our Lord,—"I am ready."

P. B. MORGAN.

Died, in Portsmouth, N. H., Jan. 9th, 1861, MARY JANE, wife of Samuel Hanscom, aged forty-four years.

Sister H. was the only daughter of our beloved Brother (father most of us call him) Chase. She was converted in 1834, and joined the Freewill Baptist Church. Some two years since she became interested in the speedy return of the Lord, life through Christ, and kindred doctrines. I became acquainted with Sr. H. last fall, yet not until the fatal and distressing disease (consumption) had evidently a firm and unyielding hold upon her system. Her desire was strong to live and take care of her family, and also to tell people about the blessed hope. This seemed, at times, to weigh with weight on her mind, and thought if she could only get well, she would be more willing to tell the world about the glorious appearing of the Lord. But grace was given so she could commit her husband and family into the care of God, and fall asleep calmly in the blessed assurance of soon being awakened by the trump of God to life everlasting.

She has left a kind husband and seven children and others to mourn. May they all lean on the strong arm, and greet in the kingdom of God. The writer attended the funeral.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

We have advices, per steamship Persia from Liverpool, to the 31st ult.

Warlike rumors continued to circulate in Paris, depressing the Bourse, which, however, closed firmer at 67 a 80c.

The concentration of Austrian troops at Venetia attracted considerable attention, although it was asserted that the movements were purely defensive.

Count Cavour reiterates the urgent necessity for declaring Rome the capital of Italy, and guaranteeing the Pope liberty and independence in his spiritual powers.

A resolution to this effect and hoping for non-intervention by France, was adopted.

It is reported that Garibaldi's former staff of officers have been ordered to proceed to Brescia on the 6th of April for conference.

The Danish government is making warlike preparations for all eventualities. M. Rasloff, Minister for Holstein in the Danish Cabinet, has resigned.

Austrian officers regard hostilities as probable. It is said that 50,000 Austrian troops are in movement in Venetia.

The Paris papers say that the Austrian movement on the Po was purely defensive.

Several French editors, on an excursion to Venice, were roughly expelled, notwithstanding their passports had been vised by the Austrian Ambassador at Paris.

A sanguinary conflict had occurred at Sippa between the German and Roomanee inhabitants, on the occasion of the elections. Three were killed, and fifteen seriously and many slightly wounded.

Hostilities continued in Herzegovina between the insurgents and the Turkish troops.

The Porte is said to have refused to submit to the demand of the great Powers before promulgation of the reforms it intends to grant, apprehending that Russia might again take up the project of a permanent Conference at Constantinople. The Powers insisted upon compliance with their demand.

The Sardinian Ambassador at Constantinople had protested against the embarkation of the sequestered war materiel at Galatz. The British Minister defended the act on international grounds.

Bosnia was menaced with anarchy. Austria has forbidden the export of arms into that province, and sent troops to the frontiers.

The Italians are fixed in their determination to have Rome for their capital, and Count Cavour leads them in their demand, not, it is probable, because he himself cares a stick of macaroni about the matter, but because he is a great statesman, and would march with great masses of men, and the public opinion of Italy is all for Rome as the seat of its government. So the Pope must pack up his goods, unless he is willing to live in the same city with a king who actually sees no evil in Protestantism.

THREE DAYS LATER.

New York, April 15. The steamship Fulton, from Southampton 3d, arrived this morning.

It is rumored that the German members of the Vienna cabinet have resigned.

It is asserted at Berne that Garibaldi has requested his officers residing in Switzerland to be ready to assemble at his summons within fourteen days.

Concessions granted by the Czar have not satisfied the people. Concentration of the military continues. Unarmed citizens, as constables, patrol Warsaw.

Garibaldi has had a conference with Victor Emmanuel at Genoa.

Riots had taken place in Russian Poland.

England will recognize Victor Emmanuel as King of Italy.

Trade in France is stagnant, being affected by the alarming political situation of Austria and Italy.

DOMESTIC.

War Begun!—The Ball has Opened! War is Inaugurated!

Charlestown, April 12th.—The batteries on Sullivan's Island, Morris Island and other points, opened on Fort Sumter at four o'clock this morning. Fort Sumter has returned the fire, and a brisk cannonading has been kept up. No information has been received from the seaboard as yet. The military are under arms, and the whole population is in the streets. Every available space facing the harbor is filled with anxious spectators.

SECOND DISPATCH.

Charlestown, April 12th.—The firing has continued all day uninterruptedly. Two of Fort Sumter's guns have been silenced, and it is reported that a breach has been made in the southeast wall.

The answer to Gen. Beauregard's demand by Major Anderson was that he would surrender when his supplies were exhausted, if he was not reinforced. Not a casualty has yet happened to any of the forces. Of nineteen batteries only seven had been opened on Fort Sumter; the remainder are held in reserve for the expected fleet. Two thousand men reached the city this morning and embarked for Morris Island and neighborhood.

THIRD DISPATCH.

Charleston, April 12th.—The bombardment of Fort Sumter continues. The floating battery and Stevens' battery are operating freely, and Fort Sumter is returning the fire. It is reported that three war vessels are outside the bar.

FOURTH DISPATCH.

Charleston, April 12th.—The firing has ceased for the night, to be resumed at daylight in the morning, unless an attempt is made to reinforce Fort Sumter, to repel which ample arrangements have been made.

Only two men were wounded during the day.

The Pawnee, Harriet Lane and another steamer are reported off the bar.

Troops are arriving by every train.

FIFTH DISPATCH.

Charleston, April 12th.—The bombardment is still going on every twenty minutes from mortars. It is supposed Major Anderson is resting his men for the night. Three war vessels are reported outside. They cannot get in as the sea is rough. Nobody hurt. The floating battery works well. Troops arrive hourly. Every place is guarded.

SIXTH DISPATCH.

Charleston, April 12th.—The firing on Fort Sumter continues. Reviving times on the Palmetto coast.

SEVENTH DISPATCH.

Charleston, April 13th, 12 30 A. M.—It is utterly impossible to reinforce Fort Sumter to-night, as a storm is raging. The mortar battery will be playing on Fort Sumter all night.

Washington, April 13th, 2 P. M.—The news from Charleston created intense excitement in this city, in fact, it was never equalled before in this place of sensations.

The Cabinet was in session most of the night.

Lieut. Talbot gave the Cabinet a distinct idea of the condition of the Fort when he left.

The report received last night in regard to the attack is not believed to be correct in all particulars.

Charleston, April 13th. It is stated from a reliable source, that up to 10 o'clock to-day no one at Fort Moultrie had been killed. Shots from Fort Sumter penetrated the Floating Battery below the water line.

A few shots fired by Major Anderson in the morning knocked the chimnies off the officers' quarters at Fort Moultrie like a whirlwind.

Major Anderson's only hope is to hold out for aid from the ships. Two ships were making in towards Morris' Island with a view to land troops and silence the batteries there.

THIRD DISPATCH.

Fort Sumter is undoubtedly on fire, as flames are raging all around it. Major Anderson has thrown out a raft loaded with men who are passing in water to extinguish the flames.

The Fort is scarcely discernable. The men on the raft are now objects of the fire from Morris Island, and with glasses, balls can be plainly seen skipping over the water and striking the unprotected raft.

Great havoc is creating among the poor fellows. It is surmised that Anderson is gradually blowing up the fort.

At half-past eleven, flames were bursting from all the port holes. The destruction of Fort Sumter is inevitable.

FOURTH DISPATCH.

Charleston, April 13th. Four vessels and two or three large steamers are in sight over the bar. The larger one appears to be engaging Morris Island.

The flames have nearly subsided in Fort Sumter, but Major Anderson does not fire any guns.

General Beauregard has just left the wharf in a boat for Morris Island. Excitement is increasing.

A letter from S. C. Bylston, dated Fort Moultrie, 6 o'clock this morning, says not a man has been killed or wounded.

The iron battery is damaged. The rifled cannon of the battery did great execution on Fort Sumter. They were all aimed into Anderson's port holes. Three of Fort Sumter's barbet guns were dismounted, and one was an eighteen inch columbiad. A corner of Fort Sumter opposite Fort Moultrie was knocked off.

The Waterwitch, Mohaw and Pawnee, it was thought, were the three first vessels seen in the offing.

Another correspondent says that the bombardment has closed. Major Anderson has lowered the stars and stripes, and displays a white flag, which has been answered from the city, and a boat is on the way to Fort Sumter.

New York, April 13th. A special dispatch from Washington to the Post, emanating from a high official at Charleston, states that Gen. Beauregard confidently expects to accomplish the reduction of Fort Sumter before night.

It is apprehended that, in the event of disasters to the Federal forces in Charleston harbor, the Rebels will immediately march upon Washington with a large number of troops. They will find a warm reception. The government is prepared at all points to receive them.

FORT SUMTER SURRENDERED.

Charleston, April 13th. Fort Sumter has surrendered, and the Confederate flag floats over its walls.

None of the garrison or Confederate troops have been hurt.

Washington, April 15th. The clerks in the public offices will be required to take the oath of allegiance to the government.

Instructions are being prepared for the stoppage of the mails in the rebellious States.

Marylanders here are confident that their quota of the troops called for by the President will be promptly furnished.

Willard B. Farwell has been appointed Naval Officer at San Francisco.

The Massachusetts quota of troops will be fifteen hundred and sixty men, all other New England States will be required to furnish seven hundred and eighty men each.

Providence, April 15. The President has accepted the offer of Gov. Sprague of the Marine Artillery, and the Secretary of War has ordered one regiment from this State for immediate service. The Artillery will probably go to Fort Adams to-morrow. Major Burnside will probably command the Rhode Island Regiment. The Governor will call an extra session of the Legislature immediately.

Charleston, April 13th. Hostilities have for the present ceased, and victory belongs to South Carolina. With the display of a flag of truce from the ramparts of Fort Sumter, at half-past 1 o'clock, the firing ceased and an unconditional surrender was made. The South Carolinians had no idea that the fight would end so soon.

Within Fort Sumter everything but the casement is in ruin. The whole thing looks like a blackened mass of ruins. Many guns are dismounted. The side opposite Cumming's Point is the hardest dealt with. The rifle cannon from this place played great havoc with Fort Sumter. The wall looked like honeycomb. Near the top is a breach as big as a cart. The side opposite Fort Moultrie is honeycombed extensively, as is that opposite the floating battery.

Fort Moultrie is badly damaged. The officers' quarters and barracks are torn to pieces. The frame houses on the Island are riddled with shot in many instances, and whole sides of houses are torn out.

The fire in Fort Sumter was put out, but recaught three times during the day. Dr. Crawford, Major Anderson's surgeon, is slightly wounded in the face. None of the South Carolinians were injured.

It is reported that ten men of Fort Sumter are killed, and that the Federal flag was shot away by the Palmetto Guards at Morris Island. In all, 2000 shots have been fired. No Carolinians hurt.

Major Anderson and his men under guard were conveyed to Morris Island.

The bells are ringing out a merry peal, and our people are engaged in every demonstration of joy. It is estimated that there are 9000 men under arms on the islands and in the neighborhood.

I have seen W. Porcher Miles, who has just returned from a visit to Sumter. He assured me that no one was killed at Fort Sumter. This is reliable, and puts at rest all previous reports about Sumter.

Boats were sent to-night to officially notify the fleet at the bar that Major Anderson had surrendered. It is not known when the South Carolinians will occupy Fort Sumter, or what will be done with the vanquished. Every one is satisfied with the victory, and happy that there has been no bloodshed. After the surrender, the bells of the city were rung and cannon fired.

Charleston, April 14th. Major Anderson and men leave to-night at 11 o'clock in the steamer Isabel for New York. The fleet is still outside.

It was a thrilling scene when Major Anderson and his men took leave of Fort Sumter.

Washington, April 14. The Cabinet was in session all day at the War Department. Offers of volunteers have been received from nearly every Northern State.

The President is acting with Jacksonian firmness. The coming proclamation is but the initial step to what will follow.

The streets are crowded and patrols are continually moving through the city.

THE MONEY KING.—A French writer thus speaks of Baron James Rothschild:

"Monsieur de Rothschild is an indefatigable worker. He rises early, looks after his own affairs himself. He receives visitors after he has prepared the day's work for his myrmidons. On certain points he is unbending, but he is a good man, though not easily moved. He has the perspicacity of a man who has made the largest fortune in Europe. His views on financial matters are always sound; he has genius for foreseeing events. His judgment of men is unerring, and consequently he knows with whom and how to deal. Nothing turns him aside from a purpose he has once formed; his views are always clear, and forcibly expressed. The hours devoted by him to work are occupied until the last minute. He then withdraws himself entirely from business, and resorts to the pleasures of life.

The house of Rothschild, consisting of the Baron James, Charles, Lionel, and other brothers and cousins, is undoubtedly the most royal and powerful of the reigning European families. They have absorbed most of the gold and silver of the world, and no nation can go to war in Europe without their sovereign permission. They lent the Emperor of Russia forty millions for the Crimean war; they lent the British government seventy-five millions; Turkey, Austria, Sardinia, Prussia and Egypt have all looked to their pockets for the sinews of war. The Emperor of Austria, at last accounts, was trying to obtain a fresh supply from this inexhaustible fountain, and even the great Napoleon is eager to propitiate the branch of the house in his empire. It is said that the great banker has been offered the sovereignty of Jerusalem, but having all the scepters of Europe in his coat pocket, he magnificently disdains the proposition."

☞ The Shanghae Herald of Jan. 12th, says that an edict for the toleration of christianity in China has been issued from Nankin, by a young prince, only twelve years old, son of Sutsieuen, "Celestial King" of China, under the rebel dynasty.

Proclamation by the President. 75,000 Volunteers Called.

CONGRESS CONVENED ON THE 4TH OF JULY.

Washington, April 14th. The following proclamation will be issued to-morrow, by the President of the United States:—

Whereas, the laws of the United States have been for some time past, and now are opposed, and the execution thereof obstructed in the States of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas, by a combination too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, or by the powers vested in Marshals by the law, now, therefore, I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, in virtue of the power vested in me by the Constitution and the laws, have thought fit to call forth, and hereby do call forth, the militia of the several States of the Union, to the aggregate number of 75,000, in order to suppress said combinations, and to cause the laws to be duly executed. The details of this object will be immediately communicated to the State authorities through the War Department.

I appeal to all loyal citizens to favor, facilitate and aid this effort to maintain the honor, the integrity and the existence of our national union, and the perpetuity of popular government, and to redress the wrongs already long enough endured. I deem it proper to say that the first service assigned to the forces hereby called forth will probably be to repossess the forts, places and property which have been seized from the Union, and in every event the utmost care will be observed, consistently with the objects aforesaid, to avoid any devastation, any destruction of or interference with property, or any disturbance of peaceful citizens in any part of the country. I hereby command the persons composing the combinations aforesaid to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes within twenty days from this date.

Deeming that the present condition of public affairs presents an extraordinary occasion, I do hereby, in virtue of the power in me vested by the Constitution, convene both Houses of Congress. Senators and Representatives are therefore summoned to assemble at their respective chambers at twelve o'clock noon, Thursday, the fourth day of July next, and there to consider and determine such measures as in their wisdom the public safety and interest may seem to demand.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this fifteenth day of April, in the year of our Lord 1861, and of the independence of the United States the eighty-fifth.

Western Grove Meetings.

I contemplate spending the most of my time during the warm season coming, in holding grove meetings, and other general meetings. Our last summer grove meetings have already been productive of much good. Those who have already requested such meetings, will please let me know what time would be preferable to them; and others who wish them will please make their wants known soon, that I may arrange accordingly. The expense of such meetings will be no more than for ordinary meetings, with the same number of preachers, (unless the distance is too great) excepting the trifling cost of preparing and seating the ground; while the attendance is much greater. Probably one preacher will travel with me. Write me at Springville, Badax Co., Wis. W. SHELDON.

For the Crisis.

Musings.

Lo! a glorious King appears,
At the lapse of latest years,—
Jesus Christ, of heavenly birth,
Comes to reign o'er all the earth.
Every eye must see his face,
Looks of life or death to trace.

At his voice the dead awake,
Earth and heaven with terror shake,
Raging seas give up their trust,
Jesus speaks to life its dust.
Sculptured in the deepest tomb,—
Nations rush to read their doom.

Hark! the wailings of despair,
Rising from the sinner there;
Those who now refuse to pray,
Cry to rocks that roll away;
Earnestly to mountains cry,
"Shelter us!" but mountains fly.

Kings, by earthly nations known,
With regret give up their throne;
Every tribe rich honors bring,
Yield them to the eternal King.
All the will of God is done,
Kingdoms now obey his Son.

Back to dust the wicked go,
Tares with wheat no longer grow;
Nought is left to spoil the earth,
Every thing must be of worth;
All unholy things with breath
Then must die the second death.

Nor in heaven, or earth, or sea,
No unholiness shall be;
All the universe is pure,
Ever shall it thus endure.
Sinner! break from Satan's chains,
Come and live where Jesus reigns.

THE COMING STRUGGLE
Between the Church and the Powers of Darkness:
SHOWING THE MISSION AND DESTINY OF SPIRITUALISM.

No. 10.

How will their philosophy concerning the infallible law of Nature get along with this sudden change in the sun? What will they think whenever their own God, Nature, revolts at their iniquity? Yet, with all these practical arguments against Atheism, curtailing and destroying those blessings which they have been accrediting to their infallible law of Nature as God, they repent not of their deeds, but blaspheme the name of God which hath power over these plagues. How they can withstand such displays of God's power and not lose confidence in their spirit teachers, I cannot see; but their blind attachment to the law of progression will perhaps give a satisfactory solution to all these difficulties. They say that they are but regarding the law of progression,—"casting off the gross of their natures"—in cursing their Maker, committing crimes, etc. But they desire an escape from christianity with less anxiety now than they will then; hence they will be able to silence all difficulties or scruples that might arise. And if the spirits give them a plausible solution of these things, placing the prize of perfect bliss beyond the time when Christ shall come, they will probably be blinded in the matter. God now aims directly at them, pouring out the fifth vial on the seat of the beast, "and they gnawed their tongues for pain," etc., but they repent not to give him glory.

This state of things is probably alluded to by Paul in 2 Tim. 3 : 9, where in speaking of those men of corrupt minds who resist the truth among the perils of the last days, as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, he says,—"But they shall proceed no further, for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as theirs also was." This will appear strikingly true by a comparison of the leading features in the two cases. Those magicians succeeded for a time. So do these. The magicians and their adherents, the Egyptians, soon had the judgments of God poured out upon them. So do these. The magicians and their friends had "all the water that was in the river turned to blood, and the fish that was in the river died."—Ex. 7 : 20, 21. So do these. The magicians and their friends suffered from a "sore boil," as one of God's judgments.—Ex: 9 : 8,—11. So do these. The magicians and their friends suffer finally from "thunder, hail and fire."—Ex. 9 : 23, 24. So do these, in the battle of the great day, where they gather to meet Christ. The magicians and their friends suffered all these things as a mark of God's displeasure, while his own children were exempt, though dwelling among them. So it shall be in this case. The magicians and their friends in their rage and desperation finally attempted by force of arms to overthrow the children and cause of God, but got destroyed themselves. So shall it be in this case, as I will now show.

Enraged to desperation by these plagues: hardened in their abuse and blasphemy of Him who sends them against all disposition to repent and humble themselves before Him; and cheered on by their invisible guides, whose artfulness has enabled them to retain their confidence through all these adverse circumstances, they now prepare on a grand scale for a struggle which they hope will put an end to these plagues and subdue the power which sends them. Though it may perhaps seem difficult to discover in their case sufficient grounds for such a hope, in view of the wonderful power necessary to produce such plagues; yet, when I consider that the magicians of Egypt could repeat the plagues of Moses, even to causing the waters of Egypt to be turned into blood, and covering the land with frogs, I am prepared to expect miracles on this occasion from the powers opposed to God, as much more wonderful, perhaps, as this occasion exceeds that in importance. Hence, with all this wonderful power on their side and everywhere manifest among them; well knowing that their movement is supported and directed by spirits from the invisible world, whom they still suppose to be their friends who have died; and having no Bible to consult, if they would, as it is a part of their arrangement to destroy them; they are willing to match their resources with that of any other power, and probably look upon all opposing power with feelings analagous to our estimation of the devil and his power against us. But when I view the stubborness of the Egyptians under less encouraging circumstances, I find no difficulty here.

PREPARATIONS FOR THE BATTLE.

The Three Unclean Spirits.—"The sixth angel poured out his vial on the great river Euphrates, and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared. And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs, come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet; for they are spirits of devils working miracles, which go forth to the kings of the earth and the whole world, to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty. Behold, I (Christ) come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame. And he (or they) gathered them into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon."—Rev. 16 : 12—16.

What we are to understand by "the kings of the east" here alluded to, I do not know. The Euphrates is evidently dried up of God to prepare the way for them to travel with their armies to the battle of the great day, if it refers to those who gather at that battle. Some think it foreshows the return of the Jews as the kings of the east, but as I cannot satisfy myself at present, I will not conjecture further.

After this preparation for the kings of the east, three unclean spirits are sent forth by the dragon, the beast and the false prophet, to the kings of the earth and the whole world, to assemble them to the battle of the great day. These spirits are said to be "unclean"—"spirits of devils," and that they go forth "working miracles" on their mission to the kings of the earth; hence, they must be the same as the seducing spirits, teaching doctrines of devils in Tim., and in the service of this miracle-working religion—Spiritualism—so frequently alluded to in the prophecies concerning the closing scenes of this age.

But they are said to come out of the mouths of the dragon, beast and prophet; hence, at this time these three powers must be Spiritualists. I think Adventists generally regard the work of these three unclean spirits as having its fulfillment in Spiritualism; and yet, they seem to overlook the idea that the dragon, the beast and the false prophet, who send them forth on this Spiritualist mission, must be Spiritualists at this time and co-operating together in its defence and support. Besides, we find that the false prophet is engaged as miracle-worker, or divinor to the beast, and persuades the world to receive the mark of the beast and his image, through its miraculous power,—Rev. 19 : 20; all of which is done before the first of these seven vials is poured out; hence, this work of sending forth these three unclean spirits under the sixth vial and by the same miracle-working power, which has existed during all the preceding vials, cannot foreshow the "birth" but a specific, and the last, work in Spiritualism. Again, there is no one who will pretend to trace the "birth" of modern Spiritualism to the dragon, the beast, and the false prophet, rather than the "mysterious Rochester raps" of 1847–8.

Hence, we cannot regard this language as pointing in any sense to the birth, or commencement of this Spiritual movement; but rather as a special and needed encouragement from the Deceiver, in that three messengers from the invisible world appear among them when they have become hardened and enraged to desperation by the plagues which they have received, and cheering them onward, engage in a special mission to the kings of the earth, urging them to prepare and assemble all the force at their command in this battle which they are taught to expect will put an end to these plagues. As this will be regarded by the Spiritualists as a New Dispensation, they will refer to former Dispensations pointing probably to the struggle of the Israelites with the Canaanites after the former had entered the land, and the destruction of the Jews in the early days of the gospel dispensation. Some have attempted to tell in what respect they resemble "frogs," but as their work is in the future, such explanations must be mere conjecture. When they have gone forth on their work of assembling the nations, Christ appears in the clouds of heaven and assembles his children unto him, and then descends to Mt. Zion where the battle takes place.

The spirits must have apprised their adherents of Christ's appearance at this time, and his subsequent descent to Mt. Zion, as the object of their attack; hence their extensive preparations for this battle. This is not only manifest from their extensive preparations, but if the spirits should fail to forewarn them of it the world would lose confidence in them and shrink from an engagement with him, and all their plans for the fatal struggle would fail when Christ appears in the clouds of heaven. "All tribes of the earth do mourn because of him when they see him coming in the clouds of heaven," but as they risk a battle with him after this, it is probable that the spirits in whose knowledge concerning the powers of the invisible world they would likely confide, have very much underrated his power and resources, and, as I have said before, present him in a light somewhat analagous to our view of Satan.

Eld. W. Pratt's Reply

To a lecture of Mr. Leo Miller, on "Comparative view of Ancient and Modern Spiritualism," in the Temple at Portsmouth, N. H., Sunday evening, March 3d, 1861. Reported by Mr. James Mitchell.

No. 5.

(Concluded.)

Prof. Grimes says, when accounting for the spirit manifestation by mesmerism, "If Spiritualists deny this, I will undertake to produce at short notice every phase of this species of honest mediumship which they can exhibit. I will produce trance speakers whom they cannot surpass in eloquence nor in originality. The audience may select the subject and may ask questions, and debate with the medium and spirit just as they do with theirs. I will make writing mediums of honest people, strangers to me, who never before knew that they possessed the faculty of writing unconsciously. They will write communications from friends—generally from relatives in the spirit-land, often of a touching, pious and affectionate character, sometimes giving advice concerning health, sometimes concerning moral conduct or business matter, or they will give information concerning the manners and habits of beings in the spirit-land. In a word, they will write as intelligently and as spiritually as any of the pretended spirit-mediums can." "I can also make mediums that will see visions of the spirit-world, converse with its inhabitants, shake hands with them, and describe, in glowing terms, the heavenly scenery on the other side of Jordan." Again he says, "I have an individual present who can do all that Mrs. Coan (spirit-medium) can do; and if you will bring her out, I will bring the man and you can see which will do best, at any time you please." (Discussion between Prof. Grimes and Leo Miller.)

Mr. Miller in reply said, "There is nothing but can be seemingly counterfeited. . . can imitate, no doubt, many of the manifestations, and so can I, but it is another thing to have the genuine." Mr. Miller and myself are of the same opinion in this matter. He, with the Spiritualist,—like Jannes and Jambres in the text, who tried hard to do the same miracles that were wrought by the hand of Moses, and imitated them far enough, perhaps, to deceive that wicked Pharaoh, yet their folly (jugglery) was made manifest. So the modern Jannes and Jambres (spiritual) try to imitate all the miracles wrought by Christ and apostles—the public can judge whether they succeed as well as the ancient sorcerers in their pretensions. But their folly will soon be made manifest.

I will give one more extract from the same source. "Two-thirds of the capacity of the Melodeon was filled last evening, to test the relative merits of so-called spiritual manifestations, as exhibited by Mrs. Ada L. Coan, and M. V. Bly. . . . At the outset, the lady went through with her manifestations in presence of a committee of three unprejudiced gentlemen, selected by the audience. After she had concluded, Mr. Bly operated, and performed the same phenomena, in a manner equal, if not superior, to the lady; at least, such was the verdict of the committee and audience. Bly explained how he performed the tricks, as he called them, and the affair wound up with remarks from the platform by Mrs. Coan and Mr. Bly. Mrs. Coan bore testimony to the fairness, candor, and honesty of Mr. Bly and for the information of her hearers said, that since Bly's arrival in Boston he had been the means of driving all of the advertised mediums from the city. Nine-tenths of the so-called spirit-manifestations, she was satisfied, were impositions, practised by mediums themselves, and she proceeded to cite individual cases, where she had discovered impostors, many of whom were among the most prominent in the world of Spiritualism." Extract from Boston Herald.

"Mr. Grimes says, after reading the above, "I offered that same woman, when performing in one of the towns near the Cape, five hundred dollars, if she would do one of the things they said she had done every night. They all said she had done it a thousand times; but I asked that it should be done. And while I am in the city, and alive, you may wake me up at ten o'clock at night, and if she can answer a single mental question, provided I can only fix it so that she cannot cheat, I will give you all I have, and my note for some more."

Hence, I say before you can believe any of these modern pretensions you have got to separate them from jugglery, mesmerism, deception, which will cover nine-tenths, according to the above statements, and that from their own testimony; and the remainder—one-tenth—belongs, no doubt, to the satanic majesty. In conclusion, I will endeavor to show their true relations—their ancestors. They claim the prophets and apostles as their ancestors, but we have shown you they hold no relation to them either in doctrine, spirit, or practice. However, their true relation is clearly revealed by the inspired penman, and I will give you a brief sketch in conclusion.

The serpent in the garden of Eden was the first medium we have any account of. Satan spake through him the first falsehood ever uttered on this earth, and that falsehood, "Ye shall not surely die," is the great and most glorious doctrine of all Spiritualism, and is the Alpha and Omega of their creed, according to their own testimony, the foundation of their whole system—corner-stone of their church. Here is its origin, their first preacher, first medium, first and last doctrine.

2. Eliphas seems to be the next in order. He was a trance medium. He had a vision, and a spirit passed before him, but could not discern the form thereof—an image was before his mind. He was a harmonial philosopher, and reasons precisely the same as the one we are now answering—assuming a position that makes the angels and apostles deceivers and hypocrites, then claims a harmony with them. So with Eliphas' theology, for he says, "Behold he (God) put no trust in his servants; and his angels he charged with folly." Thus he tried to prove angels foolish (so he might account for communications that were not true), and God's servants unworthy and distrustful, so he could claim a relation to them. Again he says, "Call now, if there be any that will answer thee, and to which of the saints wilt thou turn?" Trying to get a communication from the dead.

3. The next in order are Jannes and Jambres, in Egypt, withstanding Moses by their sorcery, as the Spiritualists withstand truth in this age.

4. The old Witch of Endor is another, and brought forward by themselves to justify their position. And the sorcerers spoken of in the New Testament that withstood the apostles, belong to the same class.

5. The Demons in the Old Testament (Lev. 17 : 7; Ps. 106 : 37; Deut. 32 : 17; 2 Chron. 11 : 15; 1 Cor. 10 : 20, 21) no doubt refer to the same class—ancient paganism revived.

6. Thus the apostle says, "Now the spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of demons, speaking lies in hypocrisy, etc." Have we arrived at that time? What think ye?

7. They are brought to view in Revelation as helping on the work for the last great and final battle. "They are the spirits of demons working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty."—Rev. 16. They are now abroad in the land doing their work, hence we might conclude the battle is imminent.

8. Paul says these men are to come in the last days, and after giving their prominent characteristics tells us "they creep into houses and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses," by trying to counterfeit the miracles that Moses wrought, "so do these" (Spiritualists) "also resist truth" by claiming to do the miracles of the Bible, "men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. But they shall proceed no farther; for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as theirs also was."—2 Tim. 3 : 9, 10.

For the Crisis.

A Word to a Sad One.

Do not be discouraged. You are poor. Christ knew it before he called you. You are wretched. That made him love you. You are sinful. That was why he shed his blood for you. O! cast your burdens all on Him. You cannot surprise him with any story of your sins, faults or follies. He knows them all. Very likely you are no worse now than when you thought yourself quite good. God brings your disease to the surface that you may see it, and that he may cure it. Trust in him. Cast your soul, all helpless, on the Lord. He can deliver in six troubles, yea, in seven he will not forsake thee.

Prov., R. I. H. L. H.

Selections.

The Present, Times of Test for Christians.

Times like the present perform one office, not recognized always, but of very great significance and importance. They reveal the differences, if there are such differences, between the men who have confessed Christ as their Lord and Leader, and the men who are simply selfish and secular in their plans and their hopes. The christian talks of his faith in God's goodness, providence, government, of his conviction that whatever is permitted by providence to result from or follow a course of right doing will be for the ultimate welfare of the church, and for the advancement of the glory of God, and the highest good of his faithful children. It is easy enough to profess this faith, or any other that is reputable and decent, the profession of which involves no hazards. And in ordinary times they who really hold it can hardly well be distinguished from others. All equally must be satisfied with continuous prosperity. All equally may bear, without difficulty or pain, the slight and occasional interruptions which occur to this course of prosperity. And the world may feel, very naturally so far, that there is no deep and radical difference between the christian and the man of the world; that the one goes through life on the same main level of experience with the other; that philosophy is as good and as effective as faith, in sustaining, cheering, and animating to effort; that there is no glorious secret of power in the christian's possession.

But when there come such times as the present, when no human eye can pierce the clouds that lie around and are folded above us, when the wisest hesitate, and the most prompt pause, and the boldest heart is awed and overshadowed before the immense possibilities of disaster that seem to lurk in every path of public policy thus far suggested,—then is the time for making the difference seen and felt between the christian, who really believes in God and his providence, and the man who has no such refuge and shelter and support for his soul. No sermon can be so eloquent and resistless in its appeal to men on behalf of the truth, as will be the calm and cheerful fortitude, the serene expectation of a victory for the right, the manly and quiet adherence to principle, then manifested spontaneously and habitually by christians. It will be felt that their life is bid in God; their steadfast courage caught from him. No sermon, or hundred-fold series of sermons, however logical, eloquent, impassioned, can possibly on the other hand overbear or counteract the impression made against the truth, by the timid desponding tone of christians, in such an hour; by their readiness to give up their own cherished principles, for the sake of gaining a speedier relief; by that practical distrust of either the goodness or the wisdom of God, or else of his power, which is shown in their fretful impatience to be assured of what is to come, and their irritable complaining at their own present trials.

When the simoom, if that was the instrument employed, burst in its terrific violence on the land of Egypt west of the Nile, and caused a darkness there to prevail so dense and so constant that 'they saw not one another, and no man arose from his place for three days'—a darkness which ever since has stood on the pages of history, the very symbol of glooms most oppressive and most overwhelming—it is recorded of those who dwelt by God's will in the land of Goshen, 'but all the children of Israel had light in their dwellings!' Beautiful, significant, far-shining fact! prophetic of facts that have followed ever since, and that shall not cease to follow on the earth till its history is ended! perpetual image of the difference there should be between the habitation and the counting-room of the christian, in days like the present, and those of his neighbor who has no faith in God and his providence! The man who gives thousands for the preaching of the gospel does no such noble and precious work for the Master and the Father as does the man whose spirit of trust and cordial courage shines through the mists of all perplexity, surpasses the barriers of all discouragement, and makes it light within! The very noblest preacher he is, whom the round world bears on its bosom! —Ex.

Believe not each accusing tongue,
As some weak people do,
But ever hope that story wrong,
Which ought not to be true.

The Glory of God in Christ.

The true glory, then, of God, must be interpreted in Christ Jesus; and when you understand what it is that God makes to be his glory; when you understand that the glory of God is not self-laudation, nor enriching his own power, nor multiplying his own treasures, but that it is supremely to make others happy; when you understand that the glory of God means loving other people and not himself, mercy and not selfishness, the distribution of his bounty and not the hoarding it up; when you understand that God sits with all the infinite stores of redemptive love only to shed them abroad upon men for ever and for ever, then you form a different conception of what it is for God to reign for his own glory. If love is his glory; if generosity is his glory; if giving is his glory; if thinking of the poor is his glory; if strengthening the weak is his glory; if standing as the defender of the wronged is his glory; if loving and watching over every being that he has created for ever and for ever, if his glory, then, blessed be that teaching which represents that God does reign for his own glory. That is a glory which is worthy of the Divine regality. It will bring out blossoms of joy and gladness in heaven and on earth.

* * * *

The great incarnation mystery, the peculiar mission of Christ, then, is this: that he brought God down to us; that he revealed God to us in his example, while walking the streets of Jerusalem; while going about the highways of Palestine; while sitting on the mountain side; while in the vessel; while raising the widow's son to life; while distributing all things, reserving nothing for himself, so that he had not where to lay his head; while using his whole being for others, and not for himself. The example of Christ was, as it were, a section of God's eternal life let down into this world that men might see One whose nature it is to administer for ever and for ever on the principle of making his own being subservient to the welfare of those over whom he presides. And when he was caught up again into heaven, the same blessed work went on, only in a higher sphere.—Beecher.

How to read the Bible.—An old man once said, "For a long period I puzzled myself about the difficulties of Scripture, until at last I came to the resolution that reading the Bible was like eating fish. When I find a difficulty, I lay it aside and call it a bone. Why should I choke on the bone, when there is so much nutritious meat?"

Truth.—Truth is always consistent with itself, and needs nothing to help it out; whereas a lie is troublesome, and sets a man's invention on the rack, and one trick needs a great many more to make it good. Truth can live in all regions and flourish in all soils.

A Lady's First Experience in the Reform Dress.

The following account of one's first experience in wearing the "American Costume," or "Short Dress and Pants," as often called, is an extract from a letter written by a New Hampshire lady, of high respectability, and of more than ordinary intelligence, and a christian withal, to her brother in Western New York. It breathes the spirit of reform, and a sense of right; and indicates a courage in daring to do right in the face of a community of perverted and unnatural tastes, which very few ladies possess. Read her testimony. It can be relied upon. Where is there another lady who has the moral courage to do likewise? Say. You can "come out from the world" and profess christianity because it is a popular thing to be a church member; but where is the lady, a christian if you please, who will do as this one has—don the only proper and healthful dress that can now be worn, and stand out alone before the world, with God and the right on her side, and bid defiance to the serpent's guile. S. D. Berry.

Dansville, Livingston Co., N. Y.

"As a christian, I believe it to be my duty to do all I can for the recovery of my health, while I have my reason. God does not design that his children should be always sick and suffering under disease; and if we do not use all the proper means which are put in our power to be used for the restoration of our health, how can we go to Him from whom all blessings come, and ask him to bless those means used? I desire to know what is right first, and when satisfied of that, then to 'go ahead;' although it may often be exceedingly trying, (as it was when I first put on the reform dress); yet as long as I know I am in the path of duty, and have a consciousness of the right, I feel cheerful and happy.

But I presume you would like to know how I am getting along in my new costume. Well, I had not worn it two days before I was convinced of its superiority over my common long skirt dress. Before I put it on I could not walk so far as mother without feeling greatly exhausted; but since I put it on, I feel so free and light, and can walk so much easier, that, were it not for my rheumatism, I should feel like a child again. I don't think any one can hire me to take it off and put on the long skirts again. No one knows how sad and low spirited I have been for some months past; for it seemed as though I was a burden to myself, my friends, and all around me. I have often told my husband that if women would only dress so that they would not be obliged to drag their lives out by carrying around with them so many long skirts, I should be well. If women could only be persuaded to try it—if only out of curiosity—I feel assured they would never wish to lay it aside.

When I first donned it, I thought I would wear it only about home; but when Sunday came, and I was about to dress for meeting, I felt I could not possibly be burdened with my long skirts again. I told my husband I had rather stay at home—as much as I desired to go—than to wear those cumbersome long skirts. He told me to 'wear the short dress and pants to meeting.' But another thought—and here came a struggle. How could I be the first one to appear in the city, in public and alone, dressed in the 'American Costume?' Had one of my sisters in Christ been willing to have adopted the costume with me, I should have felt comparatively free. However, I made up my mind that if no one would wear it with me, I must wear it alone! Go to meeting I would; and as I did not feel strength to drag the long skirts with me, the short ones must take their place. I went! But as we came near the meeting-house, my heart began to faint. But feeling the sweet assurance that I was doing right, I looked to Him who has promised grace for every trial, and strength was given me. I was surprised at the sudden courage and self-possession that I felt. I assure you, my dear brother, it was the greatest trial I ever had. But I went through it thus far; and feeling so happy and free in my reform costume, with the consciousness of being right, that when the opportunity was given, I arose and 'spoke in meeting'—a thing I have not done before, on the Sabbath, this winter. Whatever may have kept me from arising to speak before, I felt at this time so free and light, that I was on my feet before I hardly knew it, and speaking in exhortation.

After meeting, the first one who spoke to me was Sister P. Said she, 'How glad I am, Lizzie, that you have got on the short dress! Don't you take it off again, and don't take any notice of what people say against it, or about you, for wearing it, but keep it on.' This, coming from the minister's wife, quite encouraged me. Eld. P—— wants her to wear it. Many others spoke approvingly of my new costume, and Bro. H—— said to me, 'I very much approve of and admire your dress, and I wish all of our sisters would adopt this costume. I advise you never to wear anything else, and I hope others will follow your worthy example.' I did not hear of any thing as being said against it. When Eld. P—— was speaking to me about it, I told him that 'I should wear it if not another one in the city would, even if I was turned out of church for it.' He told me 'not to fear;' he 'would take care of that.'

So you see, dear brother, that if I should be opposed or ridiculed for daring to do right in this thing, I have friends who will stand by me to defend me. I hope it will not be long before others will wear the same dress with me. In the evening Eld. P—— was to speak in the Temple, to reply to a Spiritualist's lecture given here recently by Leo Miller, and if I went to meeting at all, I must go there. So to the Temple I went, on foot, short dress and all! It was filled with people, and when the lecture commenced, was crowded to almost a jam. I attracted some attention, as of course I expected to. I would say that, when walking the streets, although some 'Young Americans' stared and smiled, and others 'observed,' yet I did not hear a single word or laugh, nor know of any dissatisfaction shown or thought of me or my dress, by or from any one. But suppose there should be some one with less [illegible] than [illegible], who should think or speak unfavorably of my appearance, what of it? Is it not right to do right?

So as long as I gain strength as I have, and feel as I do in it, I shall not be laughed out of it by any one. I know my own feelings best; and as no one is willing to SUFFER for me when I am sick, I SHALL WEAR THE 'AMERICAN COSTUME,' and suffer no more the pains and aches induced by wearing cumbersome skirts.

Your Sister, Lizzie.

Throat Ail.

Bro. Grant:—I noticed in the "Crisis" of March 20th, under the above caption, a true statement of symptoms, by Dr. Hall; and as I know that very many of our preachers and others are thus afflicted, I thought it proper to say that, after suffering by it for eight years most severely, every other remedy found useless, I was cured by the "Great German Remedy," which I prepare; and since then it has cured hundreds of others, some of them, after trying the best medical skill in Maine and in Boston. I have never known it to fail in any instance, where a proper trial was had, unless bronchitis had reached its last stage—that of consumption. Such a remedy can be had, and ought to be known to the public. So I mention it. Yours truly, L. C. Wellcome.

The Brain.—"One of the most inconceivable things in the nature of the brain is, that the organ of sensation should itself be insensible. To cut the brain gives no pain, yet in the brain alone resides the power of feeling pain in any other part of the body. If the nerve which leads from it to the injured part be divided, it becomes unconscious of suffering. It is only by communication with the brain that any kind of sensation is produced, yet the organ is insensible. But there is a circumstance more wonderful still than this. The brain itself may be removed, may be cut away from the corpus calarum, without destroying life. The animal lives and performs all its functions which are necessary to simple vitality, but no longer has a mind; it cannot think or feel; it requires that the food should be pushed into its stomach; once there, it is digested, and the animal will even thrive and grow fat. We infer, therefore, that the part of the brain, the convolutions, is simply intended for the exercise of the intellectual faculties, whether of the low degree called instinct, or the exalted kind bestowed on man, the gift of reason."—Wogan on the Mind.

Change of Clothing—A Caution.

Don't be in haste to put off woolen garments in Spring. Many a "bad cold," (whoever saw a good one,) rheumatism, lumbago, and other aches and pains, are lurking in the first sunshiny days, ready to pounce upon the incautious victims who have laid aside their defensive armor of flannel. All sudden changes in the system are attended with more or less of danger, but the body can accommodate itself to almost any condition, provided it be assumed gradually. The use of flannel guards against sudden change of temperature. In a warm day, when perspiration flows freely, if it be allowed to pass off rapidly, the quick evaporation carries with it much heat from the body, and a chill may be produced, followed by derangement of some function; as 'cold in the head,' or unnatural discharge from the bowels. Flannel contains much air in its meshes, and is therefore a slow conductor of cold or heat. Evaporation proceeds from it more slowly than from cotton or linen, hence its excellence as a fabric for clothing. Many persons wear it next to the skin the year round, and find it a shield against prevalent complaints in summer. No general rule can be given as to this; it must depend upon the constitution, and employment of the individual. In all cases, however, flannel should not be laid aside until the weather is settled permanently warm—in this latitude usually after the first of June. The change should be made in the morning, never in the after part of the day, when the energies are partly abated, and the air is usually growing cooler. Many a consumption has been contracted by undressing for an evening party.—Ex.

Time.

TUNE.—The Midnight Cry.

Time's fleeting sands are almost past,
Its hours are gliding swiftly by;
The glorious morn will come at last,
The Savior draweth nigh.
CHORUS.
Then let us watch, and fight and pray,
Our blessed Lord has led the way;
He died that we might gain that rest
That's promised to the blest.

Our years are passing like a dream,
Or like a tale that soon is told;
Our life is but a passing stream,
Soon Jesus we'll behold.

Time's lingering moments soon are o'er,
We've but a little time to stay;
We soon shall reach that blessed shore
Where there is endless day.

The signs around us, far and near,
Bespeak his coming soon to reign—
We may before another year
See Jesus come to men. REV. 21: 5.

O, may we all in glory meet,
No pain nor sorrow e'er to feel;
There we our friends and saints will greet,
Christ will himself reveal. T. L. W.

A Condensed Report

Of a Discussion held in South Ashburnham, March 19th–22d, 1861, between Rev. Jacob Baker and Eld. Miles Grant.

REPORTED BY J. D. MERRIAM.

Discussion continued.—March 21st.

SECOND QUESTION.—Does the Bible teach that any of the human family shall finally cease to exist? Mr. Grant affirms—Mr. Baker denies.

FIRST SPEECH OF ELDER GRANT.

After preliminary remarks, he approaches the question with the statement that the Bible is not yea and nay on this point; but it is all yea or all nay. It teaches the salvation of all men, or it does not. Hence the importance of the subject. The same passages of Scripture which have been brought on the negative of the other question, are now used on the affirmative of this. A few passages were introduced which had been before, and the points in them not met. Matt. 26: 24; Acts 24: 15; John 8: 44; 1 Thess. 4: 16, which teach that some of the human family have never forgiveness, die in their sins, and come up in the resurrection unjust. It remains for the negative to show that they have a state of probation after the resurrection and judgment. Passages were brought to show that some would not inherit the kingdom of God. Matt. 5: 20; Gal. 5: 19. It was then shown that all the promises in the Bible relate to the righteous; not one to the wicked, unless he turn from his wickedness. Dan. 7: 18, is quoted to show that the kingdom to be given to the saints is the kingdom under the whole heavens. Prov. 2: 21, 22, also relating to the same and to the condition of the wicked. Also Ps. 37: 22.

MR. BAKER'S FIRST SPEECH.

In the introduction of his speech he conveyed the idea that the arguments he had drawn from Isa. 45, where it is said, "Every knee shall bow," etc., also in relation to the potter, and the silver cup and the crucible, were sufficient to prove the truth of his position that all would finally be saved. He desires to come to the terms used in the Bible to represent the destruction of the wicked. He referred to Job, as cursing the day of his birth, in reply to the text, "good for that man if he had never been born." He says further that Judas repented, and Adam Clarke thinks there is no proof of the damnation of Judas. Ezk. 37 referred to, showing that the resurrection spoken of was a resurrection from sin and idolatry, and from bondage to the Babylonians. The word translated resurrection is anastasis, meaning an uprising, uplifting, lifting up into a higher and higher condition. In relation to the resurrection of the just and unjust, they are to be raised immortal. Then how can they be annihilated? he asks. Was it congenial with the nature of Paul to think that some would be raised from the dead, then receive the curses of Jehovah for the sins of a few short years, and finally be stricken out of existence? There is joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth. How much more when they all repent? I shall prove that the doctrine of annihilation is a heresy. I see my Bro. has the old Jewish notion that but few will be saved.

SECOND SPEECH OF ELDER GRANT.

The brazen serpent erected by Moses in the wilderness, is introduced to show that salvation was conditional. In Isa. 45: 24, there are some that are incensed against him, who are made ashamed. That has its fulfillment at the judgment seat of Christ, according to Rom. 14: 10. Bible terms alone to be relied on in this discussion. The repentance of Judas, he thought, resembled that of murderers, who are sorry because they have been found out. It was not godly sorrow, that worketh repentance not to be repented of.—"Resurrection spiritual?" What does it mean when it refers to the resurrection of the dead?—"Few saved." The Bible says, "Broad is the road that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat;" while "strait is the gate and narrow the way which leadeth to life, and few there be that find it." Suppose it had been asked of Mr. Baker, are there few that be saved? Would he not answer, Why, they will all be saved. This statement is made: All who die in their sins, who come up unjust, and rise to shame and everlasting contempt, will be destroyed. Question.—"What shall the end be of those that obey not the gospel?" One answer is given in 2 Thess. 1: 7,—"Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction." Destruction, defined to mean the annihilation of the form of the parts which constitute a thing what it is. Illustrates it by the destruction of a book.

SECOND SPEECH OF MR. BAKER.

He defines the term "aphthartos" to mean immortal, and is origin, incorruption. He says, If the Bible does teach through its entire pages that we shall be made incorruptible, it teaches, also, that we shall be made immortal. These terms are applied to the condition of the people in that upper world. Texts of Scripture were introduced where the word was rendered incorruptible. Rom. 1: 23,—"The incorruptible God." 1 Cor. 9: 25,—"Incorruptible crown." 15: 52,—"The dead shall be raised incorruptible." 1 Tim. 1: 17,—"Immortal." 1 Pet. 1: 4, 23,—"Inheritance incorruptible." "Incorruptible seed,"—1 Peter 3: 4. He quotes from the Discussion between Dr. Litch and Eld. Grant, in reference to the terms forever and everlasting being used in the Bible some two hundred times, in a limited sense. The term apollumi is sometimes rendered perish, sometimes destruction.—The same words are found in other places, which do not convey the same idea. Matt. 9: 19,—"Bottles perish." The term perish here is the same as applied to the wicked, and rendered destroyed. Matt. 10: 6,—"Go ye rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." Go ye to the annihilated sheep! If annihilated, where could be find them?

ELD. GRANT'S THIRD SPEECH.—A. M.

My friend has argued that all are immortal. We think the Bible teaches that nobody is immortal. We invite him to bring a single text to show that a part of man lives on in a conscious state after he is dead. We shall show that there is only one way to get immortality, and it is conditional. Proof, John 20: 31,—"That believing, ye might have life through his name." Here is the condition. My friend says they will all have it, whether they believe or not. Of the unbelieving it is said in Rev. 21: 8,—"They are cast into the lake of fire." John 6: 40,—"Every one which seeth the Son and believeth on him, may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." What does the rising up mean? Not from a moral death, for they are believers. Rom. 6: 23,—"But the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Acts 4: 12. Salvation only through the name of Christ. Suppose we do not believe in him? 1 John 2: 25. Eternal life promised. My friend agrees with me that we have no immortal principle in us now. How are we going to get it? Rom. 2: 6, 7,—"To them who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life." Suppose we do not continue in well doing, but take the opposite road, and continue in ill doing, robbing and murdering, and die in our sins; shall we have eternal life? Rev. 2: 7,—"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life," etc. Adam was driven from the garden lest he should eat of the tree of life and live forever in sin. Matt. 24: 13,—"He that endureth unto the end shall be saved." Not he that continues in sin.

Question. What shall the end be of those that obey not the gospel of God? They shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power. The word destruction is defined death, loss of life. One answer, Ps. 145: 20,—"He preserveth the righteous." What from? Not from sickness, nor sorrow, nor affliction, nor from poverty or death. He preserveth them in the life to come. But what of the wicked? All the wicked he will DESTROY. The word signifies to lay waste, to annihilate the form of a thing. Sometimes used as a figure of speech, as, you have taken a course that will bring destruction upon you. It never means to torment, nor preserve!

MR. BAKER'S THIRD SPEECH.

An argument is drawn from the goodness of God. As God is good, and his tender mercy is over all his works; therefore, the same mercy that encircles one individual, encircles all others. Does not the Bible read that where sin abounded, grace did much more abound? The parable of the lost sheep shows that he was not willing to leave the lost one in the wilderness, but sought until he found it. If it is not in this pasture, he searches in the next; if not in this age, in the age to come. I have never said we were immortal; but we shall be, for God shall raise the whole of mankind to immortality. God is not the author of sin, and hence sin will be destroyed. He did not make the devil, and hence the devil will be destroyed. I believe the devil to be what James says. Every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lusts and enticed.—He again refers to the refiner, and the work to be accomplished in the crucible, over the lake of fire and brimstone, where all the sins of the people will be bleached out. The silver to be refined is the spirit within the man, which is made in the image of God. The work of the refiner is to continue until the image of Christ is seen in every man.

ELD. GRANT'S FIRST SPEECH.—P. M.

Ps. 136 is quoted to show that God is good and merciful, even in the destruction of wicked men. The refiner does not save the dross when refining silver. Ps. 119: 119,—"Thou puttest away all the wicked like dross." If the dross is not saved, then the wicked are not. We believe that the punishment of the wicked is eternal; it runs parallel with the life of the righteous. But the question is, What is the everlasting punishment of the wicked? Paul says it is everlasting destruction; the annihilation of the form of the parts that constitute a thing what it is.—The destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah are set forth for an example to those that should after live ungodly. It has its counterpart in the lake of fire and brimstone, which is the second death. As no one supposes that the sins of the Sodomites were bleached out by the fire and brimstone which destroyed them; so there is no reason to think that the sins of those cast into the lake of fire will be.—Our friend has admitted that all men are mortal. How do they get immortality? Paul says,—"By patient continuance in well doing." He admits men are dead and know nothing between death and the resurrection. Now where does the man that dies in sin get his immortality, as the result of his patient continuance in well doing? The well doing is in this world, not after the resurrection has taken place.—He shows that the promise of immortality in the 15th of 1 Cor. does not refer to all men, but only to the saints, the brethren in Christ.

MR. BAKER'S FIRST SPEECH.—P. M.

He again speaks of the terms apollumi and apolia, which are rendered destruction, ruin, perish, etc. He introduced passages where the same word is rendered waste. "To what purpose is the waste of the ointment made?" In John it is rendered perdition, referring to Judas. Other passages were brought out, showing that the terms have other significations not implying annihilation.—In commenting on Ps. 119: 119, he says, the Psalmist does not say he will put away wicked men; but he puts away the wicked from man; which is just as we believe. We do not believe men are to be saved in their sins, but from them. If they become converted, they are saved from their sins; the wicked is put away from them, and the goodness comes in.—In speaking of Matt. 25: 46, he agrees with the affirmative, that the life of the righteous and punishment of the wicked are equal in duration. Seems to teach that it does not refer to the future world, but the present. The term rendered eternal is defined, "Life, age, life-time." Generally used in a limited sense; in one instance it meant three days and three nights. —Those that did good, still did good. So long as I am doing good I am happy. But the soul that sinneth it shall die. It experiences this condemnation. These shall go away into everlasting punishment. These refer to the goats. Why are the goats on the left hand? Because they have not fed the hungry, etc. Does God require goats to do these things? The reason why those were received on the right hand is, because they have done good. Does not say any thing about believing.

ELD. GRANT'S SECOND SPEECH.—P. M.

What makes a man righteous? It is believing and obeying God. Our friend admits that the punishment of the wicked is as long as the life of the righteous; according to his position, the righteous cease to live when the wicked cease to have their punishment.—He shows that the term waste does not mean preserve. The terms used to represent the punishment of the wicked, perdition, destruction, ruin, death. Do they signify salvation? When applied to things, we know what they mean. Destroy, when applied to man, what does it mean? The man is destroyed. Then where is he? He preserveth the righteous, but all the wicked will he destroy. Will he preserve the righteousness, and let the man be cast away? Will he destroy the wickedness, and save the man that does it?

Statement. Immortality is a gift of God, dependent on the character of the receiver. Hence all children dying in infancy and all believers will have immortality. We come to more texts in answer to the inquiry. What shall the end be of those that obey not the gospel of God? Ps. 37: 38. But the transgressors shall be destroyed. 92: 7. They shall be destroyed forever, destroyed for eternity to come. It does not refer to this life, for the wicked often fare better than the righteous.

Texts were quoted to show that forever usually expresses unlimited duration. As, "Thy throne, O God, is forever;" "Everlasting Father," etc. He illustrates the goodness of God in the destruction of the sinner, by its being a merciful act to kill a mad dog. God has no pleasure in the death of the wicked. When they come up to judgment, weeping and wailing in agony, justice demands they should die. They have violated all the laws of God—have been stealing, robbing, and murdering; Love would say, put them out of misery. Thus justice and mercy meet together, and God puts them back where he found them. He does them no wrong.

MR. BAKER'S SECOND SPEECH.—P. M.

He replies to the dog illustration by referring it to the devil, who had bitten the whole human family. And there was no balm in Gilead to save them. Mercy would have killed the mad dog in the beginning.—Ps. 73. David was once a vile sinner, and speaks of himself as in the lowest hell when the mercy of God reached him. He envied the prosperity of the wicked; but when he went into the sanctuary of God, then he understood their end. Surely, thou didst set them in slippery places, thou casteth them down into destruction. So people break down their constitutions by sin and transgression, and their noble natures are destroyed—not annihilated, but obscured. Like the silver cup, the divine chemist will bring all the parts together again. "They are utterly consumed with terror." Parallel with the passage, "there is no peace to the wicked," and "the way of transgressors is hard." As proof that the wicked who die in sin will have another offer of salvation, 1 Pet. 3: 18–20 is quoted. By which he went and preached unto the spirits in prison. It is my opinion that Christ is now preaching as he was then. The reign of Christ, 1 Cor. 15. He is still reigning, for all things are not yet put under him; but when all things shall be subdued, then Christ shall be subject to him, that God may be all in all. If God is to be in all, then he will be in every heart. None will be annihilated. When the last lost sheep shall be found, then there shall be one fold and one shepherd.

ELD. GRANT'S THIRD SPEECH.—P. M.

It appears that God chose to reserve the demons unto judgment, and give man a state of probation here, and judge him at the end of this dispensation. It is not for us to say what God should have done, but submit to what he has done. He has allowed wicked men to kill, and lie, and steal, and do all manner of wickedness, then offer them pardon. That is noble! worthy of a God!—The meaning of words we are to learn by their use. Of the wicked it says, They are wasted forever, destroyed forever. Ps. 37: 20,—"But the wicked shall perish." Does that mean wickedness? And "the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." That is what the fire and brimstone did to the Sodomites. The word rendered perish means to destroy, to cut off, to utterly destroy by becoming extinct. Our friend admits salvation depends on works. Here are some that die in their sins, and have no good works, and yet are to put on immortality! When do they do their good works?—Spirits in prison. My friend admits men are dead. To whom is Christ preaching, if preaching now? Not to sinners in heaven, for they are not there; for Christ says, "whither I go ye cannot come." Not to the dead, for they know nothing. He shows that the preaching was done by Noah to the Antediluvians while the ark was preparing. The reign of Christ. It begins when he comes again; then the righteous will reign with him a thousand years. He argues that it is right for God to place man back where he found him. He has done him no injustice. The wicked, if taken to heaven, would not be happy there. They have no fellowship for the saints here, and would not have there. They are miserable, and the best that can be done with them, is to put them back where they came from, and let oblivion's waves roll over them. Let those have life eternal that can enjoy it. God is so merciful, that he will not let the wicked live forever in misery. We can see how God can destroy man in love. It is the very best he can do with them. They will not serve him here; he has sent his Son to die for them; and they have cursed and swore, and denied him; they have lived and died in their sins; and what shall be their punishment? They shall be destroyed forever. The wages of sin is death.

MR. BAKER'S THIRD SPEECH.—P. M.

The term death expresses, literally, the extinction of life; and our friend wishes us to understand by it the separation of a person, so he will not be brought together again. We read that "Christ died." The same term is found in John 8: 21—"Ye shall die," etc. Also in Rom. 5: 6,—"In due time Christ died for the ungodly." Was Christ annihilated? Rom. 6: 8,—"If we be dead with Christ."—What! annihilated with Christ?—The wicked unhappy. We read that the common people heard Christ gladly. The publicans and sinners came to hear him.—How is it possible for a sheep to become a goat? The goats, I have no doubt, refer to the Jews. In Matt. 23, Jesus speaks of them saying, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem! (witness the love of his heart) how often would I have gathered you, as a hen gathers her brood under her wings!" With what affection he pronounced woes upon that generation, and concludes by saying, "Ye shall not see me, until ye shall say, blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." When shall this be? It is at the time when all Israel shall be saved; when the Deliverer comes out of Zion, and turns ungodliness from Jacob.—"The wicked shall perish." Persons are wicked before they are converted. No doubt Bro. Grant was before he was converted. The wickedness in him was taken away. The devil shall be destroyed; that is, the works of the devil. I believe in the annihilation of all sin and error, and of the doctrine of annihilation itself. In order to understand Scripture, we must compare Scripture with Scripture, and not take the say so of any individual.

(To be concluded.)

For the Crisis.

My Experience.—No. 7.

Daily did I feel dissatisfied with my enjoyment. There seemed a vacancy, a lack of feeling and power in every effort to obedience, yet I endeavored to struggle on.

Here I cannot forbear to notice the difficulty or hindrance in maintaining domestic religion. It arises principally from a lack of familiarity in religious conversation between parents and children. Parents manifest much interest with regard to the health of their children physically, are free and easy to converse upon other topics, while there usually exists a cold reserve and fear with regard to this most important theme. Let parents "keep themselves in the love of God," alive to their own as well as to the best interest and salvation of their children, by daily reading God's word with prayer, and frequent familiar conversation with regard to the trials and experience of their own christian course; and who can estimate the blessings secured by so doing, or lost by the neglect? Were this much neglected course pursued, we venture to predict that in a very few years there would not be found so many wanderers, backsliders and dwarfs in religious knowledge and understanding, as now burden the church and community. To this day, it is with regret that I call to remembrance this one act of my life, viz., the neglect of family devotion, for the reason not only of the deleterious effect produced upon my life, but the influence it may have had upon that of others; because, as I have before remarked, my father was a young convert to the christian religion, liable to temptations and discouragements, needing every little help, and whether my neglect had any influence with regard to the change produced, I know not; but, lamentable as it is, the family altar was soon sadly neglected, and ultimately broken down, so that but a very few times since have I had the privilege of praying with my parents.

And here would I earnestly plead with both parents and children, that as you value the unending joys and rest that await the faithful, so to constantly and faithfully maintain family devotion. In the family it is the indispensable regulator of all its affairs, the tie that binds its members together and renders home the grand nursery and asylum for the wayward and wandering.

Here several years passed in which at no time did I intend to neglect God and prayer. I endeavored to do what appeared to be duty, and bear the cross when it was not too crossing. Often did I feel sad and gloomy when comparing my then present feelings with those of former years, fearing and knowing that I was backsliding, but still did not intend so to do. In the course of these years I became acquainted with and was united in marriage to one, who, though not an opposer, was a stranger to the christian religion. Sometimes I conversed with him upon the subject of religion, and entreated him to seek the Savior; yet he appeared entirely indifferent with regard to these things as concerning himself. Two or three years passed, in which time death, the tyrant and enemy of men, was permitted to enter our dwelling, and take from our fond embrace a lovely little son of only one short year. So unexpectedly came the summons—only five short days—and the withering breath from the dreaded foe had closed the sparkling eyes, faded the lovely cheek, and laid the once beautiful, living form cold and lifeless in our arms. Never did hearts feel more deeply. Never shall I forget the bitter cup now prepared. How strongly did I hope for awhile, then, though confined to my bed by sickness, yet how fervently did I plead with God to forgive my sins and spare my child. But no avail. The time had come, and not till the last hour, till I saw that the chastening was necessary and intended for good, did I yield and submit all to God, saying, "Lord, if this affliction shall prove the means in thy hands of reclaiming my wandering feet, and bringing my husband to Christ, so let it be. Take my lonely treasure. It is all I have but this shall be thine. Take it to thyself, only save and bring us to enjoy its society again where death can no more separate." Soon the pulse ceased to beat, the spirit gone, and all is over. In a little while they laid him in his narrow house. The Sabbath came, and with it our beloved minister. The funeral services closed, and still I remembered the "heart's keen anguish at the last farewell," as they bore the lovely form from my sight forever, and laid it in the grave where it awaits the resurrection, when it will come forth clothed with immortal beauty.

Home, how desolate! how mournful! Every step and every movement speaks of death. We had reason to mourn, not so much for the loss of our loved one, as our departure and distance from God. Not till now did we fully realise our condition. Deep conviction was now manifest in the appearance of my husband, and as if to add to the gloom and sorrow already surrounding us and fasten more deeply the arrows of conviction, the mournful intelligence reached us that our much loved minister, who ministered to our various necessities, was dead. Only four weeks since he left our lonely dwelling where he mingled his sympathies and tears with ours, officiating at the funeral services, but now he sleeps the same sleep of death. Silently the enemy approached and with one attack lay him prostrate with heart disease. Now the last sermon had been heard and that last prayer was vividly before us and indelibly written on our memory.

For the Crisis.

Importance of Prophecy.—No. 3.

Having found an inspired rule, by which to interpret parables, we proceed to the investigation of that of the ten virgins; in doing which, we shall compare the action of the church, during the last few years, with the principal features of the parable, separately.

First. "Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom." As it is generally understood, that, by the phrase, "kingdom of heaven," the church is intended, we pass to notice the time when she shall bear resemblance to the parable.

In the Lord's discourse concerning his second advent, (Matt. 24th chap.) we are informed that, when certain events have transpired, we may know that his coming is near, "even at the doors." In vers. 42 and 44, the church are commanded to watch, not knowing what hour the Lord will come. In v. 45, he asks the question, "Who then,"—i. e., at that time, at the time when the church are to watch for the coming of the Lord—"is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? In v. 46, a blessing is pronounced on that servant who shall be found thus employed, when his Master comes. That the meat in due season, consists in proclaiming the immediate coming of the Lord, is evident from v. 48, thus, "But, and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, my lord delayeth his coming," etc. There could have been no inducement to the evil servant to say, "My lord delayeth his coming," unless his immediate coming had first been proclaimed. In vers. 50 and 51, the doom of the evil servant is announced. But the adverb of time "then," with which the parable commences, cannot allude to the time when the evil servant is "cut asunder," because that event does not occur till after the Lord comes; while the church are to bear resemblance to the parable, prior to his coming. Hence, this adverb of time must have allusion to the time when the church are to watch for, and proclaim, the immediate coming of the Lord.

But what do the lamps represent? I answer, the word of God. As the natural world obtains light by means of a well trimmed and burning lamp, so do those who have faith in God, and whose hearts are filled with love to him, derive spiritual light from his word. Says David, "The entrance of thy word giveth light." And again, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." We are also exhorted by Peter, to take heed to the word of prophecy, as unto a light shining in a dark place.

"Which took their lamps." When the immediate coming of the Son of God began to be proclaimed, a new and strange phase was discovered in the religious department of society; but it was peculiar to those who were looking for the second advent of Christ. No sooner were people convinced that the Lord was soon to appear, than they took their Bibles, (lamps,) and, with very few, if any exceptions, carried them wherever they went. In their meetings, a Bible was seen in the hands of every one. When temporal matters called them from home,—when they went into their shops, or into their fields to labor,—when they went from house to house, to exhort their friends and neighbors, as they were wont to do, they took their Bibles. And, in consequence of always having their Bibles with them, they were subjected to more of the scorn and contempt of their opponents, than they otherwise would have been. The Bible was a peculiar badge, by which Adventists were distinguished from other people. Remarks like the following, were frequently made respecting them, viz., "Begin to talk with a Millerite, and, the first thing he does, is to take a Bible from his pocket or from under his arm, and it is all Bible! Bible! Bible! and thus saith the Lord!" "You may know a Millerite by his always having a Bible with him," etc. [I speak of things as they occurred under my own observation; and presume the same is substantially true everywhere.] They literally took their lamps, (Bibles) and went forth to meet the bridegroom (Lord).

But what peculiar action, on the part of the church, is represented by the virgins going forth? To go forth implies a moving forward from some particular place. And as the virgins, in going forth to meet the bridegroom, would, as a matter of course, go forth from their homes; so must the church, in carrying out the figure, in some metaphorical sense, go forth from their homes. In a figurative sense, the homes of those who profess christianity, are those organized churches which are composed of such as are of their own peculiar creed. For instance, the home of the Presbyterian, is in the Presbyterian church. The home of the Baptist, is in the Baptist church; and so on, to the end of the chapter. And the non-professor finds his home in the vanities of the world. And, when the flying angel's message was heard, "Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come," professors forsook the various churches with which they had been identified; non-professors left the meager pleasures of earth; and, with their Bibles in their hands, they went forth to meet the Lord.

But previously to the virgins going forth to meet the bridegroom, they must have received an invitation to the marriage festival, in which the time and place for the celebration of the nuptial ceremony must have been stated. In like manner, by the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom, the invitation to the marriage supper of the Lamb was given; the [illegible] time stated was the autumn of 1844; and the place designated, where the Lord would meet the church, was the air,—1 Thess. 4:17. Many accepted the invitation,—took their lamps, (Bibles,) and went forth,—thus completing the resemblance to the feature of the parable.

Second. "And five of them were wise, and five were foolish." One half, only, of those who act in fulfillment of the parable, are represented as being wise; while the other half are represented as being foolish. But there are two kinds of wisdom, which it may not, perhaps, be improper to notice.

1. The wisdom of this world; which is foolishness with God. It consists in judging with apparent correctness concerning the things of this world, as to what is necessary to be done, according to the circumstances. It is mixed with bitter envying and strife; it is earthly, sensual, and devilish; and is the promoter of confusion and every evil work.

2. Spiritual or true wisdom. This wisdom descends from above. It consists in yielding to the influence of the Spirit of God, and complying with the requisitions of His word; and is known by its several properties. It is pure and peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy. It produces true piety in the deportment of those who possess it, and has its beginning in the fear of the Lord. But there are also two kinds of fear.

1. Slavish fear. This kind of fear is mean, servile, and cringing in its character, and is the result of an impenitent consciousness of guilt. And when those who are actuated by it, hear righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, reasoned of, they tremble. Their fear of future retribution may induce them to attend to the outward ceremonies of christianity, and to profess with their mouths much love to God, while they remove their hearts far from him.

2. Filial fear. This kind of fear is that which a dutiful child feels toward an indulgent parent. He does not fear the rod, because he has no consciousness of willful guilt. But he fears to do wrong, because he knows it will displease his parent. He is unwilling to give his parent displeasure, because he loves him. The love and fidelity of the child toward his parent, increases the love of the parent for the child, and all their actions toward each other are deeds of kindness. This is the kind of fear exercised by all who are reconciled to God, and, in the language of another, "It produces a reverent submission to His providence, and a ready obedience to all His commands." This is the fear with which the Son of God was affected, when, in the days of his flesh, he "offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears to him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared." And all whose wisdom is established on this foundation, will be well supplied with oil when the Master comes.

For the Crisis.

The Facts.

It appears to be not only proper, but also due to myself and others that I make public the following statement. I write in view of an allusion to me by friend H., in a recent Crisis. In the spring of 1860, weary and sick with obstinate chronic ailments, drugged with medicines until I had become a very walking apothecary-shop, disgusted with swallowing quack remedies and poisons, even in homœopathic doses, without nervous energy, aim, or ambition, unreliable in my profession, and almost tired of life, I concluded to abandon books, preaching, and public responsibilities, and turned my thoughts to a Water-cure, hoping through hygeio-therapeutic agencies skillfully and wisely applied, to regain once more the lost treasure, health, without which, life itself, which is the highest good, is made a curse. I thought of and sought information concerning Northampton, Brattleboro, Worcester, and Dansville. A generous offer was made me by Dr. James C. Jackson and the proprietors of this Cure, which I accepted and prepared to at once improve. Then the aid of $100 or more which I had hoped to obtain through the result of my own industry failed me, and lacking the necessary means I said, I will give up my plan. But my ever constant and generous friend, H. L. H., replied, "Go to Dansville,—God has money enough, he will open the way, and I will be responsible." Accordingly, with $50 of my own and about that amount pledged to come from others through H., I came hither as one who would improve his last and only remaining chance.

On the 17th day of May of last year I took my first prescription from the faculty at "Our Home." Dr. Jackson pronounced me unfitted to labor, exhausted of nervous energy, and liable to speedy incurable disease, a thorough nervous-dyspeptic (a term that covers all my numerous complaints), [illegible] instead of four months, as I had intended to [illegible] stay and treatment, [illegible] under two years [illegible] Mrs. T. came [illegible] What I had [illegible]

I received several letters from as many different persons at the East, asking why I did not go to God in the prayer of faith and be healed; why I tarried here longer, as four months stay and treatment was amply sufficient; why I did not go forth again to toil in the field as of old, etc. Such understand neither the nature of my disease nor the theory of water-cure, nor can I here stop to explain them. Besides, "have all the gift of healing?"

I am not so foolish as to suppose that the illnesses, excesses, and poisonings of a quarter of a century can by natural agencies be healed in a few days. I am already benefited in many respects, and trust that I am laying the foundation for better health with a stronger hold on life than heretofore, though I do not expect to realize the full extent and consciousness of that benefit until months after I leave the cure. Such is the nature of the case. We intended to have left in May on the completion of the year's term, and had made our calculations to spend the summer in Champlain, N. Y., but on consultation with our physicians they have decidedly and peremptorily refused me leave to go. I have seen too many go away against and in spite of the counsel of the doctors, much to their own detriment, and often obliged soon to return again, for me to brave the better judgment of this accomplished faculty; and so, though it breaks up all my plans, and subjects me to unexpected expense, yet I shall stay till October. Had I the means and time it would prove finally a loss of neither to me to stay here two years. As to finances thus far my whole expense of board and treatment up to March 1st, amounting to over $130, has been furnished by the hand of H. L. H., from whom, on learning he in his benevolence was $30 out of pocket on my account, I at once refused to receive any more funds. Who my good friends are that have supplied him over $100 for my wants, save in one or two instances, I know not. May God bless them—they have my thanks, Horace my abiding gratitude. My other expenses have been equal to that for board and treatment, but I have remembered George Muller and God's promises, and, to our sometimes surprise, we have in the hour of our trial and affliction lacked nothing. It is no light trial to be in poor health, without ready means or income, yet this is the lot of many a preacher, and I will not to be a burden to any. To meet our expenses from April 1st to Oct. 1st, will require $78 for board and treatment, $22 for house rent, and at least $50 more for current expenses and et-ceteras, and though I have a horror of being in debt, this needful sum I shall borrow and have already taken steps to do so. Besides, H. must be paid. That we shall sell "Voice" I have no faith—"to beg I am ashamed"—to trust God to pay a debt contracted to secure that for which is God's great gift of dear life, I will. Bear with me in this. The churches will be my witness that I never before intruded my financial matters upon them, and I hope I never shall again.

To the proprietors of "Our Home" we are deeply indebted; their kindness to us is unbounded. I wish to give them a fair chance to effect my cure, and during the remainder of my course of treatment wish to abstain from brain-work. I shall therefore write no articles for the papers, answer no useless letters. Write us as often and as lengthily as you please, but do not impose upon us the necessity of a lengthy reply. Writing injures me, and I must in the words of Jackson "forswear the quill for the present." I make the same request for Brother Himes while here. Our cases demand quiet. Our brains are in that delightfully perplexing condition of somnolence in which it is far easier to follow the prescription of the doctor and "sleep fourteen hours of the twenty-four and be stupid the other ten," than to "have the care of all the churches." The cause is God's and he must and will take care of it. "The health principles here taught, and my tarry here, constitute under God the sheet-anchor of my earthly hopes, and, if these fail, farewell to health, to toil and to life." I love the dear church of Christ and the gospel of my choice, but Bro. Himes and myself are sick men, and suffer much; and whether we shall ever go forth as in better days to preach Jesus coming, or whether those among whom we have so often in joy and sorrow gone preaching the kingdom of God heretofore will ever see our faces more, God knoweth. Will you pray for us? Will you write us cheering epistles? Be faithful, dear waiting ones. Farewell.

The Golden Rule.—"What if it had been you?" was a question asked by a sister, in whose presence the faults of another were being mentioned. "What if it had been you?—would you wish it related? The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, APRIL 24, 1861.

Boston Conference.

For the benefit of those not present, we will give a brief report of our late general conference at Boston. According to appointment, we commenced at Chapman Hall, Tuesday evening, April 9th. Bro. H. L. Hastings preached an able and instructive discourse, showing that "the world by wisdom knew not God," while at the same time "it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." The value of the Scriptures was set forth in clear light, and the insignificance of mere human wisdom when opposed to the word of the Lord.

Wednesday, A. M. At 10 o'clock, we met for a Conference meeting and had a profitable season. We were all very much affected by the testimony of the little girl who was baptized at the Wilbraham campmeeting last year. We were astonished at her christian boldness, coupled with meekness, and her firmness in the cause of Christ. After hearing her cheering remarks, we think all were satisfied that children can serve the Lord and give a reason of their hope. Many eyes were filled with tears while she was speaking, and some felt, no doubt, that they had not done their duty, and wished they had been as faithful as that little girl. We had many cheering testimonies from those who love the appearing of Jesus. All appeared to be satisfied that the Lord is soon coming, and that what is done must be done quickly. It was evident that the faith of the Lord's children is gaining strength on this point; for a large number who spoke, said they never felt so well convinced as now, that the Savior will soon appear. We found that several from the churches are deeply interested in these things, and are anxious to hear the evidences of our hope.

Wednesday, P. M. In the afternoon, Bro. Henry Pratt preached an interesting discourse, touching the will which our heavenly Father has made in favor of his children, showing that the saints will inherit the earth which is now in the hands of their oppressors. The children of the Lord were comforted while listening to the reading of the will of the Lord, which he has made to those who love and obey him.

Wednesday evening, Bro. Rufus Wendell entertained us with a logical discourse on 2 Cor. 5: 8, showing very clearly that the common exposition of this passage was not sustained by the context, nor the Scriptures generally. A large audience listened with excellent attention.

Thursday, A. M. To-day we moved our meetings to the Meionaon, in the Tremont Temple building, in order that we might better accommodate the large numbers who wish to attend the conference. We were not present at the social meeting in the morning, nor in the afternoon to hear Bro. Couch, but learned that they were refreshing seasons. At the close of the afternoon meeting, Bro. Rufus Wendell was ordained to the work of the ministry, by Brn. H. L. Hastings, P. B. Morgan, J. Couch and the writer. The occasion was one of interest.

In the evening, we listened to a valuable discourse from Bro. Hastings, in which he gave an account of the "model church" at Thessalonica, showing the very striking contrast between that church and those at the present day. Those who wish to be thoroughly posted on this subject, should get his work entitled, "Thessalonica, or the model church."

Friday, A. M., April 12th. We were not able to be in at the meetings during the day. Bro. Champlin preached in the P. M. In the evening we listened to a very interesting discourse from Bro. Couch, on the atonement. Great light was thrown on this hitherto obscure subject. We wish it could be printed in a tract and scattered like the leaves of the forest.

Saturday, April 13th. We had a good conference meeting in the forenoon. Bro. Morgan preached in the afternoon, but we were called away by other duties, hence can make no report. In the evening, we had a discourse from Bro. Henry Pratt, showing from the fulfillment of prophecy, that the end of the present dispensation is at hand. This was good tidings to the children of the Lord, and sad intelligence to his enemies; but the evidence was so plain, that it left but little room for doubt in the minds of those who love the truth and take heed to the "sure word of prophecy."

Sabbath morning, April 14th. At 9 1-2 o'clock, we assembled for a love-feast, and enjoyed one of the best we have ever had. In fifty minutes one hundred and five spoke of the love of Jesus shed abroad in their hearts. It was truly a season of great refreshing—a heavenly place in Christ Jesus. That meeting will hold a choice place in the memory of all who were present, and be often thought of with pleasure. It was a joyful resting place for weary pilgrims, while the alarm of war is sounding through our land. Perhaps it was the last one we shall enjoy before Jesus comes. Trying scenes are evidently just before us. [illegible]

[illegible] the editor. At two o'clock, we met again for a supplement to our love-feast, and enjoyed another season of heavenly communion with the Lord and each other. At 3 o'clock, we were comforted by an interesting sermon from Bro. Couch on the signs of the times, showing that our deliverance is near, and that we may reasonably expect to see our Savior coming soon in "power and great glory," according to his promise. A large audience listened with deep attention. The truth evidently took effect, and we shall expect to see good fruits as the result.

At 6 1-2 o'clock, we assembled at Chapman Hall, around the sacramental table, to commemorate the death and sufferings of our absent Lord. This was the most heavenly communion season we have ever enjoyed in Boston. Tears of joy filled the eyes of the rejoicing saints who had been long deprived of such a privilege. We spread a table about one hundred and fifty feet in length, and some two hundred gathered around to show their love for Jesus. It was a hallowed scene, which no christian could help enjoying. Quite a number from other churches united with us, and did not hesitate to say that they never enjoyed such a heavenly communion season before. It seemed as though the atmosphere of heaven surrounded us, filling us with sweet peace from Jesus, giving us a foretaste of the joys of the coming kingdom.

At 7 1-2 o'clock, we met again at the Meionaon, which was crowded with attentive listeners to a discourse from the editor, on "the signs of the times." Thus ended our conference, and the most blessed day we ever spent in Boston. We parted in fond hopes of soon meeting in the kingdom of God.

Editorial Notices.

A Wish.—If any of our readers can send us the Crisis of Sept. 8th, 1858, they will confer upon us a favor that will be thankfully received.

A Correction.—To "S." and "Amy."—By an unfortunate mistake, the stanzas belonging to the two articles, "Starless crown" and "Toil on," etc., in Crisis of April 3d, were exchanged. The stanza annexed to the latter article belongs to the former, and vice versa.

Erratum.—In the Crisis of April 17th, article headed "Then and Now," for "white beard," read white bread.

"Thessalonica, or the Model Church."—This is a new and valuable work from the pen of Bro. H. L. Hastings, published by Rudd & Carleton, 130 Grand street, New York. This is said to be the best book that Bro. H. has issued; which is a sufficient commendation to those who have read his publications. It is neatly bound. Price 75 cts., postpaid. For sale at the Crisis office.

"The Laws of Life."—This is a valuable monthly periodical, published at "Our Home," Dansville, N. Y., by M. W. Simmons & Co., at one dollar a year, and edited by Dr. Harriet N. Austin, assisted by Dr. J. C. Jackson, so well known as distinguished physicians at the best Water Cure probably in the world. The Laws of Life should be in every family. One copy of this interesting paper is worth more than all the tea, coffee and tobacco in the country. Dear reader, it is just such a paper as you need, from which you may learn "the laws of life." It is full of interesting articles and important truths, which all should read. We think no one who takes this paper will feel that he has wasted his money.

"Lewis' New Gymnastics for Ladies, Gentlemen and Children, and Boston Journal of Physical Culture," is an interesting monthly, edited and published by Dr. Dio Lewis, No. 20 Essex street, Boston. This periodical gives very useful instruction relative to the development of the physical system. Price $1.00 per year.

"A Spiritual Body."

Bro. W. P. K., Norway, Me., wishes to know the meaning of 1 Cor. 15: 44, which reads as follows:—"It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body."

Our brother says some of his neighbors, who are members of one of the churches in the place, claim that there is a spiritual body formed as soon as a man dies, which goes immediately to its reward or punishment. We find no Scripture to sustain any such position, but everything against it. The text and context of the passage under examination is directly opposed to any such view. Paul is showing that dead men are to be raised, and specifies the time when this wonderful event is to take place. He goes on to say, after affirming the fact that those who die shall live again, that "the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised." But what is to be raised? Something dead which was sown in corruption, ... —a "natural body." This is represented by the word "it," and this [illegible] personal identity indicated by that pronoun is the one to be raised; otherwise there is no resurrection of the dead. [illegible] buried in the sea to live again; nor more obscure, if anything else is meant. And to show that our only hope of a future life, if we die, depends upon the resurrection of the very man laid in the grave, Paul says, "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen, . .). and . . . . they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."

Those asleep in Jesus are to be raised just as truly as he was, and by the power of the same Spirit; hence we read, "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Rom. 8: 11. Observe, he does not say, he will raise up a spiritual body that is now in you; but if his Spirit dwells in you, that shall "quicken your MORTAL BODIES." And when these physical organisms are thus raised from the dead, by the same Spirit that brought Christ from the grave, then this "vile body" will "be fashioned like unto his glorious body;" or, in other words, it then becomes "a spiritual body," because quickened, or animated by the Spirit of God, just as Jesus was, when he was raised from the dead. As this Spirit is incorruptible and immortal, we are changed by its power and agency from corruption to incorruption; from mortality to immortality. In this way, our natural bodies become spiritual ones, fitted to live in the coming kingdom.

Light Wanted on Dan. 2: 43.

"And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men, but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay."

Is not the above now having its fulfillment?

We think so. The divisions of the Roman empire are now in their brittle state, and have not sufficient strength in themselves to hold together much longer. They are evidently near the time when they will "be broken to shivers,' and become "like the chaff of the summer threshing-floor."

The Memorable Year.

The following interesting lines are from the pen of Harriet Beecher Stowe, and copied from the New York Independent:

ANNUS MEMORABILIS

Stand strong and calm as Fate!—not a breath of scorn or hate,
Of taunt for the base, or of menace for the strong—
Since our fortunes must be sealed on that old and famous field,
Where the Right is set in battle with the Wrong.

'T is coming, with the loom of Khamsin or Simoom,
The tempest that shall try if we are of God or no;
Its roar is in the sky, and there be they who cry,
Let us cower—and the storm may overblow.

Now, nay! stand firm and fast!—(that was a spiteful blast!)—
This is not a war of men, but of angels good and ill—
'T is hell that storms at heaven—'t is the black and deadly Seven
Sworn 'gainst the Shining Ones to work their damned will.

How the ether glooms and burns, as the tide of combat turns,
And the smoke and dust above it whirl and float!
It eddies and it streams—and, certes, oft it seems
As the Sins had the Seraphs fairly by the throat!

But we all have read (in that legend grand and dread)
How Michael and his host met the Serpent and his crew—
Naught has reached us of the fight—but, if I have dreamed aright,
'T was a loud one and a long, as ever thundered through.

Right at fly, past a doubt, the Dragon fought it out—
And his Angels, each and all, did for Tophet their devoir—
There was creak of iron wings, and whirl of scorpion stings,
Hiss of bifid tongues, and the Pit in full uproar!

But, naught thereof enscrolled, in one brief line 'tis told,
(Calm as dew the Apocalyptic Pen,)
That on the Infinite Shore their place was found no more,—
God send the like on this our earth. Amen.

American War.

War, with all its horrors, is now fully inaugurated in our boasted land of freedom. Young men and fathers are hurrying from their farms, shops, stores, and other honest avocations of life, to the bloody battle field, to assist in slaughtering their fellow countrymen, and may meet their own children or parents in the opposing army. Hence a father is liable to shoot his own son, or a son his own father. Such scenes are common in civil war, like the one now begun. Soon, lonely widows and orphans will sit weeping in their desolated homes, over the ravages of the war demon. But there is reason to hope that before another such scene arrives, the Prince of Peace will have begun his righteous reign with all the pure in heart.

No calculation can be made as to the termination of the present war, unless it be by the speedy coming of Christ. It should be remembered, according to the vision shown St. John upon the Isle of Patmos, that "the nations were angry" at the time Jesus appears in the clouds of heaven to judge and reward. It has been thought that our nation would escape from drinking [illegible] The last act of the nations as given in the prophetic Scriptures is one of distress and perplexity. We are now so near the end that there is very strong reason to believe that earth's closing drama is about opening, to be closed by the coming of the Son of Man. Every one, who desires to be accepted by the coming King, should keep entirely free from the war spirit of the age, and remember Jesus has said, "Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the children of God." Of course it follows, that the war makers are not his children. The war spirit is not confined to political matters, but seems to be active in religious affairs also; hence all should be particularly careful to do all things in love; for it is evident Satan is trying all possible ways to get every man into some kind of contention, and thus get him out of the list of peacemakers so that he shall lose an inheritance among the saints. Paul was instructed by the Spirit to say, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come; for men shall be . . . fierce." Fierceness is the opposite of meekness; but it is necessary to be meek in order to "inherit the earth," consequently the "fierce" can have no portion with the meek. Let this truth be remembered.

Debt and Grace.—A New Index.

The "Index of Citations" in the former editions of this book was prepared when I had scarcely means or time to give anything better. At the suggestion of one or two friends I have lately replaced it by an Index of Subjects, as well as names, which fills twenty-four close pages. This gives a bird's eye view of the detailed contents of the book, as well as a clue to what is said here and there on any subject or point. This will accompany the next edition, now ready; and it is also published as a pamphlet, which can be inserted (by dint of mucilage) in the copies of earlier editions. I should be happy to furnish this to all old patrons, sent and post free. But I don't know who these good friends all are, and it would cost me more than I could afford. The expense of the new Index, in time and money, is about $60, besides that of printing the pamphlet. It will be sent, prepaid, to all who desire it, for five cents. It can be had of Rudd & Carleton, 130 Grand Street, New York, (my present publishers,) or at the Crisis office.

C. F. H.

New York, April 16, 1861.

Editor of the Crisis:—

Please allow me to say of "Thessalonica; or, The Model Church," by H. L. Hastings,—I have read this work, in manuscript and in proof sheets, with great interest. It is a lively picture of primitive faith and practice, especially as illustrated in the account of the Thessalonians in the Acts of the Apostles, and in the two Epistles of Paul to that church. The writer incidentally censures some of the evils that ever have beset a popular christianity, and which are likely to do so to the last day. This feature of the book affords a little pleasant satire, and the intelligent reader will apply it to the actual abuses of the power that a full grown christianity attains. The ambitious and covetous will ever be the plagues of all institutions that have survived the perils of infancy. Where the body is, thither will flock those who would have the corporation soulless. Where the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together. And it is well that the vultures should be now and then frayed away, or at least portrayed. But the larger part of the book consists of discourse which more directly invites the imitation of the reader, and encourages the christian hope. It is addressed to the conscience and the heart. Let it be read accordingly, and its fruit will appear in the growing patience, gentleness, kindness, zeal, labor and joy of christians in these days of trouble, and doubt, and fear. We hear of Bereans, searching the scriptures for doctrines which may after all never get below the head. To be truly Berean is a truly good thing. But to be Thessalonian is better still, as character is better than the mere possession of truth.

For the Crisis.

The Willful King.—Dan. 11: 36.

What power is this? asks the inquirer after truth. And to answer which, we inquire how far the prophet has brought us down in the history of the world before introducing this power? And it is manifest that the Papacy is the last power described from the 31st to 36th verses. One unmistakeable feature of which is, "yet they (the people that do know their God) shall fall by the sword, and by flame, and by captivity, and by spoil, many days." Since the abolishing of the Jesuits, 1773, and the subsequent toleration of religion, the Papacy has been on the wane. The 1260 years of war-making on the saints was then and there at an end, and the darkening of the sun immediately after the tribulation of those days (1780) confirms this position. Again. Says Marsh in his ecclesiastical history, "With their fall (the Jesuits), fell the [illegible] power of Papal Rome." [illegible] The willful king. [illegible] the chronology of this power we must find the willful king commencing [illegible] What power was the Papal? "But [illegible] she fell into the fangs of a monster more horrible than ever stalked forth on the bloody arena of depraved man. Infidels headed by Voltaire, D'Alembert, Rousseau, and Frederick II., king of Prussia, resolved upon the overthrow of christianity. The revolutionary torrent of 1793 overflowed the neighboring countries and laid waste the Roman church with all her trumpery. Her priests were massacred, her silver chalices and saints were turned into money, her bells converted into cannon, and her churches into barracks for soldiers. From the Atlantic to the Adriatic, she presented but one most appalling spectacle, she had shed the blood of saints, and prophets, and God now gave her blood to drink." "This infidel power soon fell under a military despotism, and has become a great and terrible empire."

Here, then, is a power doing according to his will subsequent to the Papal, hence, it is "the willful king" power. A Corsican youth of ordinary descent was admitted to an under office in a company of artillery in the republican French army. His activity at the siege of Toulon in 1793, excited the attention of the national agents and he was advanced. His subsequent rise was rapid. Within a few years the French received him and honored him as their first Consul. Thus Bonaparte became the leader of this last terrible power which has done "according to his will" as no other power has since the 1260 days of Papal rule. Therefore, infidel France is the power predicted in this prophecy. Having found the first unmistakeable feature of this power, together with its chronology, we proceed to the

2. And he shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every God. This did infidel France. A member of their National Convention says, "Man, when free, wants no other divinity than himself. Reason dethrones both the kings of earth and the King of heaven. No monarchy above, if we wish to preserve the republic below." Thus did they exalt themselves above every God.

3. They shall speak marvelous things against the God of gods. Their highest secret was, "there is no God." And again, "If there be a God, I defy him to dash me to pieces with his red hot thunderbolts." And such was the spread of these infidel sentiments, that Voltaire boasted, "that from Geneva to Berne not a christian was to be found, and if things went on at this rate, in twenty years God would be in a pretty plight." Thus did they speak marvelous things against the God of gods.

4. Neither shall he regard the God of his fathers, nor the desire of women. All former Gods were disregarded, and the desire of women—that God-ordained bond of marriage,—was set at naught. "They virtually abolished the covenant of marriage by rendering the support of it optional with the parties. As a fruit of which national order 1,600 divorces took place in Paris in the year 1793. They decreed that the promiscuous intercourse of the sexes was no crime." (Kitto, Vol. II, p. 253.) A perfect fulfillment.

5. "But in his estate shall he honor the God of forces." What power has done this like France under the Napoleons? To satisfy the national love of military, 200,000 men were equipped as a National Guard. People's History, Apendix p. 3. After Napoleon III. had caused 25,000 persons to be banished to the pestilential coast of Cayenne, the liberty trees were all plucked up and the words "Liberty, fraternity, and equality" were erased from the public buildings, and the witty and gay populace substituted the words "Infantry, Cavalry and Artillery." The 1st Napoleon intended "to unite all parts of the old Roman empire, and keep in peace whatever was beyond it." Of the second, or rather the third Napoleon, it is said, "He is the blood-red sun around which a thousand blood-red stars revolve." Again, in speaking of the Emperor's granting the liberty of speech, the Republican remarks, "An imperial rescript of that son of thunder whose music is the Bassoprofundo of the cannon." Has not France filled the picture in honoring the God of forces—(Mazim)—military munitions.

6. "And a God whom his fathers knew not shall he honor with gold and silver, and with precious stones, and pleasant things. Thus shall he do with a strange God." After denouncing all Gods, and all religion, and letting loose all the baser passions of their depraved hearts, they, (the French) took an abandoned female, dressed her in fantastic hue, decorated her with gold and silver and precious stones, as a goddess, to personate "Human Reason," enshrined her as the goddess of Reason on the altar of Notre-dame, and worshiped her with various religious ceremonies. She died about six months ago at the convent in Boulogne. Was not this a strange God indeed? yet how striking the fulfillment.

7. Divide the land for gain. That revolution now came, and in its tumults and convulsions the ancient French monarchy rapidly approached extinction. Amid frightful disorders, famine appeared, the elements seemed to partake of the savagery of the times, [illegible]

of the king, while all authority but that of sans culottes seemed abolished. The immense wealth and lands of those who fled including that of the Orleans family was "divided" among them "for gain." Thus has infidel France filled the mould of prophecy to the letter as no other power has done since the 1260 days of Papal rule has expired. Simple declarations in prophecy, and simple facts in history, to corroborate the same must come in their chronological order. Verse 40.—At the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him and the king of the north come against him. At the time of the end. That is, at a point of time when signs and events as well as the prophetic periods denote the near approach of the end. The king of the south, etc. As France is the power here referred to, an alliance on the part of Spain (south) and England, (north) would, with the other features of this prediction, fill the prophecy. "This is a description of an alliance entered into by the king of Spain on the south and Great Britain on the north for six years."—Wm. Miller. Spain did "push," and Bonaparte said "it was that unhappy war with Spain which ruined him." It cost him 300,000 men. England did come "against him like a whirlwind," it struck at all points and in all directions. It drove a million of soldiers upon the coast of France, and the mighty power, the "willful king" power, lies prostrate at the feet of the allies. And as Napoleon I. seems to have traveled over the precise ground which the prophetic pencil had painted out, till we reach the 45th verse, it was supposed that he had filled the picture. The wound and the cure, or the "deadly wound healed," was not specified by Daniel's instructor, but reserved for a more full development in the Revelation to John. And while Napoleon III. as the counterpart of Napoleon I., is walking precisely in the steps of his father, (for this seems to be the fact) we discover that prophecy has marked his last and final act thus, "He shall plant the tabernacle of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain." His career was not up at Waterloo or St. Helena. His deadly wound must be healed, and the burrowed fox must have a second chase and finally fall "between the seas in the glorious holy mountain." To this point then we will turn our attention, for to this point he must come and then, and not till then, will the chase be up.

Is he heading for the mountain? When Louis Napoleon became Emperor of France he took the title "Defender of the faith" and protector of the "Holy Places." Having thus assumed the guardianship of Jerusalem he began at once to intrigue with the Sultan, and in 1853 it was announced that the Turkish government had determined to sustain the cause of the Romish or French church against that of the Greek or Russian; and to make over the interests of those places to the French Emperor. This decision served in a measure to bring about the Russian war. Says Victor Hugo, "Take away intrigue, the so-called affair of the Holy Places, take away the keys, take away the desire to be consecrated, take away the present to be made to the Pope, (the keys) and you have no Eastern war." Being foiled in his attempt then, he is now about to accomplish his darling object through (to him) the fortunate affair of the Syrian massacre. Having attained the assent of the principal European governments to send a contingent force, not to exceed 6,000 men, the Emperor lost no time, but sent out a force sufficient to take the matter entirely under his own control, and is accomplishing at once, what Napoleon I. could not effect with forty thousand men.

As Ahab according to prophecy must fall at Ramoth-Gilead, so the Ahab of the Apochalyptic Jezebel must fall in "the glorious holy mountain." The importance of this Syrian occupation is thus set forth in the Paris Seicle: "Now that the Syrian expedition is decided upon by common agreement, we must not fear to declare its importance, and to examine its consequences. The chief thing is done. It was necessary that Europe (rather France) should intervene in the East. She is on her way thither. God will watch over her fleets and over her soldiers; these christian fleets go to accomplish the will of God. We must not delude ourselves. We have just embarked in an enterprise of very long duration. See what happened in the case of Rome. When France sent a division there in 1849, it was a question of only a rapid operation of a momentary stay. Eleven years have already passed by and we know not when nor how our troops will quit Rome." "France has already 12000 men in Syria. Bonaparte is already in the closest connection with the Arabs under Abd-el-kader, and with the Egyptian government. It is said all of her troops are at his disposal. The occupation of Jerusalem and the Holy Land is only a question of time." Then comes his end. Yet he shall come to his end and none shall help him.

Thus ends the last "wonderful" power of the old Roman Empire. Can this be other than France? Then look well to this one fact. Our destiny is fixed with his coming to his end; for then Michael stands up—the time of trouble comes, and deliverance to all whose names are found written in the book. And many of the sleepers of the dust shall awake. They are awakened to everlasting life. Yes, the poor pilgrim's journey will be ended—their vile bodies changed and fashioned like Christ's glorious body. Children will come, Mothers will live again, and the inhabitants will not say, I am sick. In view of which I sometimes sing the following a little altered from the original, in the tune of "Willie on the dark blue sea."

My latest sun is sinking fast,
My race is nearly run,
My strongest trials now are past,
My triumph is begun.

CHORUS.
O come, angel band, around me stand,
I come, behold I come,
O, bear me away on your snowy wings,
To my own immortal home.

I know I'm nearing the holy ranks
Of friends and kindred dear,
For I brush the dews on Jordan's banks,
The crossing must be near.

I've almost gained my heavenly home,
My spirit loudly sings,
The holy ones, behold they come,
I hear the sound of wings.

O, hear the waiting saints to Him
Who bled and died for me,
Whose blood now cleanses from all sin,
And gives me victory.

Notice to the Brethren at Large.

I am aware that a number of the brethren and sisters are waiting till I come round with a supply of my books to get a copy; but as my movements are very uncertain, I cannot promise when I could supply them personally. However, if any one will send $5.00 to Bro. Jno. F. Cotton, at the "Crisis" office, he will send them ten copies by express, thus saving ten cents on each copy, beside the postage. Even to those ordering five copies, I will let them have them at the same rate. Furthermore, I am yet indebted for the publication of this edition, and I hope the friends will assist me by purchasing the book with advantage to themselves.

I was told by a brother that the poultice receipt was of more value to his family than the price of the book. Come, brethren and sisters, now is the time.

The Conference Love-Feast.

The love-feast at the Meionaon on Sunday morning was indeed the flower of the conference, and a feast to all who were present; and the query arises, why is it always the case that the love-feast is more interesting than any other meeting? Simply because the Spirit of God has free course, and is not clogged by long prayers and doctrinal discussions, which often are great drawbacks upon the spirituality of a prayer meeting.

God has no special gifts, or graces, or blessings, for a love-feast, any more than for any other meeting; and if the rule of short prayers and exhortations was adopted in all our meetings, they would be much more salutary. Long prayers in the closet, and short ones in the meeting, is a good motto.

D. N. SMITH.

SCOFFERS.—The following is from the Troy Daily Times, of April 15th:—

"The Second Adventists of Boston—those who await the hourly coming of the Messiah—have been in session for several days past, on the strength of the exciting news from the South. Their meetings are poorly attended, as the wilful and perverse Athenians prefer rather to deal with the hard facts daily being developed, than with the intangible theories of a coterie of enthusiastic monomaniacs. Besides, has not Dr. Cumming of London, the great high priest of Second Adventism, definitely fixed 1867 as the period for the termination of all things worldly?"

Obituary Notice.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at the residence of his cousin, A. Deyo, Strawberry Point, Iowa, Feb. 11th, 1861, Bro. J. P. DEYO, aged twenty-seven years, eight months and three days.

J. P. was sick about four weeks. His disease was hernia, and he suffered much toward the last, but had his senses till long after he could speak; and within a few minutes of his last, he gave directions concerning his affairs and funeral, and who he wanted to preach. As it had rained, and the water was very high, they could not gratify his choice, which was Eld. Moses Chandler or Peter Hough, if they could be had. A Methodist preacher of this place, who preached from 1 Cor. 13: 13, gave a very consistent discourse to a very large congregation. We feel his loss very deeply, both in our church and community, as he had many warm friends. He seemed anxious to die, that he might rest and be free from pain, and said, "I shall not have to sleep long in the ground, for Jesus will come." He bid each one farewell, and exhorted them to meet him in the kingdom. His hope was in the resurrection.

Some years ago he came out in Galesburgh, Mich., and united with a Congregational church of that place, and came to Iowa four years ago, where he heard the writer preach the resurrection and life only through Jesus Christ, which led him into the true light and obedience of the commandments more fully; and when this church was organized, two years ago last fall, by Eld. Sheldon, he was one of the eleven that formed the church. He has lived consistent, and sustained the cause of Christ by his life and influence, as well as by temporal means.

It was through his influence that C. L. Deyo, of Michigan, his brother, was led to see the grand truths of the gospel, by sending him letters, the Crisis, and tracts, and now he is proclaiming it to the world.

We do not mourn as those that have no hope. May this circumstance lead us, his relatives, to more nearness to one another and to the Lord, so that our work may be done and well done, that we may all meet in the kingdom of God. PETER S. W. DEYO.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices of the 7th instant.]

Very warlike rumors continued to prevail in Paris. The army is being drilled for war, and provided with baggage and wagons.

A difficulty had arisen in the conclusions of the treaty between France and Belgium.

The Patrie says that the Emperor Napoleon had written to Prince Murat, disapproving his recent manifesto relative to the Neapolitan crown.

All the Marshals of France were summoned to attend an extraordinary council at the Tuileries on the 8th inst. The Sunday Paris journals are calling for the dissolution of the Corps Legislatif, owing to the large number of legitimists and ultramontanists in that body.

The Bourse on the 5th was firmer at 67f. 75c.

The London Post asserts that military operations, in which Garibaldi is to take part, are on the point of commencing, and that the leaders of the combined Hungarian Diet will pass a vote recalling the Hungarian troops from all parts of the Austrian empire for concentration in Hungary alone. This, if complied with, would strip Venetia of the flower of the Austrian forces, and if opposed by Austria, the Hungarians would refuse to pay taxes, and thus commence insurrection.

Sweden and Denmark have recognized Victor Emmanuel as King of Italy.

Increased agitation prevailed at Warsaw.

The American news, it is said, caused considerable excitement, and promised to give a great impetus to the cotton growers.

The famine accounts continue to be very serious.

It is reported that the English naval division has left Malta for the Ionian Islands, where agitation increases.

[Advices of the 9th instant.]

FRANCE.

The Opinione Nationale says that in the event of a collision, France has secured the support of Russia, and Austria that of England.

Warlike rumors are prevalent in Paris.

It is stated that the army at Lyons is to be increased to 100,000 men, and that Canrobert is to have 80,000 men along the eastern frontier.

ITALY.

Letters are warlike. It is denied that Garibaldi went to Turin on the invitation of Count Cavour, and it is asserted that he is opposed to Cavour's policy.

An address has been presented to Garibaldi by Mazzinians, inviting him to action, and at his bidding the half million of men be called for will all be ready. Garibaldi's reply was vague. The genuineness of the document was doubted.

The Duke Caxinillo was arrested at Naples in consequence of two letters received by him from Francis Second. Several members of the Bourbon committee and two priests were arrested. It is rumored that a conspiracy had been discovered, in which five bishops were implicated.

The Pope has recovered his health.

DOMESTIC.

Burning of Harper's Ferry Arsenal.

15,000 STAND OF ARMS DESTROYED.

Carlisle, Pa., April 19. Lieut. Jones, late in command of Harper's Ferry, arrived with his command, forty three men, at 3 o'clock this afternoon. The lieutenant having been advised that a force of 2500 troops were ordered by the Governor to take possession of Harper's Ferry, and finding his position untenable, under the direction of the War Department, he destroyed all the munitions of war, the armory arsenal and buildings.

He withdrew his command under cover of night, and almost in the presence of 2500 troops. He lost three men. Fifteen thousand stands of arms were destroyed. His command made a forced march of thirty miles last night, from Harper's Ferry to Hagarstown, Md. They look much worn and fatigued. They were enthusiastically received by the entire population of this place.

APPREHENSION OF A NEGRO INSURRECTION.—New York, April 19.—A dispatch from Wilmington, Delaware, to the Tribune, states that a merchant captain direct from Pensacola gives information that Fort Pickens now contains 800 men and seven vessels lying outside. A large number of Southern troops arrived on Saturday. There are still many Union men in Florida.

A bloody negro insurrection is apprehended in the cotton States.

A gentleman who passed through Tennessee on Wednesday, says the American flag was flying everywhere.

In Virginia loud threats to lynch Union men are heard everywhere.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Times says: "I have reliable intelligence that over three thousand men have been enrolled in Baltimore, pledged to oppose the passage through that city of troops to Washington. Their organization is secret, and for that reason cannot be very effective. The New York troops were notified of the fact by telegraph to-day, and warned to be on the lookout, ready for emergencies."

New York, April 19. The Post's Washington dispatch says that the rebellion in Virginia is formidable.

Several Northern men have been expelled from Richmond, narrowly escaping with their lives. The confederate flag is flying there.

Washington, April 19th. It is certain that the Massachusetts regiment was attacked in Baltimore, and fired on by their assailants in Pratt street. Showers of paving stones rained on their heads. They are on the way here. It is certain that Harper's Ferry was burned up, and the arms destroyed by Capt. Jones, who has retreated to Carlisle.

The Sixth Regiment has arrived, leaving one hundred men, with the Band, at Baltimore. In the fight, two soldiers were killed and sixteen wounded.

It is reliably stated by parties from Richmond that the secession ordinance was publicly proclaimed yesterday. The vote is kept secret.

The Massachusetts troops arrived this evening, and are quartered in the Capitol. Several of them were wounded in Baltimore and sent to the infirmary, while others who were injured in that city were on duty with their comrades.

New York, April 19. A special dispatch from Martinburg to the world, says that Virginia troops to the number of 1500 have possession of the town at Harper's Ferry. Cannon are planted on the adjacent hills and soldiers are distributed in all directions. There is said not to be a Union man there. The train was stopped for troops that might be on their way to the arsenal, but after examination, was allowed to proceed between two files of soldiers. All the Federal officers in the town have resigned. It is asserted that the force here will not provoke a collision unless an attempt is made to dislodge them. The Confederate flag was raised at Point of Rocks in Maryland to-day.

The Evening Post learns from a reliable source that Jeff. Davis, at the head of the Confederate Army, is within twenty-four hours' march of Washington.

DEPARTURE OF NEW YORK TROOPS.

New York, April 21. Steamer Baltic, took the 12th Regiment, and the R. R. Cuyler, the 71st Regiment, the Coatzacoalcos the Rhode Islanders, the Columbia the 6th, the Ariel takes the 2d Battalion Massachusetts Rifles and some regulars.

The Monticello, Marion, James Adger and Roanoke have steam up, ready to start at a moment's notice.

The above regiments marched down Broadway, about one o'clock, embarking at two o'clock. The scene on Broadway and at the piers defies description. Probably from four to five hundred thousand people witnessed their departure, perfectly wild with joyful and patriotic enthusiasm, though tinctured by sorrow by relatives.

New York, April 21. The harbor was the scene of great excitement as the fleet left. All the piers, landings, and housetops in this city, Jersey, Hoboken, and Brooklyn, and the Battery, were crowded with people and thousands of boats filled with people saluted them as they steamed down the bay. Flags were dipped, cannons roared, bells rung, and steam whistles shrilly saluted, and thousands sent up cheers of parting.

A gentleman from Washington states that Gen. Scott remarked yesterday, that he had ten days the start of Jeff Davis and means to keep it!

Philadelphia, April 19. The New York seventh regiment, numbering 991 men by actual count, has arrived. They received a continuous ovation all through New Jersey. Cannon were fired, and houses illuminated. They reached here late to-night. The streets were thronged to witness them. It is reported that they will go on board the Keystone State for Washington.

Philadelphia, April 21. A messenger who left Washington yesterday, reports all quiet there, but it was rumored that the President was about to call for additional troops from the faithful States to make up the deficiency caused by States refusing to furnish their quota.

A party of armed men will leave to-morrow to repair the bridges on the Baltimore road.

Philadelphia, April 22. The excitement growing out of the rebel war, is greater than ever. There is a decided determination to push the contest to an extremity. This city is patriotic and valorous as ever.

The outrages in Baltimore to the Massachusetts troops has kindled a flame here which will not be readily quenched.

New York, April 22. The War excitement in this city continues unabated. Enlistments are actively progressing. This city is ready to put 25,000 good fighting men into the field at the earliest notice.

The Philadelphia Press says it is expected that ten thousand men will be encamped in Pennsylvania by the 23d inst., in response to the call of the Government.

A private letter received in this city from Pittsburg, Pa., says, under date of 16th instant:

"The war excitement is intense. Our city will tender 5000 men. We could raise 10,000 in the city and county, if required. Two companies, of 110 men each, leave for Washington to-day; three or four will go to-morrow if accepted.

Harrisburg, April 19. The Governor has ordered ten thousand suits of clothing made in Philadelphia, and three thousand pairs of blankets. The encampment here is alive. Tents are erecting rapidly; twelve hundred men are encamped.

April 20. A dispatch from Gen. Butler, received at this date, confirms the previous report that but two Massachusetts soldiers were killed, one of them by a piece of iron thrown from a foundry, and it states that most of the wounded have arrived at Washington with their comrades, from which the inference must be that their wounds are not dangerous.

Gen. Butler telegraphs also of our men: "Troops fought manfully. No man offered to run. They bore the attack with the utmost patience until an eminent citizen of Baltimore told them to fire. They did so. Part of the mob responded with fire. The rest scattered. All have arrived at Washington except six injured, who are well cared for at Baltimore."

His excellency, the Governor, has sent the following dispatch to the Mayor of Baltimore:—

"I pray you to cause the bodies of our Massachusetts soldiers dead in Baltimore to be immediately laid out, preserved with ice, and tenderly sent forward by express to me. All expenses will be paid by this Commonwealth." JOHN A. ANDREW, Governor of Massachusetts.

Wilmington, Del., April 22. A naval officer who arrived here this afternoon says the steamer S. R. Spaulding, from Boston, landed a portion of her troops very quietly at Fort McHenry. Baltimorians were waiting to seize her, but she started down the Bay and frustrated their designs.

Annapolis is in charge of the Sixth Massachusetts Regiment.

Passengers from the South on the train just passed say all is quiet at Baltimore, and the turnpike clear of secessionists.

New York, April 22. Collector Barney states that a gentleman officially connected with the government says he has information from Washington that an official correspondence has been opened there with Baltimore, resulting in the undertaking by Baltimore to repair the railroad bridges and telegraph lines, and to keep communication open for passengers, mails, dispatches and troops.

Captain Lowry of the ship Julia E. Thayer, from Hampton Roads 21st, reports as follows: That pilot informed him that the Norfolk and Gosport Navy Yard was in flames when leaving the roads.

Newark, Del., April 22. It is reported that a naval officer from Norfolk says the frigates Merrimac and Germantown have both been scuttled, and the Navy Yard burned, by order of the Government.

Another account says the Merrimac got out with great difficulty, the floats having been ingeniously constructed.

Philadelphia, April 22. There is a vague report that Fort McHenry was shelling Baltimore at midnight.

New York, April 22. A lot of uniforms for the Southern Army was seized at the store of Nubrick & Brother, Dey street, to-day.

It appears that a diabolical attempt was made to poison the Massachusetts volunteers on board the State of Maine, when here on Friday evening, by sending poisoned brandy on board. One died, and four or five others have been under its influence, but will probably recover. The perpetrator of the outrage is unknown.

New Orleans, April 22. The free colored population have tendered their services to the Governor in defense of the State. A meeting is to be held to-night to adopt measures to clear the city of abolitionists. A number have been arrested.

The grand Union demonstration in New York, Saturday afternoon, April 20th, is said to have been the largest meeting ever held on this continent, if not the most enthusiastic.

SHE SOLD HER COW.—The Herald says that in one of the companies attached to the regiment of Col. Jones, which left last evening, was a newly enlisted recruit, the eldest son of a widow in one of the country towns, and who to-day followed her son to the city to take a last look of him until he returns from the war. She did not come to urge him to return to his peaceful home and pursuits, but rather to cheer him with a mother's blessing. Fearing that her son might want for money during his absence, the noble woman raised a sum of money by the sale of a cow that she owned, and being admitted inside the lines just before the troops left the State House, she pressed the money upon her boy.—It is almost needless to say that her offer was declined, as the Massachusetts troops will come to no want. Such self devotion and patriotism is worthy of the mother's of the revolution.

H. L. HASTINGS, [illegible] Providence, R. I.

January, 1860.

of the king, while all authority but that of sans culottes seemed abolished. The immense wealth and lands of those who fled including that of the Orleans family was "divided" among them "for gain." Thus has infidel France filled the mould of prophecy to the letter as no other power has done since the 1260 days of Papal rule has expired. Simple declarations in prophecy, and simple facts in history, to corroborate the same must come in their chronological order. Verse 40.—At the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him and the king of the north come against him. At the time of the end. That is, at a point of time when signs and events as well as the prophetic periods denote the near approach of the end. The king of the south, etc. As France is the power here referred to, an alliance on the part of Spain (south) and England, (north) would, with the other features of this prediction, fill the prophecy. "This is a description of an alliance entered into by the king of Spain on the south and Great Britain on the north for six years."—Wm. Miller. Spain did "push," and Bonaparte said "it was that unhappy war with Spain which ruined him." It cost him 300,000 men. England did come "against him like a whirlwind," it struck at all points and in all directions. It drove a million of soldiers upon the coast of France, and the mighty power, the "willful king" power, lies prostrate at the feet of the allies. And as Napoleon I. seems to have traveled over the precise ground which the prophetic pencil had painted out, till we reach the 45th verse, it was supposed that he had filled the picture. The wound and the cure, or the "deadly wound healed," was not specified by Daniel's instructor, but reserved for a more full development in the Revelation to John. And while Napoleon III. as the counterpart of Napoleon I., is walking precisely in the steps of his father, (for this seems to be the fact) we discover that prophecy has marked his last and final act thus, "He shall plant the tabernacle of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain." His career was not up at Waterloo or St. Helena. His deadly wound must be healed, and the burrowed fox must have a second chase and finally fall "between the seas in the glorious holy mountain." To this point then we will turn our attention, for to this point he must come and then, and not till then, will the chase be up.

Is he heading for the mountain? When Louis Napoleon became Emperor of France he took the title "Defender of the faith" and protector of the "Holy Places." Having thus assumed the guardianship of Jerusalem he began at once to intrigue with the Sultan, and in 1853 it was announced that the Turkish government had determined to sustain the cause of the Romish or French church against that of the Greek or Russian; and to make over the interests of those places to the French Emperor. This decision served in a measure to bring about the Russian war. Says Victor Hugo, "Take away intrigue, the so-called affair of the Holy Places, take away the keys, take away the desire to be consecrated, take away the present to be made to the Pope, (the keys) and you have no Eastern war." Being foiled in his attempt then, he is now about to accomplish his darling object through (to him) the fortunate affair of the Syrian massacre. Having attained the assent of the principal European governments to send a contingent force, not to exceed 6,000 men, the Emperor lost no time, but sent out a force sufficient to take the matter entirely under his own control, and is accomplishing at once, what Napoleon I. could not effect with forty thousand men.

As Ahab according to prophecy must fall at Ramoth-Gilead, so the Ahab of the Apochalyptic Jezebel must fall in "the glorious holy mountain." The importance of this Syrian occupation is thus set forth in the Paris Seicle: "Now that the Syrian expedition is decided upon by common agreement, we must not fear to declare its importance, and to examine its consequences. The chief thing is done. It was necessary that Europe (rather France) should intervene in the East. She is on her way thither. God will watch over her fleets and over her soldiers; these christian fleets go to accomplish the will of God. We must not delude ourselves. We have just embarked in an enterprise of very long duration. See what happened in the case of Rome. When France sent a division there in 1849, it was a question of only a rapid operation of a momentary stay. Eleven years have already passed by and we know not when nor how our troops will quit Rome." "France has already 12000 men in Syria. Bonaparte is already in the closest connection with the Arabs under Abd-el-kadar, and with the Egyptian government. It is said all of her troops are at his disposal. The occupation of Jerusalem and the Holy Land is only a question of time." Then comes his end. Yet he shall come to his end and none shall help him.

Thus ends the last "wonderful" power of the old Roman Empire. Can this be other than France? Then look well to this one fact. Our destiny is fixed with his coming to his end; for then Michael stands up—the time of trouble comes, and deliverance to all whose names are found written in the book. And many of the sleepers of the dust shall awake. They are awakened to everlasting life. Yes, the poor pilgrim's journey will be ended—their vile bodies changed and fashioned like Christ's glorious body. Children will come, Mothers will live again, and the inhabitants will not say, I am sick. In view of which I sometimes sing the following a little altered from the original, to the tune of "Willie on the dark blue sea."

My latest sun is sinking fast,
My race is nearly run,
My strongest trials now are past,
My triumph is begun.

CHORUS.

O come, angel band, around me stand,
I come, behold I come,
O, bear me away on your snowy wings,
To my own immortal home.

I know I'm nearing the holy ranks
Of friends and kindred dear,
For I brush the dews on Jordan's banks,
The crossing must be near.

I've almost gained my heavenly home,
My spirit loudly sings,
The holy ones, behold they come,
I hear the sound of wings.

O, hear the waiting saints to Him
Who bled and died for me,
Whose blood now cleanses from all sin,
And gives me victory.

Notice to the Brethren at Large.

I am aware that a number of the brethren and sisters are waiting till I come round with a supply of my books to get a copy; but as my movements are very uncertain, I cannot promise when I could supply them personally. However, if any one will send $5.00 to Bro. Jno. F. Cotton, at the "Crisis" office, he will send them ten copies by express, thus saving ten cents on each copy, beside the postage. Even to those ordering five copies, I will let them have them at the same rate. Furthermore, I am yet indebted for the publication of this edition, and I hope the friends will assist me by purchasing the book with advantage to themselves.

I was told by a brother that the poultice receipt was of more value to his family than the price of the book. Come, brethren and sisters, now is the time.

The Conference Love-Feast.

The love-feast at the Meionaon on Sunday morning was indeed the flower of the conference, and a feast to all who were present; and the query arises, why is it always the case that the love-feast is more interesting than any other meeting? Simply because the Spirit of God has free course, and is not clogged by long prayers and doctrinal discussions, which often are great drawbacks upon the spirituality of a prayer meeting.

God has no special gifts, or graces, or blessings, for a love-feast, any more than for any other meeting; and if the rule of short prayers and exhortations was adopted in all our meetings, they would be much more salutary. Long prayers in the closet, and short ones in the meeting, is a good motto.

D. N. SMITH.

SCOFFERS.—The following is from the Troy Daily Times, of April 15th:—

"The Second Adventists of Boston—those who await the hourly coming of the Messiah—have been in session for several days past, on the strength of the exciting news from the South. Their meetings are poorly attended, as the wilful and perverse Athenians prefer rather to deal with the hard facts daily being developed, than with the intangible theories of a coterie of enthusiastic monomaniacs. Besides, has not Dr. Cumming of London, the great high priest of Second Adventism, definitely fixed 1867 as the period for the termination of all things worldly?"

Obituary Notice.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at the residence of his cousin, A. Deyo, Strawberry Point, Iowa, Feb. 11th, 1861, Bro. J. P. DEYO, aged twenty-seven years, eight months and three days.

J. P. was sick about four weeks. His disease was hernia, and he suffered much toward the last, but had his senses till long after he could speak; and within a few minutes of his last, he gave directions concerning his affairs and funeral, and who he wanted to preach. As it had rained, and the water was very high, they could not gratify his choice, which was Eld. Moses Chandler or Peter Hough, if they could be had. A Methodist preacher of this place, who preached from 1 Cor. 13: 13, gave a very consistent discourse to a very large congregation. We feel his loss very deeply, both in our church and community, as he had many warm friends. He seemed anxious to die, that he might rest and be free from pain, and said, "I shall not have to sleep long in the ground, for Jesus will come." He bid each one farewell, and exhorted them to meet him in the kingdom. His hope was in the resurrection.

Some years ago he came out in Galesburgh, Mich., and united with a Congregational church of that place, and came to Iowa four years ago, where he heard the writer preach the resurrection and life only through Jesus Christ, which led him into the true light and obedience of the commandments more fully; and when this church was organized, two years ago last fall, by Eld. Sheldon, he was one of the eleven that formed the church. He has lived consistent, and sustained the cause of Christ by his life and influence, as well as by temporal means.

It was through his influence that C. I. Deyo, of Michigan, his brother, was led to see the grand truths of the gospel, by sending him letters, the Crisis, and tracts, and now he is proclaiming it to the world.

We do not mourn as those that have no hope. May this circumstance lead us, his relatives, to more nearness to one another and to the Lord, so that our work may be done and well done, that we may all meet in the kingdom of God. PETER S. W. DEYO.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices of the 7th instant.]

Very warlike rumors continued to prevail in Paris. The army is being drilled for war, and provided with baggage and wagons.

A difficulty had arisen in the conclusions of the treaty between France and Belgium.

The Patrie says that the Emperor Napoleon had written to Prince Murat, disapproving his recent manifesto relative to the Neapolitan crown.

All the Marshals of France were summoned to attend an extraordinary council at the Tuileries on the 8th inst. The Sunday Paris journals are calling for the dissolution of the Corps Legislatif, owing to the large number of legitimists and ultramontanists in that body.

The Bourse on the 5th was firmer at 67f. 75c.

The London Post asserts that military operations, in which Garibaldi is to take part, are on the point of commencing, and that the leaders of the combined Hungarian Diet will pass a vote recalling the Hungarian troops from all parts of the Austrian empire for concentration in Hungary alone. This, if complied with, would strip Venetia of the flower of the Austrian forces, and if opposed by Austria, the Hungarians would refuse to pay taxes, and thus commence insurrection.

Sweden and Denmark have recognised Victor Emmanuel as King of Italy.

Increased agitation prevailed at Warsaw.

The American news, it is said, caused considerable excitement, and promised to give a great impetus to the cotton growers.

The famine accounts continue to be very serious.

It is reported that the English naval division has left Malta for the Ionian Islands, where agitation increases.

[Advices of the 9th instant.]

FRANCE.

The Opinione Nationale says that in the event of a collision, France has secured the support of Russia, and Austria that of England.

Warlike rumors are prevalent in Paris.

It is stated that the army at Lyons is to be increased to 100,000 men, and that Canrobert is to have 80,000 men along the eastern frontier.

ITALY.

Letters are warlike. It is denied that Garibaldi went to Turin on the invitation of Count Cavour, and it is asserted that he is opposed to Cavour's policy.

An address has been presented to Garibaldi by Mazzinians, inviting him to action, and at his bidding the half million of men he called for will all be ready. Garibaldi's reply was vague. The genuineness of the document was doubted.

The Duke Caxanillo was arrested at Naples in consequence of two letters received by him from Francis Second. Several members of the Bourbon committee and two priests were arrested. It is rumored that a conspiracy had been discovered, in which five bishops were implicated.

The Pope has recovered his health.

DOMESTIC.

Burning of Harper's Ferry Arsenal.

15,000 STAND OF ARMS DESTROYED.

Carlisle, Pa., April 19. Lieut. Jones, late in command of Harper's Ferry, arrived with his command, forty three men, at 3 o'clock this afternoon. The Lieutenant having been advised that a force of 2500 troops were ordered by the Governor to take possession of Harper's Ferry, and finding his position untenable, under the direction of the War Department, he destroyed all the munitions of war, the armory arsenal and buildings.

He withdrew his command under cover of night, and almost in the presence of 2500 troops. He lost three men. Fifteen thousand stands of arms were destroyed. His command made a forced march of thirty miles last night, from Harper's Ferry to Hagarstown, Md. They look much worn and fatigued. They were enthusiastically received by the entire population of this place.

APPREHENSION OF A NEGRO INSURRECTION.—New York, April 19—A dispatch from Wilmington, Delaware, to the Tribune, states that a merchant captain direct from Pensacola gives information that Fort Pickens now contains 800 men and seven vessels lying outside. A large number of Southern troops arrived on Saturday. There are still many Union men in Florida.

A bloody negro insurrection is apprehended in the cotton States.

A gentleman who passed through Tennessee on Wednesday, says the American flag was flying everywhere.

In Virginia loud threats to lynch Union men are heard everywhere.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Times says: "I have reliable intelligence that over three thousand men have been enrolled in Baltimore, pledged to oppose the passage through that city of troops to Washington. Their organization is secret, and for that reason cannot be very effective. The New York troops were notified of the fact by telegraph to-day, and warned to be on the lookout, ready for emergencies."

New York, April 19. The Post's Washington dispatch says that the rebellion in Virginia is formidable.

Several Northern men have been expelled from Richmond, narrowly escaping with their lives. The confederate flag is flying there.

Washington, April 19th. It is certain that the Massachusetts regiment was attacked in Baltimore, and fired on by their assailants in Pratt street. Showers of paving stones rained on their heads. They are on the way here. It is certain that Harper's Ferry was burned up, and the arms destroyed by Capt. Jones, who has retreated to Carlisle.

The Sixth Regiment has arrived, leaving one hundred men, with the Band, at Baltimore. In the fight, two soldiers were killed and sixteen wounded.

It is reliably stated by parties from Richmond that the secession ordinance was publicly proclaimed yesterday. The vote is kept secret.

The Massachusetts troops arrived this evening, and are quartered in the Capitol. Several of them were wounded in Baltimore and sent to the infirmary, while others who were injured in that city were on duty with their comrades.

New York, April 19. A special dispatch from Martinburg to the world, says that Virginia troops to the number of 1500 have possession of the town at Harper's Ferry. Cannon are planted on the adjacent hills and soldiers are distributed in all directions. There is said not to be a Union man there. The train was stopped for troops that might be on their way to the arsenal, but after examination, was allowed to proceed between two files of soldiers. All the Federal officers in the town have resigned. It is asserted that the force here will not provoke a collision unless an attempt is made to dislodge them. The Confederate flag was raised at Point of Rocks in Maryland to-day.

The Evening Post learns from a reliable source that Jeff. Davis, at the head of the Confederate Army, is within twenty-four hours' march of Washington.

DEPARTURE OF NEW YORK TROOPS.

New York, April 21. Steamer Baltic, took the 12th Regiment, and the R. R. Cuyler, the 71st Regiment, the Coatzacoalcos the Rhode Islanders, the Columbia the 6th, the Ariel takes the 2d Battallion Massachusetts Rifles and some regulars.

The Montiello, Marion, James Adger and Roanoke have steam up, ready to start at a moment's notice.

The above regiments marched down Broadway, about one o'clock, embarking at two o'clock. The scene on Broadway and at the piers defies description. Probably from four to five hundred thousand people witnessed their departure, perfectly wild with joyful and patriotic enthusiasm, though tinctured by sorrow by relatives.

New York, April 21. The harbor was the scene of great excitement as the fleet left. All the piers, landings, and housetops in this city, Jersey, Hoboken, and Brooklyn, and the Battery, were crowded with people and thousands of boats filled with people saluted them as they steamed down the bay. Flags were dipped, cannons roared, bells rung, and steam whistles shrilly saluted, and thousands sent up cheers of parting.

A gentleman from Washington states that Gen. Scott remarked yesterday, that he had ten days the start of Jeff Davis and means to keep it!

Philadelphia, April 19. The New York seventh regiment, numbering 991 men by actual count, has arrived. They received a continuous ovation all through New Jersey. Cannon were fired, and houses illuminated. They reached here late to-night. The streets were thronged to witness them. It is reported that they will go on board the Keystone State for Washington.

Philadelphia, April 21. A messenger who left Washington yesterday, reports all quiet there, but it was rumored that the President was about to call for additional troops from the faithful States to make up the deficiency caused by States refusing to furnish their quota.

A party of armed men will leave to-morrow to repair the bridges on the Baltimore road.

Philadelphia, April 22. The excitement growing out of the rebel war, is greater than ever. There is a decided determination to push the contest to an extremity. This city is patriotic and valorous as ever.

The outrages in Baltimore to the Massachusetts troops has kindled a flame here which will not be readily quenched.

New York, April 22 The War excitement in this city continues unabated. Enlistments are actively progressing. This city is ready to put 25,000 good fighting men into the field at the earliest notice.

The Philadelphia Press says it is expected that ten thousand men will be encamped in Pennsylvania by the 23d inst., in response to the call of the Government.

A private letter received in this city from Pittsburg, Pa., says, under date of 16th instant:

"The war excitement is intense. Our city will tender 5000 men. We could raise 10,000 in the city and county, if required. Two companies, of 110 men each, leave for Washington to-day; three or four will go to-morrow if accepted.

Harrisburg, April 19. The Governor has ordered ten thousand suits of clothing made in Philadelphia, and three thousand pairs of blankets. The encampment here is alive. Tents are erecting rapidly; twelve hundred men are encamped.

April 20. A dispatch from Gen. Butler, received at this date, confirms the previous report that but two Massachusetts soldiers were killed, one of them by a piece of iron thrown from a foundry, and it states that most of the wounded have arrived at Washington with their comrades, from which the inference must be that their wounds are not dangerous.

Gen. Butler telegraphs also of our men: "Troops fought manfully. No man offered to run. They bore the attack with the utmost patience, until prominent citizens of Baltimore told them to fire. They did so. Part of the mob responded with fire. The rest scattered. All have arrived at Washington except six injured, who are well cared for at Baltimore."

His excellency, the Governor, has sent the following dispatch to the Mayor of Baltimore —

"I pray you to cause the bodies of our Massachusetts soldiers dead in Baltimore to be immediately laid out, preserved with ice, and tenderly sent forward by express to me. All expenses will be paid by this Commonwealth." JOHN A. ANDREW,
Governor of Massachusetts.

Wilmington, Del., April 22. A naval officer who arrived here this afternoon says the steamer S. R. Spaulding, from Boston, landed a portion of her troops very quietly at Fort McHenry. Baltimorians were waiting to seize her, but she started down the Bay and frustrated their designs.

Annapolis is in charge of the Sixth Massachusetts Regiment.

Passengers from the South on the train just passed say all is quiet at Baltimore, and the turnpike clear of secessionists.

New York, April 22. Collector Barney states that a gentleman officially connected with the government says he has information from Washington that an official correspondence has been opened there with Baltimore, resulting in the undertaking by Baltimore to repair the railroad bridges and telegraph lines, and to keep communication open for passengers, mails, dispatches and troops.

Captain Lowry of the ship Julia E. Thayer, from Hampton Roads 21st, reports as follows: That pilot informed him that the Norfolk and Gosport Navy Yard was in flames when leaving the roads.

Newark, Del., April 22. It is reported that a naval officer from Norfolk says the frigates Merrimac and Germantown have both been scuttled, and the Navy Yard burned, by order of the Government

Another account says the Merrimac got out with great difficulty, the floats having been ingeniously constructed.

Philadelphia, April 22. There is a vague report that Fort McHenry was shelling Baltimore at midnight.

New York, April 22. A lot of uniforms for the Southern Army was seized at the store of Nubrick & Brother, Dey street, to-day.

It appears that a diabolical attempt was made to poison the Massachusetts volunteers on board the State of Maine, when here on Friday evening, by sending poisoned brandy on board. One died, and four or five others have been under its influence, but will probably recover. The perpetrator of the outrage is unknown.

New Orleans, April 22. The free colored population have tendered their services to the Governor in defense of the State. A meeting is to be held to-night to adopt measures to clear the city of abolitionists. A number have been arrested.

The grand Union demonstration in New York, Saturday afternoon, April 20th, is said to have been the largest meeting ever held on this continent, if not the most enthusiastic.

SHE SOLD HER COW.—The Herald says that in one of the companies attached to the regiment of Col. Jones, which left last evening, was a newly enlisted recruit, the eldest son of a widow in one of the country towns, and who to-day followed her son to the city to take a last look of him until he returns from the war. She did not come to urge him to return to his peaceful home and pursuits, but rather to cheer him with a mother's blessing. Fearing that her son might want for money during his absence, the noble woman raised a sum of money by the sale of a cow that she owned, and being admitted inside the lines just before the troops left the State House, she pressed the money upon her boy. It is almost needless to say that her offer was declined, as the Massachusetts troops will come to no want. Such self devotion and patriotism is worthy of the mother's of the revolution.

For the Crisis.

There's ever one bright Star for Me.

Mid conflicts, griefs and fears,
Mid sorrows, sighs and tears,
Mid life's e'er varying scene,
When earthly hopes grow dim,
There's ever one peculiar star
That shines for me all bright and clear.

When disappointments sore
Tempt me to dark despair,
As o'er life's rugged way
My trembling footsteps stray,—
I turn my eye aloft and see
The brilliant star that shines for me.

From retrospection's mount
My mind past scenes recount,
Alternate smiles and tears
Fill up the by-gone years;
And sad regrets would banish peace,
Should this bright star its radiance cease.

Dear sinner, would you know
What 'tis that cheers me so
In trial's gloomy hour,
When storms of sorrow pour?
Yes, would ye know this lovely star,
This sure defence against despair?

Then see the lovely Lamb
On Calvary's mountain slain:
Behold the bloody tide
That issues from his side!
He died, that mortals he might save
From sin, corruption and the grave.

He died, but now he lives,
Eternal life to give
To all that seek his face,
And trust in God's free grace;
And when he comes to earth again,
The sanctified shall with him reign.

This glorious hope divine
With pleasing lustre shines
On life's meandering stream,
Amid earth's darkest scene;
It is the one peculiar star
That shines for me all bright and clear.

THE COMING STRUGGLE

Between the Church and the Powers of Darkness:

SHOWING THE MISSION AND DESTINY OF SPIRITUALISM.

No. 11.

THE BATTLE OF THE GREAT DAY OF GOD ALMIGHTY.

"And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue, Armageddon. (Some copies read, "They gathered.") And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were on the earth, so mighty an earthquake and so great. And the great city was divided into three parts and the cities of the nations fell; and great Babylon came in remembrance before God to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath. And every island fled away and the mountains were not found; and there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent (118 lbs.); and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great."—Rev. 16: 16—21.

It is very generally supposed that Babylon is destroyed before the Lord comes, but we learn from this chapter that Christ comes under the pouring out of the sixth vial and before the seventh is poured out the nations are gathered into the place of battle. Then the seventh is poured out upon them in this battle; and under this seventh and at the time of God's wrath upon all these nations, it is said that "Great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath." It may perhaps be said that the hating of the whore and making her desolate and naked, the eating of her flesh and burning her with fire, is done by the ten horns on the beast, (Rev. 17th chap.) and therefore it must be before this battle. I cannot see why this may not more likely be done in the battle while the "great tumult from the Lord shall be among them, and they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbor, and his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbor," when every man's sword shall be against his brother. But I cannot get along any other way with the order of events in this chapter, than to regard Christ's coming under the sixth vial and the wrath of God on Babylon under the seventh vial.

That the nations in this battle are the offensive party and have Christ in view as their object of attack, it is evident from the account of the battle as given in the 19th chap., where John says, "I saw the beast and the kings of the earth and their armies gathered together to make war against Him that sat on the horse and against his army." Here we are told that they gather to make war, and that their object of attack is him that sat on the horse, who, according to verse 16th, is "King of kings and Lord of lords." This idea is supported also by the passage in the 17th chap., stating that the ten kings "shall make war with the Lamb, but the Lamb shall overcome them; for he is Lord of lords and King of kings." There is also a portion of the Jews who have the hatred of this anti-christian mass, and who will have the protection of Christ in this battle. They will probably be such Jews as cling to the Bible and its God, though not to Jesus of Nazareth, probably. Yet expecting the Messiah to come about this time for their relief, they will receive him and find to their grief that it is the same Jesus of Nazareth whom they have all along rejected and despised.

This battle is prophesied of in various places in the Bible, which I will now quote or some of them, and show the leading features of the struggle that is coming and its importance as shown in the prominence given to it during thousands of years past, and as introducing the rest that remains for the people of God. I will first quote from Zech., 14th chap. Zechariah tells us that God shall "gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle"; that "the Lord shall go forth and fight against those nations"; that "his feet shall stand in that day on the Mount of Olives"; that "the Lord shall be King over all the earth in that day; there shall be one Lord and his name one," and that "those nations which fought against Jerusalem" shall suffer the terrible "plague" of having "their flesh consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes consume away in their holes, and their tongues consume away in their mouths." We are assured also that a great tumult from the Lord shall be among them; and they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbor, and his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbor.—Zech. 14th chap.

Joel alluded to this battle, telling us that God "will gather all nations and bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, (joining Jerusalem on the east) and will plead with them there for my people Israel." He notices in the following language the extensive preparations for the battle:—"Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles, prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near, let them come up. Beat your ploughshares into swords and your pruning hooks into spears: let the weak say, I am strong. Assemble yourselves and come all ye heathen and gather yourselves together round about: thither cause thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord. Let the heathen be wakened and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat, for there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about. Put ye in the sickle for the harvest is ripe; come, get you down for the press is full, the fats overflow, for their wickedness is great. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision, for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision. The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining. The Lord also shall roar out of Zion and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake, but the Lord will be the hope of his people and the strength of the children of Israel."—Joel 3d chap.

Daniel mentions in the 11th chap. a king (some copies read, "a certain king") "who shall do according to his will, and shall exalt himself and magnify himself above every God, and shall speak marvelous things against the God of gods, and shall proper till the indignation be accomplished. Neither shall he regard the God of his fathers, nor the desire of women, nor regard any God, for he shall magnify himself above all." Among other things "he shall cause them to rule over many and divide the land for gain"; and "he shall plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain; yet he shall come to his end and none shall help him. And at that time shall Michael (Christ) stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people, and there shall be a time of trouble such as there never was since there was a nation even to that same time. At that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book, and many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life, etc.—Dan. 11th chap.

This same king and his expedition to the mountains of Israel and also this battle of the Great Day is given by Ezekiel, 38th and 39th chaps., where he represents him as coming against the mountains and people of Israel "like a storm"—"like a cloud to cover the land—a great company and a mighty army," "in the latter days." He says further:—

"And it shall come to pass at the same time when God shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord God, that my fury shall come up in my face; for in my jealousy, and in the fire of my wrath have I spoken. Surely, in that day there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel. So that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the heavens, and the beasts of the field, and all creeping things that creep upon the earth, and all the men that are upon the face of the earth, shall shake at my presence, and the mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places (towers) shall fall, and every wall shall fall to the ground. And I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountain, saith the Lord God, every man's sword shall be against his brother. And I will plead with him, with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him and upon his bands and upon the many people that are with him an overflowing rain and great hailstones, fire and brimstone. Thus will I magnify myself and sanctify myself, and I will be known in the eyes of many nations and they shall know that I am the Lord." He says further,—"Thou shalt fall upon the mountains of Israel, thou and all thy bands and the people that are with thee. I will give these unto the ravenous birds of every sort, and to the beasts of the field to be devoured. Thou shalt fall upon the open field for I have spoken it saith the Lord God. And I will send a fire on Magog and among them that dwell carelessly in the isles; and they shall know that I am the Lord."

The Lord says by Jeremiah,—"For lo, I begin to bring evil on the city called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished; for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth, saith the Lord of hosts. Therefore prophesy against them all these words and say unto them, the Lord shall roar from on high, and utter his voice from his holy habitation. He shall mightily roar upon his habitation. He shall give a shout as they that tread the grapes against all the inhabitants of the earth. A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth. For the Lord hath a controversy with the nations. He will plead with all flesh. He will give them that are wicked to the sword, saith the Lord. Behold, evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth. And the slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth even to the other end of the earth. They shall not be lamented, neither gathered nor buried, they shall be dung on the ground." —Jer. 25: 29—33. Isaiah, in speaking of this battle in the last chapter of his prophecy says,—"The hand of the Lord shall be known toward his servants and his indignation toward his enemies. For behold, the Lord will come with fire and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury and his rebuke with flames of fire; for by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh."—Isa. 66: 14—16.

Another account of this battle is given in the close of the 15th chap. of Rev., where Christ is represented as coming "on a white cloud, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle." The account closes with the language,—"And another angel came out from the altar, which had power over fire, and cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying, 'Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe.' And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and cast it into the great winepress of the wrath of God. And the winepress was trodden without the city and blood came out of the winepress, even unto the horse' bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs."—Rev. 14: 14, 18—20.

The account of this battle as given in the 19th of Rev., shows, that God assembles "the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven," saying, "Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God, that ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses and them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great." (This call to the fowls is also noticed by Ezekiel in the 38th chap.) John then says,—"I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together, to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshiped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone. And the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth; and all the fowls were filled with their flesh." And I saw an angel come down from heaven having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand; and he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent which is the devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, etc."—Rev. 19th and 20th chaps.

These several accounts of this battle though often expressing the same things in different language may be found to harmonize as well as the accounts of any several persons among us concerning anything which may come under their observation. They differ in two respects: 1. In speaking of the same things they often differ in terms though agreeing in substance. 2. Some mention some things, others mention other things, and some mention nearly all things, while some things are mentioned by all.

The first difference is illustrated in the place of this battle:—Daniel says it shall be "between the seas in the glorious holy mountain." Ezekiel says it shall be "upon the mountains of Israel." Joel says it shall be in "the valley of Jehoshaphat" (joining Jerusalem on the east). In Rev. 14th, we learn that it shall be "without the city." In Rev. 19th, we learn that it shall be at a "place called Armageddon," which means, according to Dr. Cumming, "August City." In Zechariah we learn that they shall be gathered "against Jerusalem.' All these may point to the valley of Jehoshaphat though only one uses this term.

As to the last difference we find in Ezek. and Rev. 19th an allusion to the call of the fowls, but nowhere else. In Ezek. and Rev. 16th, we have the hail. In Ezek. we have "a great shaking." Joel says, the heavens and the earth shall shake," and Rev. 16th says "there was a great earthquake such as never was since men were on the earth so mighty, and so great." In Ezekiel we read that "every man's sword shall be against his brother"; in Zech. that "a great tumult from the Lord shall be among them, and they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbor, and his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbor." Ezek. mentioned a "pestilence" and Zech. a "plague" in which their flesh consumes away while they stand upon their feet, their eyes consume away in their holes and their tongues in their mouths. Most of them mention the sword, and fire, and "all nations," and the Lord and his "voice," and all mention his triumph.

As the nations were gathered to this battle by the efforts of the dragon, the beast, and the false prophet, who sent out the three unclean spirits to the nations, it seems that they are more responsible in the deception, and should suffer a severer punishment than the mass: and so it is. The beast is the only one of these three parties who is represented as in actual service in the battle and is probably at the head of the political power. The false prophet is represented as miracle-worker, or diviner, to the beast, and probably the head of the spiritual power. "These both are cast alive into a lake of fire, burning with brimstone." The dragon seems to be head over all as false Christ"—"the Man of Sin"—"Wicked One," etc. I think he is first or at the head of all, for he is mentioned first of the three parties as being of the first importance in speaking of their sending the spirits forth to assemble the nations to this battle. But he must be at the head of this whole arrangement, for when he is bound as the dragon he is explained to be the Devil and Satan who would not occupy any other than the first place—not even the second—in the management of this his most important work. That this dragon is here on earth is very clear; and that he is Satan himself is evident from the following reasons.

1. The dragon is explained to be the Devil and Satan; and since the explanation of a symbolic term is designed to give its literal expression, the terms Devil and Satan are to be understood in their most literal signification.

2. It must be Satan, literally, for no earthly being could exist, bound, or not bound, during a thousand years.

3. It must be Satan, for he is charged with being the deceiver of the nations on this occasion, and is bound that he should not deceive them during the thousand years.

4. It must be Satan, since he is bound as the Devil and Satan, and is ever afterward spoken of as him. He is loosed out of his prison and goes out to deceive the nations at the end of the thousand years as "Satan"; and deceiving them he is taken as the Devil and cast into the lake of fire where the beast and false prophet were a thousand years before. If God did not bind the real Satan, or the Devil, here in bringing the dragon as the Devil and Satan, then the real deceiver of the nations will be at large during the Millennium, and God is taking all this precaution lest some "under-strapper" of his shall be at liberty to deceive the world during the thousand years; but if this is the real deceiver of the world, then he will be on the earth visibly before the Lord comes, as the dragon, false Christ, etc.

The Spiritualists look for a supernatural being in their "Coming Man." They say he is unknown to man and most of the spirits. And Paul says the Man of Sin is the Son of Perdition. L.

Lines.

"There ariseth light in the darkness."

When my heart o'er sin is grieving,
And dark tempests round me lower;
When the tempter comes deceiving,
With his strong, enchanting power;
When kind friends around are falling,
Worn by years or slow decay,
Or some pestilence prevailing,
Bears them swift in death away;
When, indeed, all earth arises,
One vast graveyard to my sight,
Yawning for the whole creation,
With a longing appetite;
When all these dark shadows gather
O'er my pathway here in life—
Faith, with words of consolation,
Comes to cheer me in the strife,—
Comes to point me to a kingdom
Where no grief or sin is known,
Where no tempests darkly gather
Near the brightness of its throne;
Where no sapient, subtle tempter
Lurks in secret to destroy,
But the victor hosts assembled,
Shout aloud in songs of joy;
Where, amid the gathered myriads,
No dark train of ills shall come,
But eternal ages gliding,
Find them still at rest—at home.

The Use of Salt.

As considerable has been said in the Crisis on the subject of salt, the following extract from a distinguished work entitled Health and Disease, etc., by Benjamin Ridge, M. D., F. R. C. S., etc., etc., published in London, 1859, may be not only interesting but of some importance in settling the question as to the use of salt. F. H. B.

The intermediate or neutral medicinal agents may be divided into two classes: those that have chemical bases, and those which cannot be said to possess any chemical character at all. Under the first-named head are classed the various salts compounded of an acid and an alkali, and which form some of the most valuable and useful remedies in the pharmacopœia. Some of these are in every-day use. Common salt, or muriate of soda, for instance, is one of the most beneficial agents to man and animals throughout the mineral kingdom, one to which man owes more for the welfare of both his mental and bodily health than he is fully aware of. It is the chief chemical element of the ocean, and is found, therefore, in greater abundance than any other all over the world. So necessary, indeed, does a kind Providence consider it, that it is found not only in sea-water, but in a solid state, bedded in seams, strata and rocks, far inland, and often in the most out-of-the-way localities, whither animals travel many miles to get what is called a "salt lick." Nitrate of potash, carbonate of ammonia, and other salts besides, are similarly used in every-day life."

* * * * * *

Secondly, as to the love of freedom inherent to the Anglo-Saxon and his free use of salt; these, no doubt, seem strange subjects to be commingled and connected; for what can an Anglo-Saxon's birthright have to do with a mere necessary of life? The national spirit is expressive of liberty, independence of action, mind and character; intellectual and moral enfranchisement; exemption from vassalage, serfdom, priestcraft, concordats, conscriptions, or passports—including also freedom to speak or think without permission of its rulers. On the other hand, no matter what the country or climate, wherever any check or drawback on any of these great mental attributes exists, the mind, the thoughts, the ideas, the very springs and emanations of the brain, become warped and morbid; and no nation can rise above a certain level, or beyond a certain greatness, whose powers are contracted, and whose tendencies are constantly to "make mad the guilty and appal the free." In all these latter conditions, nations and people seem made for rulers, and not rulers for their free government.

What, then, has salt to do with this? What part does that play? Why, the very same in our material composition individually, as, comparatively speaking, our free institutions do for the elevation and dignity of the national character. Shakspeare, "Nature's sweetest child," must have had some idea of this, when he wrote:—"Is not discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, and liberality, the spice and salt that seasons a man?" Are not, I add, the very anxieties, troubles, mental efforts, commerce, ambition, glory, renown,—in fact all inducements to worldly advancement, so much salt to the mind?

Now, the very bases of all our substances and secretions are salts. When speaking on the laws of health and disease, I stated the fact of acids and alkalis having their governing proportions in the system; and I may now observe, that their bases are unions in due proportions of a salt,—no matter which may predominate, whether the acid or the alkali,—which cause either an action or a re-action on the system, the one setting the other free. Now I need scarcely say, that there is nothing so wholesome or so necessary for the human frame and animal juices, as salt taken in reasonable proportions with fresh meats and vegetables; whereas, on the other hand, "Salt too little which may season give," begets a lack of energy and of all the nobler elements of a healthy, moral, and physical existence.

The consequence of a lack of salt, in fact, is, that the human frame and physique become vitiated and degraded to a state resembling that of the carnivorous animals; —whence they acquire dispositions of revenge, treacherousness, and remorseless cruelty, strangely contrasted with the arrant cowardice, which they display when not under the excitement of their tempers. In fact, if the use of salt be limited, the material and mental powers will be limited in like proportion; while, on the other hand, if the supply of salt be increased, the bodily and intellectual faculties will be proportionably improved. Indeed, strange as the doctrine may appear to some, I cannot avoid the expression of my belief, that the vast strides made in the development of the mental capacities and varied resources of the Anglo-Saxon, as exhibited in the vast improvements this race has made in the arts and sciences during the last half-century, have been in a great measure due to the removal of the formerly most oppressive duty on salt.

In no country whatever of the world has the universality of increase and advance in every class of the community met with any equal to this. In every country where the limitation of the use of salt exists, owing to the absurd duties imposed upon it by a misguided and money-grasping government, no upward movement of the masses or lower orders takes place. The greatest places are filled with those who can afford to use it, and they alone rise who can thus afford to take the most; for they only are fitted for such duties. So much do mighty ends depend on small causes, so much do the greatest powers revolve on the smallest pivots.

Again, there is nothing more poisonous or unwholesome to the blood, when long continued or used in excessive quantities, as salt; nor can I too strongly impress this fact on our own Government authorities, whom I would earnestly entreat, in these days of rapid steam communication, to do away, as far as possible, with the demoralizing, unwholesome and cruel system of supplying salt meat to our army and navy. Even improved as its commissariat has been since the disastrous experience of the Crimea, it is still far below the advanced age in which we live, and will probably continue so while the present routine exists. If it be true that even now a two years' provision of salt meats is always in store in Gibraltar, and that these are used only one under the other, —that our ships' crews are served with excess of salt stores as soon as they get out to sea,—that whatever may be said to the contrary, and however fresh provisions may be used in port, the sea-going ships' crews have still this ancient and unwise treatment, and that it is a rule of diet rather than an exception, which it might alone be made;—all I can say is, that it is a most faulty state of things, and a thoroughly unphilosophical mistake. There can be no saving, where life, and health, and vigor are concerned. If the whole mass of salted provisions now in Government stores, above six months old, were ordered to be pitched into the sea, it would be a great boon and a positive gain to the country. Fresh, or fresher provisions, can be better obtained now and more cheaply than the salt ones, and they might be much more employed than they were formerly for both services. I will allow that there has recently been a great improvement in these respects,—yet far, very far short of the extent required by the exigencies of the service.

There is another Board, too, that deserves strong reprobation on account of its most cruel and pernicious doings;—I mean that of the East India Company, whose continued exactions of a duty on salt in India is one of those things that bring a curse upon their heads, a curse upon their management, a curse upon the native population that they rule. For want of salt thousands die every year. In cursing one another they use this term: "May you get no salt." They are not flesh-eaters, so much as of fruit and rice,—the long continued use of which, with an inconsiderable proportion of salt, and often none at all, breeds, in some, debility, marasmus, and cholera,—in all, a want of high noble feeling; inasmuch as their blood, unsavored with salt, begets in them the degraded passions and instincts of the carnivora. In short, the very salt with which they are provided, at a cruelly extravagant price, owing to John Company's monopoly, is so bad, as to be little more than a dark saline earth, so sparingly charged with muriate of soda as to require to be taken in large quantities to do any good.

How absurd, then, is it to say, while condemning these cruel, infatuated, and ignorant people, that they have not been "True to their salt;" when, in fact, they have never really had that to which they can be true, or for the welfare of their physical and the advancement of their mental health. Neither Providence nor science are heeded by this, I hope not wilfully, ignorant board, who regard a revenue as the one and only thing needful. That they know the extent of injury they do, or of the lives lost every year through their misguided policy, I cannot for one moment believe; and what makes the matter far worse, India is the only dependency of the Crown of England in which this most iniquitous tax is levied. Of all the countries in the world, too, to levy it in a rice or grain-eating community, where salt constitutes an absolute indispensable to the health of the people, is to me one of the most extraordinary cruelties and absurdities of legislation that can possibly be imagined in a so-called philanthropic and scientific age like the present.

The sea holds its salt in solution, and its coasts can furnish any amount. It is difficult to get it in cold countries, where there is a want of evaporation by heat; but there is no excuse in India. Moreover, as I have observed before, divine Providence, in its care for the wants of animal life, has willed that thousands of miles up the country there should be salt rocks and mountains.

What avails the wisdom of Providence to native populations starving and perishing for this necessary of life, so distinctly provided for them, which they might gather and use as freely as the air they breathe in their almost barren wilderness? Why should this most necessary element of life be withheld from them by their fellow men? Why have we, in these plains and and deserts, rocks of salt distributed everywhere, and to which animals migrate from distant parts to lick, and then return, when satiated, to their native prairies? Is man, I would ask, of less consideration than the beasts of the forest or field? No!—man should not be in any way restricted in his use of salt; and it should always be the purest that he can get, and taken with all fresh meats and vegetables;—because, thus taken, it is a general purifier and nourisher of his body and blood, influencing also, most beneficially, his every mental faculty. Indeed, his condition without it becomes in every way vitiated.

Providence, be assured, has given this element in most bountiful proportions, corresponding with the requirements of animal life; and what shall we say of him, who would deny salt to his fellow-man, or give it so sparingly, that it shall almost amount to a complete withholding thereof? Let such a one be accursed!

☞ No man knows what a day may bring forth; therefore he should every day be in the closet with God, that he may be prepared and fitted to entertain and improve all the occurrences which may attend him in the course of his life.

Mother.—"Almost all that transpired in childhood I have forgotten," remarked a lady, and the tears started from her eyes as she observed, "One thing I never can forget. I used to speak unkindly to my mother, who now is dead." Let those little children who have spoken unkindly too, remember that one day your own kind mother may die and be buried from your sight; then how very, very sad the thought, I was unkind and cross to my mother.

Jennie D. Roberts.

Healthy Children.

"What makes the children in England so healthy and ruddy?"

"They are fed on good bread, bannocks, and milk."

"Do they not give them any pies, hot cakes and preserves?" said Lizzie.

"No, child, except on special occasions, and then quite sparingly."

"I would not like to live there."

"Would you not like to have red cheeks, bright eyes and blooming health?"

"O, yes! but what have these to do with cakes, pies and puddings?"

"Much every way," said Aunty. "Did you not feel a little feverish yesterday afternoon?"

"Yes; my head ached so bad, and my heart beat dreadfully, and I was so hot."

"So I thought. It was the pound-cake and brandy-peaches that did the mischief."

"But mother says I am so delicate that I need something to help me."

"Yes, child, you need much to help you, but not in the way of such delicacies: these only make the matter worse."

"But I like them so much!"

"That is because you have pampered your appetite. Only try for a week, plain, simple food, and you will like it better. Warm biscuits, mince pies, doughnuts and hot coffee would try the digestive organs of an anaconda. Boys who run in the open air, and play at football and take it roughly, may stand such diet, but girls wilt and waste away under it."

Shortness of Time.

The moments fly,—a minute's gone!
The minutes fly,—an hour is run!
The day is fled,—the night is here!
Thus flies a week,—a month,—a year.

Kind Words.

Sister Jennie, are you here?" said little Ada, running into the sitting-room, her eyes sparkling with pleasure, and her golden curls flying in every direction in her haste. "See these paper dolls Aunt Margaret has just sent me! Won't you please cut them out for me? Mamma is busy, and can't now."

"So am I busy: go away, and don't bother me," said Jennie, without looking up from her book she was reading, and only changing her position to a more comfortable one in the large easy-chair, in which she sat before the fire. Ada's blue eyes filled with tears, and her little lip quivered as she slowly left the room, and amid all her sorrow, rose up a feeling of anger at her sister for refusing to help her. A moment before she was so happy in the anticipation of her new pleasure, and now, —"It is too bad,"—she sobbed, and the big tears rolled down her cheeks. Just then her brother Eddie came running to meet her, exclaiming—

"Oh Ada, may I take your rubber ball, just a little while?" A few moments before she would not have refused him, but now she said, snatching the ball out of his hand—

"No, you shan't! I wish you would let my things alone." He was thus made angry too, by his sister's rough words, and when their mother came to the nursery, a short time after, she was surprised and grieved to find her little son and daughter engaged in a bitter dispute. A few kind words would have cost Jennie nothing, and her sister's happiness would not have been destroyed for the day, nor her mother's heart so pained, while, if she had conquered her own selfishness, and devoted a few moments to Ada's pleasure, there would have been sunshine in the little one's heart for many an hour.

Dear children, guard well that "unruly member," the tongue, and when the harsh words spring to your lips, force them back, if you would see happy faces around you.—Ex.

"Happy the child whose early years
Receive instruction well,
Who hates the sinner's path, and fears
The road which leads to hell.

When we devote our youth to God,
'Tis pleasing in his eyes;
A flower, when offered in the bud
Is no vain sacrifice."

Prayer for the Watchmen.

O! pray for the watchmen who stand on the tower,
And tell of eternity's fast coming hour;
Who lift up their voices when dangers abound,
And loud the alarm through creation do sound.

God pity the watchmen, and bless them with might,
For tempests are rising and dark grows the night;
The winds howl around them, the huge billows pile,
And myriads cry "safety and peace" all the while.

Remember the watchmen, Lord! keep them from pride,
O! may they walk humbly and cleave to thy side;
Take charge of their thoughts and be leader through life,
And keep up their courage when warm is the strife.

Lord! waken the watchmen that sleep on the tower,
For now evil comes to try all in its hour;
O! keep them through time, in eternity's own,—
Permit them to see Thee in peace, on thy throne.

A Condensed Report

Of a Discussion held in South Ashburnham, March 19th–22d, 1861, between Rev. Jacob Baker and Eld. Miles Grant.

REPORTED BY J. D. MERRIAM.

Discussion continued.—March 22d.

ELD. GRANT'S FIRST SPEECH.—A. M.

Was Christ annihilated? No, he was raised from the dead. The characters represented by goats, become sheep by becoming good men.—In the address of Christ to Jerusalem, there was one point not noticed by my friend. "How often would I gather you . . . and ye would not." Which prevailed? If we cannot prevail against God's law, we are not free agents, and there is no sin. God did not make wicked men; they made themselves wicked. 2 Pet. 2: 12,—"They shall utterly perish in their own corruption." They come up from their graves with their corruptible bodies, and utterly perish. How can you destroy sin and error unless you destroy the sinner?—Goats, Jews. Matt. 25: 31,—"He gathered all nations." He found goats among all nations, and sheep also. Some are gathered out of all nations. If the Jews are goats, they are all to be lost. How, then, is all Israel going to be saved?—A few more texts referring to destruction. Jer. 17: 18,—"Destroy them with double destruction." Prov. 29: 1,—"Shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy." If raised from the second death there would be a remedy. Prov. 10: 29, 30,—"Destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity."—"The wicked shall not inhabit the earth." Jesus says, "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." We have no promise of an inheritance anywhere else. Where are the wicked when the saints have taken the kingdom, and possess it under the whole heaven? They are destroyed forever, without remedy, for eternity. See Job 21: 30; Isa. 1: 28. Rev. 11: 18,—"And the seventh angel sounded, . . . and the time of the dead, that they should be judged . . . give reward . . . and destroy them that corrupt the earth."

MR. BAKER'S FIRST SPEECH.—A. M.

Our friend has admitted that man is the only creature made in the image of God; that man grows in the future life; that he will not enjoy God unless redeemed: in all of this we are agreed. Hope we shall both see alike. He will feel better when he sees that all will be saved. "God did not make wicked men."—The Bible says, "Every plant, which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." God did make man; therefore man will not be rooted up.—"Ye would not come." Not then; there was a time when Bro. Grant would not come. But he was converted and came. So with them. Passages are brought to show that the word rendered perish, as in 2 Pet. 2: 12, is also rendered corrupt. 2 Tim. 3: 8,—"Men of corrupt minds." Do we believe that a man of a corrupt mind is perished or annihilated?—If apollumi means annihilated, then Christ came to save the annihilated. He goes after that which is lost, or annihilated, and continues his search until he finds it.

ELD. GRANT'S SECOND SPEECH.—A. M.

I admit that the whole man is made in the image of God, not a part of him. Destroy, we define, to bring to nothing.—"Men with annihilation minds." Men with minds that lead them to destruction. The primary meaning of apollumi is defined by Liddell and Scott "to destroy utterly," "to bring to nought, to die." When applied to man, it is the man that does the wrong (not the house he lives in); and when he is perished, there is no part of him alive. "All the wicked will he destroy." Will my friend attempt to show that destroy means preserve? 1 Cor. 1: 18,—"To them that perish, foolishness." Does perish mean salvation? When you take the life of a beast, does it live? When the life of a sinner is taken, does he live on? Ps. 104: 35,—"Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more. Praise ye the Lord." He does not say wickedness, but the wicked. Consume means, to destroy by separating the parts of a thing, to annihilate the form of a substance, to exterminate. See Isa. 10: 18; Matt. 13: 30. The tares represent the children of the wicked one, not wickedness; the wheat, the children of the kingdom; as the tares are gathered and burned, so shall it be in the end of this world. The tares are cast into the furnace of fire. Nahum 1: 10,—"Devoured as stubble fully dry." Why not compare them to gold and silver, which will abide the fire. Rev. 20: 9,—"Fire devoured them." The whole Bible harmonizes with the fact that the wicked are to be destroyed. Ps. 37: 9, 10. Not one of us has any claim on God for future life; it is a gift from God, on conditions specified in his word.

SECOND SPEECH OF MR. BAKER.—A. M.

He introduced the definition of apollumi as given by Donnegan. To destroy, as persons slain in battle; to sustain a loss, to perish, to die, to vanish away, to fly away, to dissipate. The meaning of the term should be determined by its general use, as we find it in the Bible. He quotes several passages where it is used, viz., Matt. 2: 13; 5: 29; 8: 25; 9: 17; 10: 6, 28; in none of which does it apply to man in the future world. How, then, draw an argument from it to show that man is to be annihilated? The term hell was referred to as applying to Gehenna, where the filth and offal of Jerusalem was burned. He says that fire did not burn the earth up, for it was burning eighteen hundred years ago; has not burned Jerusalem up yet. A text in reference to perish. Isa. 57: 1,—"The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart." Are the righteous perished? We understand they were so persecuted they felt deep sorrow of heart, and in their tribulation, perhaps, like Job cursed the day of their birth. Jeremiah also cursed the day he was born. Was good old Jeremiah to perish by annihilation? He exhorts to a study of the Scriptures, saying, ask for the divine Spirit, and he will guide you better than Liddell and Scott, or Bro. Grant or myself. Do not believe me or him because we say it. Believe what God says, that there is a spirit within man, within you all. As soon as you open your heart, the light will shine into your soul. The tares and the wheat. Who sowed the tares? An enemy; the mad dog that had bitten everybody.—The tares shall be rooted up. Did God plant a spirit within each individual? It cannot be rooted up. There shall be no more tares when burned. Jesus has come to those who are christians, and carefully pulled up the tares, lest he root up the wheat also. Luke 13: 1–5.—As the Galileans perished, and their blood mingled with sacrifices, so Jerusalem and that people should likewise perish. Not one of the disciples was lost, while the enemies of Jesus were slain.

THIRD SPEECH OF ELD. GRANT.—A. M.

I accept the definition of Donnegan, but none of these definitions convey the least idea of preservation. We have used one text containing the word apollumi. In this passage does it mean salvation? Refers to the several passages quoted on the negative in regard to the word perish, and shows that in none of them does it mean preservation or salvation. Unless there is a resurrection from the dead, the righteous perish forever. Every plant shall be rooted up. Yes. The tares, which Christ calls the children of the wicked one, shall be rooted out of the earth. The preaching of the cross of Christ is to them that perish, foolishness; but to the saved, the power of God. Salvation on one side, perish on the other. When man die, they perish; and if they are raised and die again, they perish again. When the wicked are utterly perished, where are they? If any man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered, and men gather them, and they are burned. When branches are cut from the trees, is it to preserve them? No; to be burned. As the tares are gathered and burned, so shall it be with the wicked. Men, as such, not qualities in them, are to be saved or lost. Matt. 3: 12,—"Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor; . . burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." What does he burn up? The chaff, the children of the wicked one. Jer. 17: 20, 27,—"Kindle a fire in the gates of Jerusalem, and it shall devour the palaces thereof, and it shall not be quenched." That fire was kindled when Titus took Jerusalem; the fire burned the temple, and it could not be put out. It was an unquenchable fire. An unquenchable fire ceases to burn only when that which is burning is utterly consumed. Phil. 3: 18, 19.—"Whose end is destruction."

Importance of Prophecy.—No. 4.

Third. "They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them; but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps." The action of the virgins, in supplying themselves with oil, constitutes the distinguishing characteristic between the two classes—the wise and the foolish. Yet they maintained a uniformity of action, all pursued the same course, so that no difference in character was apparent among them, till the time came that it was necessary to replenish their lamps with oil. It was then discovered that they had not all of them made the necessary preparation to a successful prosecution of their enterprise. But what are we to understand by the oil? Some suppose the oil to represent the Holy Spirit. But this application seems to be inconsistent, from the fact that the oil must, according to the nature of the representation, apply to something over which man holds control, insomuch that he may transfer it to, or withhold it from others; and which one may consistently ask of another. But this is not true of the Holy Spirit; it is subject to the control of none but God; nor could any sane man be so extremely foolish as to say to his fellow, "Give me of your Holy Spirit." The Heavenly Father gives the Holy Spirit to those who, in a spirit of meekness and humility, ask it of Him.

Again, some suppose the oil to represent faith, because it is by the exercise of faith in the word of God that it becomes a spiritual light. But in this application the same inconsistency appears as in the one above alluded to, and for the same reasons. Man cannot transfer his faith to his neighbor, neither could he consistently be required to do so. But it is said, "The call for oil consists in asking for the evidence of faith." But, as the Bible is the basis of the christian's faith,—constituting the sole evidence of his faith,—and as the Bible is emblemized by the lamps, hence, to ask for the evidence of faith, would be equivalent to asking for the lamp. But, as the church is the light of the world,—commanded to let her light shine before men,—and as she can comply with the requirements of that command in no other way than by presenting the evidence of her faith, can she be justified in withholding that evidence when it is called for, upon the plea of an insufficient supply for herself and those asking for it? I think not. But this is the reason assigned by the wise for refusing to supply the foolish with oil.

Although it is true that no light can be elicited from the sacred oracles without exercising faith in them, yet there is another principle which underlies faith, and is as essential to a living faith as the application of oil to the wick in a lamp is essential to obtaining a permanent light therefrom. And this principle is the attribute of love. Unless faith is governed and sustained by love, the light derived by it from the word of God, will be of short continuance. As the application of fire to a dry wick would produce a brilliant light for a moment, so faith, destitute of love, in times of religious excitement, appears active and very zealous. But when the excitement subsides, the faith declines and dies. Unaccompanied by love, faith becomes unprofitable. In 1 Cor. 13: 2, Paul says: "And though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, (love,) I am nothing." It is evident, from the scope of the apostles' reasoning, that the word "charity" in this chapter implies love, and not practical benevolence, as some have supposed. In v. 3, he says: "And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, . . . and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." That is, though he were to practice the grace of benevolence to the extent of his ability, these actions not springing from charity, (love to God,) would yield him no profit. We see, then, that love is indispensable to a profitable faith, though faith may be strong where love is wanting. Again, Christ says: (Jn. 3: 19,) "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." This amounts to a positive declaration that, if men had loved light, they would have had light. Love for light, therefore, is the fundamental element in constituting the Bible a moral lamp. Christ has also promised the Holy Spirit to those who love him; (see Jn. 14: 15–17,) and the office of that Spirit is to guide into all truth, (chap. 16: 13;) and the light derived from the word of God consists in a knowledge of truth. Hence, if we love the Savior, we shall have the light of life, by being guided by the Spirit of God into the truth.

Again, John declares (1 Jn. 1: 5,) that "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." In ch. 3: 24, he says, "He that keepeth his commandments, dwelleth in him, and he in him." In ch. 5: 3, we read: "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments, and his commandments are not grievous." From these declarations of the apostle, we learn, 1, that God is the source of moral light. 2, If we keep His commandments, he will dwell in us, i. e., by the influences of his Spirit: and we shall dwell in him, i. e., be united to him in the spirit and temper of our minds. 3, If we love him, we shall keep his commandments. Hence, that God, who is the author and dispenser of moral light, may dwell in us and we in him, thus illuminating our minds with the light of revelation, depends wholly upon our loving him. And if light dwells in us, and we dwell in light, we shall not walk in darkness.

Inspiration teaches us (Gal. 5: 6) that "In Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but faith which worketh by love." Therefore, if faith works by love, love is the principle from which faith derives life and vigor; and is the fundamental element in constituting the Bible a moral lamp. Light derived from the word of God, by a faith controlled by love to him, is not so easily extinguished as the glaring, impetuous blaze, kindled by a faith overwhelmed with fear of condemnation; but it will live amidst the most violent storms of persecution; and it will burn steadily and shine brightly in the midst of temptation, sorrow, and disappointment. In short, that faith which springs from love to God, is not likely to be overcome, but it will overcome the world instead.

But there is a faith which does not work by love—which does not overcome the world. This is the faith which the devils have, who believe and tremble. Balaam, who loved the wages of unrighteousness, and who, for money, would have cursed the people of the Most High, had he dared to do it, had faith in God, and could foretell future events with precision. But his faith did not work by love. Judas, also, possessed this kind of faith, when he exercised a part of the ministry with the other apostles, and went out with them, preaching the gospel of the kingdom to the Jews, and performing miracles, his faith worked, but it did not work by love. Notwithstanding this kind of faith can appear extremely zealous in times of religious excitement, yet, when the excitement subsides, the faith loseth its zeal. If it happens to get caught in the trial which God sends for the purpose of purifying his people, it is sure to condemn the course which led it into the trial, and either vanish or fasten upon some unscriptural position. But I am digressing. As the oil in the lamp communicates vivifying qualities to the wick, causing the fire to continue its action upon it, so love imparts life, energy, and perpetuity to faith, and invites the Holy Spirit—which answers to the fire—to continue to shed its illuminating influence upon it.

We have now found a resemblance to each constituent part of a well trimmed and burning lamp. The Bible answers to the lamp; faith in the Bible, as being the word of God, to the wick; love to God and his word, to the oil; and the Holy Spirit, influencing and directing the grace of faith, to the fire, by which the lamp is lighted up. And the heart, the seat of love, answers to the vessel, which contained the oil. We conclude, therefore, that the destitution of oil, on the part of the foolish virgins, represents a part of the Advent body, as acting in regard to the second coming of Christ, having no genuine love for his appearing: but being compelled, by force of argument, to believe that he was soon to judge the world in righteousness, their fear of future retribution induced them to render an affected service to God, hoping thereby to appease his wrath, and thus escape the condemnation of the ungodly.

"But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps." There were some who went forth to meet the Lord whose hearts were filled with love for his appearing; not merely because they had respect to the recompense of the reward,—they esteemed the reproach of Christ greater riches than all the treasures of popular creeds and human organizations; and, following the example of the wise virgins, they left their homes, (church organizations,) resolved never to return to their old homes nor to seek new ones, but to continue as pilgrims and strangers on the earth, until the opening heavens should reveal him who was the object of their affections. The wise are more solicitous for the honor and glory of God, than for their own salvation. With the Psalmist, they are ever ready to exclaim, "O how love I thy law! it is my meditation all the day." "How sweet are thy words unto my taste! yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth." "Through thy precepts I get understanding; therefore I hate every false way." And with Job, "But he knoweth the way that I take; when he hath tried me I shall come forth as gold. My foot hath held his steps, his way have I kept and not declined. Neither have I gone back from the commandment of his lips; I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food." The wise will not attempt to serve God through fear of condemnation; neither will they serve him merely for the sake of the reward; but, like their Master, it is their meat to do the will of their Father which is in heaven.

R. ROBBINS.

For the Crisis.

In Behalf of the Oppressed.

The following is an extract of a letter received from a sister in Mass., an entire stranger to me, who has been resisting the Spirit for years, and who, I am told by Eld. ——, who preached recently in her vicinity, "was almost dead with consumption," called in the elders to pray, renewed her vows to God, promised obedience, and the result was a cure. The woman, in the last stages of consumption, was healed,—made every whit whole in a moment,—and went and preached Christ to a dying people the next day. I omit some words of thanks for what little I said on the subject, through the Crisis, formerly, and never thought of benefiting anybody. I heard about her trials and temptations to shrink from duty, and forthwith wrote to her, forgetting all about a formal introduction. The Lord told me to speak to that burdened soul,—the Holy Spirit went with the word spoken. If the saints of God were engaged in doing each other good, as they ought to be, there would be less waiting, mincing and bowing,—enough to kill a soul, and not enough to revive a dying one.

"* * * * * I think you can guess at my pleasure and surprise on receiving your letter, which was fraught with love, and seemed like mercy-drops to my poor heart. If I had related to you the story of my experience in full, doubtless you could not have given me any more pointed advice than you now have. How peculiarly striking was one statement you made: viz., 'You need not wait for an angel to come and open a door for you, nor for ministers to pull you into the pulpit. They won't do it. You must open the door with your own fearless arm and STAND UP FOR JESUS!' O, it seemed to me when I read that sentence, that God had let you discern the very thoughts of my heart. For I had thought if some more talented laborer would but send appointments, and take the 'burden and heat of the day' off from my feeble hands, and let me labor a little once in a while, I would step forth at once. But to bear the whole responsibility, with so little knowledge! . . . . How could I venture to take so bold a step! How could I press forward through the roughness of the way alone, in my ignorance, and exclaim,

"A soldier of the cross I stand;
Commissioned at my Lord's command
I venture to the field!
Though weaker than a bruised reed,
Nor sin nor satan will I heed,
For JESUS is my shield."

But, if the Lord bids me move ahead, 'I am resolved to try.' Am now thirty-four years old; been married thirteen years. Felt called to public labor at seventeen, a year or two after my conversion; but lingered in the way, striving for an excuse. Was a member of the M. E. Church, and knew they did not allow even the male members to appoint meetings without consent from both Elders and lay members. I was uneducated, and, (worse than all, M. M.,) was a female. Had never heard of but three women that took such a course; and to sum it all up, 'Did (n't) I fear a great multitude, or did the contempt of families terrify me, that I kept silence and went not out?'—Job. 31: 34. Indeed, slavish fear lay at the root of it all. The excuse of Moses availed nothing, when he said 'I am not eloquent.' I learned, too, that Gideon could not be released by saying, 'I am least in my father's house.' I found, also, that God had surely called Jeremiah, notwithstanding he cried, 'I cannot speak, for I am a child;' and that it would have been far better for me to cry, 'Here am, I—send me.' Yet fifteen long years did I pray to be excused, when, at times, I felt stirred to this work. During this time, too, I sometimes thought I saw some of the other sex (possible?—M.) too willing to go forward, and thought they had the seal of 'Ahimaz, the son of Zadok,' who said, 'Let me RUN, and bear the king tidings,' to whom it was said, 'Wherefore wilt thou run, seeing thou hast no tidings ready?' Still he would run; but the mission amounted to nothing, he being only able to say, 'I saw a great tumult, but KNEW NOT WHAT IT WAS!'

Two years ago this winter, I began, for the first time, to tell the story of the Cross. I had told a young Advent preacher my experience, to some extent, and he gave me much encouragement. One Sabbath I went to hear him preach. He came to me at noon, and said he had been praying God to send me to that place, and earnestly entreated me to speak that afternoon. O, who but those who have experienced the same can imagine how I felt, when, to the surprise of a crowded school-house, I went forward to the desk! . . . . From that time till last summer I have occasionally spoken in a few adjoining towns . . . . ."

This sister is no fanatic, nor is she one of your simpletons, whose only aim is to be seen. At least, reliable persons thus inform me. Now, what must she do? Must she refuse to obey God, just because some old bachelor thinks her doom is kitchen drudgery? Understand, we have no objections against women being "keepers at home;" but we utterly refuse to devote every hour of our lives to mush-making or shirt starching. True, the Bible says, "Women, obey your husbands;" but it says also, "Take up your cross and follow me." There are a few liberal-minded men who encourage such bowed-down souls, and try to lead them through the rough path. There are others who favor the idea in private, but blush at the idea in public. They are like an Elder (whose wife used to eclipse him) who went to a burdened one and urged her to duty,—even extended an invitation to her to occupy his own pulpit. A few months after he denied it all, and almost broke the poor pilgrim's heart.

Men spend many words in recommending this or that theory to mankind, and think it as important for women to believe it as the men. She must know Christ can forgive sins, raise the dead, and that he is soon coming to judge a guilty world. And though she sees the sword coming, she is commanded, in the name and for the sake of wash-tubs and lazy men, to hold her peace.

The writer is not so very fond of and anxious to go beyond all ideas of propriety as some may think. She is not all she wishes other women to be,—faithfully improving the talent committed. But she wants others who fear man and the sly winks of their wives, to know God will be with them, while setting life and death before the people. Certainly, woman will have to render an account to God, as well as man. Let us try to be blameless.

The Resurrection of the Dead.—No. 1.

"And now I stand, and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers: unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come."—ACTS 26: 6, 7.

The promise of God, to which the Apostle here refers, must have been a promise touching the resurrection of the dead, else Paul would not have introduced the promise in this connection. He is now arraigned before Agrippa's tribunal for the crime of preaching the resurrection through Jesus. That this was his offence is clear from the question which he immediately puts to Agrippa: "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?" He here directly introduces the subject of the promise, unto which the twelve tribes hope to come. It could not be the promise of a Savior, simply, without special reference to the work which the Savior was to perform. The doctrine of the resurrection was no new doctrine to the Jews, although a sect called the Sadducees denied it. (Acts 23: 8.) But this great offence of Paul consisted in preaching the resurrection through Jesus whom they had crucified. They were also grieved with Peter and John for preaching the same. (Acts 4: 2.) The resurrection of the dead depended upon the resurrection of Christ; and therefore Paul says, "The promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again." (Acts 13: 32, 33.) This was an earnest or assurance of the fulfillment of the promise, as he says in 1 Cor. 15: 20, "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." The resurrection of Christ was a demonstration that God would fulfill the promise to the fathers, and therefore it is spoken of as the fulfillment to the children of the promise made to the fathers; but the promise to the fathers was of something to which the twelve tribes hoped to come. This promise, therefore, must be found in the law or the prophets; for Paul confessed unto Felix that after the way which his accusers called heresy, so he worshiped the God of his fathers, believing all things which are written in the law, and in the prophets, and had hope toward God, which his accusers also allowed, that there [illegible] of the dead, both of the just and unjust. (Acts 13: 14, 15.)

Let us now examine the Scriptures, and see what promise God has made to the fathers in connection with the resurrection of the dead, unto which the twelve tribes hope to come. Let it be distinctly noted here, that there is no disagreement between Paul and his accusers with regard to the promise; but the fulfillment of it through Jesus Christ, as taught by Paul, constitutes the only difference, for Paul himself was a Pharisee. (Acts 23: 6.) The doctrine of the resurrection was new to the idolatrous Athenians, and to idolaters generally to whom Paul preached; and therefore to them he seemed to be the setter forth of strange gods, "because he preached unto them Jesus and the resurrection." (Acts 17: 18.) He exhorted them to renounce their idolatry, repent, and turn to the worship of the true God, "because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead. And when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked; and others said, we will hear thee again of this matter," (verses 30–32.) Here the resurrection of Christ is called the assurance of the resurrection of all men, to bring them forth to the judgment. Idolaters generally believed that men were already immortal, and therefore needed no resurrection; but Christ taught that they are not immortal until after the resurrection, when they can die no more. (Luke 20: 36.) This brings me to consider the promise of God to the fathers, the fulfillment of which implies the resurrection of the dead.

The earliest promise given to man after he became mortal by transgression, (death by sin,—Rom. 5: 12,) implies the restoration of his immortality. "It" (the seed of the woman) "shall bruise thy head." (Gen. 3: 15.) This is clearly taught by Paul in 1 Cor. 15: 21, 22—"For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." When shall they be made alive? "They that are Christ's at his coming."—(ver. 23.) This is what Paul preached as "the hope of the promise unto which the twelve tribes hope to come." For which hope's sake he was accused of the Jews, (Acts 26: 7.) This is what Peter and John preached in the temple (Acts 3: 19–21,) "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heavens must receive, until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, since the world began." "And, as they spake unto the people, the priests, and the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees came upon them, being grieved that they taught the people, and preached, through Jesus, the resurrection from the dead." (Acts 4: 1, 2.)

The question may now be asked, did any physical change take place in man's bodily organization when he sinned, which rendered him mortal? We answer, no. God foresaw that he would sin, and therefore adapted his physical organization to his mortal state, creating male and female with instructions to multiply like all other animals. Such an organization [illegible] with the immortal state, and therefore ceases after the resurrection, "when they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven." (Mat. 22: 30); that is, immortal, and without distinction of sex. Of the immortal state Paul speaks prospectively and typically, (Gal. 3: 28,) "There is neither [illegible] female; for ye are all one in Christ [illegible]."

The Prayer of Faith.

The following is another instance of the willingness of the Lord to hear the prayers of his people. It is from a Brother in the Far West, whose name I omit, but with whom I have been personally acquainted for many years, and know him to be a man having the reputation of undoubted veracity and reliability, and one to whose charge more than one important public trust has been confided. God has been his guide in business, as well as in religion, for years past. He lives the life of faith and enjoys the blessing God bestows.

"W——, Feb. 10th, 1861.

Dear Bro. and Sr. Hastings:—I wish to communicate what the Lord has done for myself and neighbors. Last May I was taken sick with liver complaint. Other complaints set in, with considerable fever. I was soon run down. I saw that disease had fast hold of me. I finally went to prayer, and pledged myself before the Lord to confess the blessing wherever he would make duty plain. I believe the pledge was accepted. A few days after I attended meeting among brethren in an adjoining district. In that meeting I was impressed to speak on the gifts of healing. I talked freely, until my own case came up, and then I thought as they know nothing of my being sick, it would be making too much of a show to mention my own case there, but meant to do my duty when I got where they knew I had been sick. I was not aware that I had fallen into temptation and broken my promise until the next morning. Then my disease returned with double power, and I found myself completely shorn of the power of faith on this subject. Two weeks passed. I labored most constantly. I could see the promises very clear. I would grasp them, but my faith would slip off in a moment. I had no power to hold on to one of the promises.

After this time my friends were very anxious that I should employ a physician. I dared not. I had lived most nine years by faith on the Son of God, and had been helped of a number of fevers and other complaints, and had talked the faith freely, and, after living down much prejudice, I could not employ a physician. My friends begged of me to be packed in a wet sheet. I told them I had rather not; but their importunity being strong, and I being very weak, I consented to gratify them. Immediately my mind was in a mist of fog and darkness. The next morning I was much worse. I was solicited to follow the packing. I told them if I lived I must live by faith on the Son of God, or I was sure I should not live at all, and told them I must risk it on faith, sink or swim, die or live; and sent for my partner in business, and told him I wanted him to see Bro. P.—and tell him that I wanted both of them to pray in secret, and then come and pray with me. They came. I was in a clammy sweat all over. They thought I looked like a man just gone. They prayed, and I attempted to pray. None of us seemed to have but little power. I did not know but it was my last sickness. I told the Lord I wanted to live a little longer, to suffer a little more reproach, and, if it were possible, be the means of doing a little good in the world; and if I could live I would try to be willing to suffer for His truth and name's sake. But if this was designed of God to be my last sickness, I prayed him to show me that this was the case; and exclaimed in my heart that I would cheerfully submit to it. At that time Bro. B— began to be in great agony, and I was impressed that it was his duty to lay hands on me. I spoke to Bro. B., and told him if it was his duty to lay hands on me to lay them on me in the name of the Lord Jesus. He laid them on. My faith was restored. Although it was a day of trial, my faith would hold on, and the Lord enabled me to surmount every trial and overcome.

This gave the faith a new zest among professors that were sceptical before. This was the 6th of July. There are quite a number of believers now. There has been a great deal of sickness in this neighborhood; and where we have been invited to pray, there has not been one case that has failed. There have been four cases of healing in this neighborhood, and perhaps I will give you an account of each case at some future time, if it would interest you. The gift of laying on hands is very prominent in this brother that I mentioned. The gift is in many men, I am confident. We have had one case of insanity, by Spiritualism, and we met to pray for that. This brother B. was moved upon, and laid hands on her in the name of the Lord Jesus, and commanded the spirit of demon to leave her. She is now a firm christian. She was released on the spot.

Four other cases were healed,—some by the prayer of faith, and some by prayer and laying on of hands. Dear brother and sister, I have much that I want to write. The doctrines of the Bible are working into the Methodist church, and if any of them get into trouble, or sickness, or if a soul is under deep conviction, they send for me and want me to pray. Now, brother H., I would not mention these things boasting. It is the Lord's work, wrought in us, and to Him be all the glory.

Yours, O."

Such letters as the above are of use to comfort and support the flock of God, and to teach them that God abideth faithful as of old, even to the end. And while I am upon the subject, let me mention two or three things by way of caution.

1. Beware of fanaticism and error. Satan will always try to push these in, and specially wherever God works "through mighty signs and wonders by the power of the Holy Spirit." Many have been wrecked on this rock. The only security is in clinging close to the word of God. Go by this in all things.

2. Beware of spiritual pride. Gifts of healing are not to be bragged about, boasted over, or paraded about the world. Christ sometimes forbade their being told, and [illegible]. Let the devil and his "spirit mediums" do the bragging; let God's saints be very humble in his sight.

3. Beware of judging all others by their own experience. All have not the office. One has gifts of teaching, another of healing, another of wisdom. All are members of the body. The best gifts are prophecy, or speaking to exhortation, edification and comfort. Love is greater than all the rest. We must not expect one to have all gifts, or all to have one gift. God tempers the body together as it has need.

4. Beware of mere human sympathy. Every one who is sick wants to get well. But healing is not given to all. There were many lepers in Syria, but none were healed but Naaman. Many, if their health was restored, would use it for lust, selfishness, and sin. Some are made sick by doing what they know is wrong, and will get well just as soon as they stop. Paul left Trophimus at Miletum, sick. He could not heal all persons or at all times. We are to look to God to direct us, and never move without his direction. No person who is a true christian will refuse to submit to God's will, to live or die. Persons who are willful are not in a state of faith; they must lay aside their own will. Sometimes sickness and death are both for the glory of God, that the Son of man may be glorified thereby.—John. 2: 4; John. 21: 19.

5. Beware of presumption. I have known persons healed who would start, after a long sickness, while the whole system was weak from long inaction, and would [illegible] do work enough to make a well person sick. What would the result be? Why, they would be sick again in a little while, of course. When the Lord cures a person, he does not always make them as strong as if they had never been sick. Strength comes by exercise, food and air. Nor does he make them independent of the laws of health, so that they can violate them all and yet not be sick again.

Such a course is presumption; it is like Satan saying, "Cast thyself down, for it is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee." The answer and reproof of all such temptations is, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." All these presumptuous courses are simply tempting God. Beware of it.

Finally, have faith in God. Let it be calm, sober, fervent, and prevailing. Read the promises. Live where you can claim them. Grieve not the Spirit of God. Stand up for its influence as taught in Scripture. I have suffered more persecution, reproach, slander and abuse for teaching the Scripture doctrine of the Holy Spirit, among those who "deny the Lord that bought them," and are "sensual, not having a spirit," than for any other thing. God help us to be patient, steadfast and true. He will vindicate his own cause. Let us wait for him in patience.

The Reason Why.

By permission of Bro. Grant, I will take this means of saying to the brethren in various parts of Maine, whom I have long been promising to visit, that I may not be able to come to hold meetings with them this summer, as expected, because of bodily infirmity. More than sixteen months ago I was tipped out of my sleigh while crossing a railroad, and a very heavy trunk falling upon my back, so injured my spine as to cause constant affliction, from weakness and pain. The remedies of several physicians have been used without help. But their counsel I have not followed. They told me to stop all active service, and rest. My interest in the cause of our soon coming Savior, as also the duty of earning my family expenses, seemed to forbid retiring from preaching; so I have toiled on, in pain and weakness, to meet the calls, saying but little of my trouble, until necessity forces me to do less. I shall therefore try to lay by for awhile. I ask the prayers of the brethren and sisters, for my recovery, to be in the field occupying when Jesus comes. Yours in the faith,

I. C. Wellcome.

The Model Church.—"I have read your Thessalonica. I think it the plainest work you have written since Pauline Theology. Such a book I conceive of more value than all that can be written of a speculative character." G. W. Young.

European.—The Asia's papers to the 18th inst. contain nothing for which we can afford room under the pressure of home news. The general aspect of European affairs is hardly more pacific than our own. The European Times says the prevailing belief seems to be that war on the continent is imminent, and should it break out, it will probably involve the greater part of Europe. All will depend on the policy of Austria. No doubt can exist that France is seriously preparing for it, and it is said that the leading provision merchants of Cork have been summoned to Paris, in order to contract with the French Government for victualing its army and navy. Austria has concentrated an army of 200,000 men in the vicinity of the Quadrilateral. Hungary seems on the point of rushing to arms. While these signs are transpiring in Central Europe, there seems to be a wide-spread combination in the East to rise in rebellion against Turkey. Then at home and abroad the sword appears to be in the [illegible]

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 1, 1861.

NEW ARRANGEMENT.

At the last meeting of the board of directors of the "Christian Publication Society," it was thought best by the majority present, to appoint Rufus Wendell as Editor of the "Crisis," and Miles Grant for assistant editor; consequently all letters for the Crisis should now be directed to RUFUS WENDELL, Boston, Mass.

Valedictory.

With this number closes our labors as editor of the Crisis. In taking leave of our dear brethren and sisters, we wish to say, we feel truly grateful for the many kind words of approval we have daily received from their warm hearts, filled with love for Jesus and his appearing. They have been appreciated, and have had a powerful influence in cheering us onward in our toilsome labor, and have done much to lighten the load necessary to be borne by any one who occupies the position we are about to leave. It has been a pleasure to suffer reproach with such worthy men, and we hope, ere long, to meet them where trials will come no more.

While we have endeavored to do the best we could to make our paper such an one as should feed the flock of God, we feel the need of the mantle of charity to cover our failings, and have no fears but that we shall receive as large a one as we deserve.

We are glad to be able to leave the Crisis in the most prosperous condition that it has ever occupied since it became a subscription paper; and that it will be fully sustained by the faithful labors of our dear Bro. Wendell, who now becomes the resident Editor. We bespeak for him the same hearty co-operation that we have enjoyed from our noble patrons, and in doing this, they will confer a favor on their brother in Christ. Miles Grant.

Luke 23: 43.

Bro. W. H. Wild inquires if the sense does not require that Luke 23: 43 should be read as a question? It would then read as follows:—"And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee to-day, shalt thou be with me in Paradise?" With this punctuation, it would express surprise that the thief should expect to be in paradise, or the kingdom. This view would correspond with the other evangelists, who make no mention of the repentance of the thief. It should however, be borne in mind, that it is optional with the translator whether the clause be rendered "shalt thou be," or, thou shalt be. Either form is in harmony with the original. If the Savior asked the thief a question, it would imply astonishment that a wicked man like him should expect to be remembered in the coming kingdom. This view, as we have said, would correspond with the account given by Matthew and Mark, who do not intimate that the thief reformed before his death.

"King of Sheshach."

Bro. Grant:—Please tell who is the king of Sheshach, mentioned in Jer. 25: 26, and where is his kingdom? J. D. M.

Sheshach is mentioned in only one other passage in the Bible, which is in Jer. 51: 41, and reads as follows:—"How is Sheshach taken! and how is the praise of the whole earth surprised! how is Babylon become an astonishment among the nations!"

Sheshach is a name given to ancient Babylon, and we have no proof that it refers to any thing else. If any one will take the trouble to read Jeremiah from the twenty-fifth chapter to the close of the book, he will see that the kingdoms named, beginning at Jerusalem, drank the cup one after another, and the king of Sheshach, or Babylon, drank last, as recorded in Jer. 51: 41. In the preceding verses, beginning at ver. 37, the Lord gives a prophecy through Jeremiah, as to what should happen to Babylon, which is now accomplished; but before this was done, the other kingdoms named drank from "the wine-cup" of God's fury, as foretold in Jer. 25: 15–26. Other kingdoms have arisen since their fall, which are now existing, that are not included in this prophecy.

"The Great Crisis."

Our nation is in an awful situation, and daily passing into a more critical condition. But little is thought or talked of but war and preparation for the battle field. When looking at the present state of the world, we may well exclaim, this is that spoken of by the prophet Joel, when he says, referring to the time just before the "harvest," "Prepare war, wake up the mighty men."

It is astonishing to see the blindness of the professed watchmen, who are still preaching the conversion of the world. Had they one plain passage of Scripture, upon which to base such a theory, they would have some excuse; but in the absence of all Bible proof in favor of such a doctrine, with the most positive and plain Scripture to the contrary, [illegible] that such men, when addressing the troops about to march to the bloody field, should assure them of their sympathy and hearty co-operation," and be willing to accompany them to the battle-ground as chaplains to pray for their success, where they will meet chaplains in the opposing army praying as heartily for the opposite side. Truly, we have a strange christianity at the present day. Instead of the churches converting the world, the world has nearly converted them to its spirit and manners. If it were not so, there would be reason to doubt that we have come to "the last days; for it is clearly foretold that we shall have just such a state of things immediately preceding the second coming of Christ.

Those who expect to be ready to meet the Savior in peace should keep entirely free from the war spirit of these times, watch and pray lest they enter into temptation, for the hour of trial is at hand.

Says a New York correspondent of the Boston Journal, under date of April 15th:

"We are in the midst of intense excitement. Such a Sunday has not been known since the Revolution of '76 as was yesterday."

Says the Boston Journal of the 17th inst.:

"But one thought pervades the community to-day, and the greatest excitement exists among all classes. Business is forsaken, and thousands have flocked to the quarters of the Massachusetts volunteers, cheering them with expressions of good wishes, stimulating them with patriotic counsels, and bidding them "God speed" on their momentous expedition."

The Eighth Head.

Bro. Grant:—I learn that Victor Immanuel is chosen King of Italy. If Napoleon I. was the seventh head of the beast, and Napoleon III. the eighth, will Victor Immanuel be the ninth head? or what number is he? Will some one please answer? W. Nichols.

Victor Immanuel cannot be a head of the beast that carries the woman, inasmuch as he does not support her. The beast of Rev. 17th supports the woman on the seven hills, and the heads not only represent her geographical position, but the seven dynasties, or husbands that have sustained her for over twelve hundred years. Her present husband is the Napoleon dynasty, who we think is to be her last. And although he allows her enemies, as led by Garibaldi and Victor Immanuel, to take away her territory, preparatory for her final overthrow, she says, in view of the French troops who yet protect her, "I sit a queen, and am no widow." It is evident that her present husband, head or protector, cares but little for her welfare; but, out of policy, still keeps his troops at Rome to prevent others from coming to her rescue. We think she is now associated with her last head or husband, and both will soon go to perdition.

Watch.

The following, from the New York Independent of April 25th, '61, shows that some begin to understand the signs of the times:—

"Distress of Nations.—We are so absorbed in the affairs of our own country that we have scarcely time to read the foreign news. But with famine in India, the threatening aspect of affairs in Syria and throughout Turkey, the foreshadowed alliance of France and Russia against England and Austria, revolution imminent in Hungary, Victor Emmanuel determined upon possessing Rome, there is every indication that this will be a year of commotions in the earth and distress of nations, almost without parallel since the beginning of the christian era.

Without attempting to apply to passing events specific predictions in the word of God, we cannot fail to see in these events the hand of divine providence marshaling forces for the overthrow of despotism in religion, in society, in the state. The grand historico-prophetical symbols of the Old and New Testament are self-repeating, and we in our day are as much called upon to study the signs of the times, to watch for the coming of the Son of man, and to be ready for every sign of his appearing, as were the christians of the first century, as will be those of the last day of earth and time. Let us work and pray, and pray and work, till Christ's kingdom shall fully come."

War Matters.

There is said to be a "reign of terror" in Baltimore. Two men, who recently left that city, state that they were compelled to pay $100 apiece, before they were allowed to leave.

The southern army is said to be in a poor condition to take the field; having no commissariat, tents, or means of transporting supplies for the troops.

The Norfolk Navy Yard has been destroyed, to prevent it from falling into the hands of the Southern Confederacy; also 15,000 stand of arms at Harper's Ferry. If it had not been for these movements, it is thought that Washington would have been invaded before the troops from Massachusetts and New York could have reached the Capitol of the nation. It is now thought to be safe from any attack.

It is said, "there never was a time when the people of New England were so excited and so united as at the present time." Governor Sprague, of Rhode Island, has gone with the troops from that State. No [illegible] composed of barrels of cement, iron work prepared for the dome, and other building material. The regulars occupy the Treasury department, which is barricaded with four-inch plank and sand bags. It is said the people in the rural districts of Maryland anticipate absolute ruin from the war.

A large amount of stores and ammunition have been seized by the secessionists, and considerable has also been taken by the United States government. It is said five million dollars worth of property have been destroyed already.

Hon. Daniel S. Dickinson made a speech at the 5th Avenue Hotel, New York, Monday evening, April 22d, in which he is reported to have said, when speaking of the present war:—

"Let us settle this thing speedily and surely. It may ruin this generation, but we owe it to the next that they should have no such troubles as we have had. He would strike now, in our might, and, if necessary, wipe the South from the face of the earth. He knew they would have civil war, and, what was far worse, servile war; and he would make the prophecy that, by the time this matter was settled, the peculiar institution of the South would be swept away. Let us finish things while we are about it, and leave nothing behind us."

A business gentleman, writing from Baltimore, says:—"The prospect that our streets must run with blood, appears to be neither distant nor doubtful."

Correction.—In the "Minutes of the R. I. Quarterly Conference," published April 17th, instead of "Frekville," read Fisherville. Also, instead of "Rev." J. D. Brown, J. T. Dixon, and M. R. Phetteplace, read Eld. J. D. Brown, J. T. Dixon, and M. R. Phetteplace.

Contrast.

The following contrast between the doctrine of the Bible and popular theology, is from the pen of Z. Campbell, published, we think, in the "Age of Gospel Light." All can see it is "yea and nay," thus showing that modern theology is not in harmony with the Scriptures. This confirms the testimony of Paul, who said, "This know also, that in the last days . . . they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." That time has evidently come. Let us inquire for "the old paths," and walk in them, if we be covered with reproach for so doing. Let us look at the contrast between Bible teaching and the fables of these last days.

1. Bible. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul."—Gen. 2: 7.

1. Theology. And the Lord God formed man of dust and spirit, and breathed into his nostrils an immortal soul, and man became a mortal-body-man, and an immortal-soul-man.

2. Bible. "For dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return."—Gen. 3: 19.

2. Theology. For dust and spirit thou art and unto dust and spirit shalt thou return.

3. Bible. "For the wages of sin is death."—Rom. 6: 23.

3. Theology. The wages of sin is separating the soul-man from the body-man.

To the Priesthood of the United States.

A CHALLENGE.

Mr. A. J. Davis:—I will meet in discussion any orthodox minister or member of any church in the United States, who may possess the confidence of the religious community, on each or any of the following propositions:

I will take the affirmative of the three following propositions, for three, six, or twelve evenings, in any city in the Northern States or the Canadas, which the acceptor of this challenge may select.

PROPOSITION FIRST.

Resolved, that spirits of human beings who have left the earthly form, can and do return and communicate through mundane media, giving tangible evidences of of their existence and life beyond the grave, through what is termed physical manifestations.

PROPOSITION SECOND.

Resolved, That the doctrine of the Atonement, or that mankind are saved through the blood of Jesus Christ, is a base perversion of all law, human or divine, and further, that the teaching of that doctrine tends more towards injuring the moral and intellectual condition of earth's children than to their good, and that the doctrine is a delusion, a priestly device, a falsehood, and a disgrace to humanity to-day.

PROPOSITION THIRD.

Resolved, That men, animals, and vegetables, came into being by the laws of spontaneous generation and progressive development, and that there is no evidence of a direct creative power on this planet.

This challenge is open to acceptance at any time during the winter or spring. My address can be found in the Banner of Light, or other spiritual papers. All letters to me should be addressed:

H. Melville Ray.

Akron, Summit Co., Ohio, Box 81.

We have sent an acceptance of the first resolution, and named Rochester N. Y. as the place for the discussion, as that city was the cradle and nursery of modern Spiritualism. We have also proposed, Tuesday evening, June 11th, for the commencement of the discussion.

We have just received this neat volume, of one hundred and sixty-three pages, consisting of the interesting prose and poetical writings of one of the most devoted christians we have ever known. Though but twenty years of age when seized by the hand of death, she will be recollected as one of our best contributors to the "Crisis." She was an ardent lover of Jesus and his word, and a faithful defender of the blessed hope of the gospel.

Here was a life characterized by an active faith, and continued deeds of kindness, that are rarely exhibited in these last days. We think those who read Wayside Gleanings, will be thankful they were published.

Evening Shadows.—No. 5.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"And he spake as a dragon."

Dearly beloved pilgrims, looking and longing for the coming of the Just One, allow me, in christian meekness, to submit some few brief ideas concerning this power. We find the following language of an ancient dragon in Ezek. 29: 3,—"Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I am against thee, Pharaoh, king of Egypt, the great dragon that lieth in the midst of his rivers which hath said, my river is my own and I have made it for myself!" What haughty, blasphemous language is this! For a corresponding strain of dragonic speech, see the language of Pope Gregory VII., "Bower's lives of the Popes," vol. ii., p. 401. Let me quote a few items: "The pope alone can wear imperial ornaments. All princes are to kiss his foot and pay that mark of distinction to him alone. His name alone ought to be commemorated in the churches. It is lawful for him to depose Emperors. [illegible] the arbiter of heaven and the Lord of the earth, the successor of St. Peter, the anointed of the Lord, the Master of the Universe, the Father of Kings, the Light of the World!" If that is not a dragonic speech, in all probability there will be a seeking in vain to find it in the past or future. The Egyptian dragon hath said, "Thy river is mine own." The Roman Apocalyptic beast hath said, in the speech of a dragon, it is lawful for me to depose emperors. I am the arbiter of heaven, the Lord of the earth, the Master of the universe, the father of kings, the light of the world.

With devotees simple enough to credit such a lying assumption of power, he is now prepared, by his influence through the Hierarchy, the Church, his corrupt ecclesiastical institution, the harlot power, to deceive them by pretended miraculous endowment; such as possessing power from God to cause fire to be enkindled to burn heretics at the stake, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth. On the expression, "He maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of the men," you certainly, dear reader, do not for one moment suppose this beastly power could perform such a miracle. I think the design of the revelator is, to convey the idea that the Pope claiming power to bind on earth and bind in heaven, by virtue of the same deceived them, stating he had power from heaven to destroy heretics. Permit me here to give you a short extract of a sermon preached at Valladolid, on an occasion of Auto da fe, before Philip King of Spain, when they were going to burn a large number of poor victims at the stake. Speaking of the inquisition, and the fire about to be kindled, the priest said: "And thou, oh most holy tribunal of the faith for boundless ages, mayest thou be preserved, so as to keep us firm and pure in the same faith, and promote the punishment of the enemies of God! O! I can say what the Holy Spirit said of the church, thou art fair, my love, as the tents of Kedar, as the curtains of Solomon." O horrid infatuation! O consummate blasphemy! O strong delusion, because they received not the truth! "The Rev. I. Blanco White saw the pile on which the last victim was sacrificed to Roman infallibility. It was an unhappy woman whom the inquisition of Seville committed to the flames, under the charge of heresy, in 1785. She perished on the spot where thousands had met the same fate." In the above sense he caused fire to come down from heaven.

It is said in the ninth chapter of Rev. 17th, speaking of the Mahometan horsemen, "Out of their mouth issued fire and smoke and brimstone." Was that literal? No! neither was the fire from heaven to be literal. It does seem to me this has had a most positive fulfillment in the history of the two-horned apocalyptic beast. Rejoice! dear pilgrim brother and sister, the monster's day of cruel usurpation and power has ended. He is now a poor, imbecile, sniveling, weak relic of beastly power, reeking with the blood of saints and the martyrs of Jesus.

Dearly beloved, our redemption is very near. Truly the condition of the political elements at this very moment on the Italian soil speaks encouragingly to us. Keep ready. The shadows of evening have set in. The last glimmering rays of gospel light will soon disappear. God bless thee. Amen.

The doom of earth is nearing, signs are gleaming in the sky,
There is wrath 'mid the nations all around;
The Roman harlot's wailing, for her burning day is nigh,
And soon will the Jubal trumpet sound.

Correspondence.

From Eld. L. Boutell.

Bro. Grant:—I have but little time to report my labors, as they have been abundant the past winter. This, seemingly, has been the best of my life in preaching this gospel. Hardships and trials I have to endure, but sweet consolation and permanent pleasure they have yielded. The secret of endurance in this christian warfare is, the love of God, and life of Man. This love will lead to self-denial and prompt us on in the all important work. Self-denial is the sweet of pure religion; the greater the sacrifice, the sweeter the blessing. Our Divine Master designed to bestow upon us the greatest blessing possible. Hence he said, "Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." And if tribulation is the consequence, a hundred fold is sure in this time, and in the world to come, life everlasting.

In all the places I have labored the past winter, I have found a desire to hear the peculiar doctrine of our faith. And, thank the Lord, I am not ashamed to preach it, for I find it the power of God to convert, reform and save all who believe. Bible truth is adapted to make men better, and it is by the foolishness of preaching that men are to be saved. In Lee, N. H., we have had good times in the name of the Lord. To commence with, we had a conference of several days. Circumstances [illegible] most of the time three meetings per day. The Union meeting-house became well filled. The Spirit of the Lord attended the preaching of the word. Many were convinced of its truthfulness, and some led to inquire, "What shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" Some were quickened, others converted from the error of their ways; some found peace in believing. The meeting was a good one. Brn. Mitchell, Kent, and Manning, assisted in the proclamation of truth. The meeting resulted in good, by removing prejudice, and saving some from the second death, I have no doubt. I have been there since, and find still an interest to hear. God bless the lovers of Jesus who make sacrifice for Christ and his cause.

I have also visited the Brn. at Northwood Narrows. Here I found some of the lovers of the coming of Jesus, who were interested to have meetings. I was with them four or five evenings, and preached the word, which was made quick by the Spirit of God, and surely it was good to be with them. They were ready to testify to the truth and goodness of God to them. The Spirit of refreshing was poured out, and the people of all denominations in the village were very ready to come and hear us. I hope they will prove all things, and hold fast that which is good. There are persons in all these places desirous of knowing the truth; but fables and tradition have so long been admitted to be truth, that most believe and are contented with them. They have but a little of the right kind of preaching in all the region; and even that which goes under the name of Advent preaching has not been as it should be. There has been enough going the rounds, with the enemy's old chaff basket, sowing discord, and riding hobbies; but the living bread that comes from heaven, rightly dividing the word of life, showing the nearness of our coming Lord, and the judgment day,—this is fearfully left out only among the few.

One Sunday I spent in Epping, N. H. Here the Universalists freely offered us the use of their house of worship, and although the traveling was bad, we had a goodly number to listen to the word spoken. Some who seldom visit the house of worship were seen at this meeting. In the evening the congregation was large and very attentive. I could but hope it might result in good to the cause of truth. We made some happy acquaintances in this place. God bless them with the love of God in their hearts. At Lawrence, I have been a few times. Here I find a few of the old stamp. Pilgrim-like, they were wide awake. Formalism does not satisfy them. They have had, and still continue to have blessed good meetings. Their Hall is well filled when they have preaching. I might speak of Concord, where I have been once a month; but I must soon draw this to a close. There is abundant encouragement to labor, especially in new places. But our time is short. The Lord is at hand. These, surely, are perilous times. Thrones and kingdoms are crumbling. The powers of the heavens have been shaken. O, Lord! preserve thy people, is my prayer. War, and not peace, is the order of the day. The last signs are bringing in the day of the Lord! To arms! to arms!! is the cry we now hear. All will be stirred. But, disciples of Jesus, keep yourselves in peace. We are coming into terrible times, but the Lord is the hope of the churches. Seek a shelter from the storm. The better day is soon coming. In hope.

Groton, Mass., Apr. 17, 1861.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Lowell, March 29th, Sister RUTH N. MOODY, wife of Bro. Joel Moody, aged 40 years.

Sister M. had for several years been a follower of the Savior in faith and practice. She loved the ways of peace, and lived in hope of its perfection in the kingdom. Her sickness, which was long, she bore with patience, while she grew in grace and the knowledge of her Lord. It was not her wish to die, still she submitted to it as an event that must take place. As death was before her, so was the resurrection. She looked not at death as the time when to receive a crown of righteousness, but at the coming of her Savior to raise her from the dead, and to give her the victory over death and the grave, believing the promise of Christ, "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." She emphatically enjoyed her hope, for it was a lively one. She hoped for realities—things promised; believing that all the promises are yea and amen in Christ, and that they will be fulfilled as they are recorded.

She has left a husband, brother and sister, and children of her companion, with other relatives, who feel deeply the loss they have sustained. May the Lord sanctify this affliction to all the circle of friends. Her funeral was attended on the Sunday following, in the Advent Chapel, where a discourse was given to a large congregation from John 6 : 40,—"I will raise him up at the last day."

J. S. WHITE.

Died, in West Wardsboro, Vt., March 4th, 1861, DEACON STEPHEN BEALEY, aged 74.

The following short obituary was prepared for the Crisis in accordance with a promise the writer made to the deceased just before his death; and most of the facts here stated were related by the sick man at that time.

From his youth Deacon B. was naturally of a retiring, meditative disposition. When a lad at school, he used to prefer being alone. At the age of sixteen he began to think seriously of his accountability to his Maker, and was accustomed to spend the intermission from school hours in some retired place, meditating or reading some religious book. This, by degrees, led him to see his sins against a just and holy God, and to feel his fearful danger. His convictions increased until he looked to Christ for pardon and salvation. As soon as he believed with all the heart, he received that peace and joy which Christ alone can give. After a number of years he felt impressed that it was his duty to connect himself with the Baptist church, and was accordingly baptized about the year 1820. He continued a faithful and efficient and beloved member for twenty-five years. The latter part of this time, he served acceptably as Deacon, being very punctual at all the meetings, particularly the prayer meetings.

In 1845 he left the Baptist church and connected himself with the Adventists, and died in that connection. From his connection to his death, Bro. B. loved the cause of Christ and desired the salvation of souls. About six months before his death he seemed to receive a new impulse to labor for God. Moved by this impulse, which was evidently the work of the Holy Spirit, he established a union prayer meeting in his own house, which was attended with good results; how much good, eternity alone will reveal.

As his health declined his love for the Savior and his joy in the "Holy Comforter" increased. Being asked by the writer of this, if religion was not a great support and comfort on a bed of sickness, after a short silence he said, "I have just sent an express message to an aged friend that he must seek religion immediately, assuring him he could hardly endure sickness and death without it." He also said he now understood that passage of Scripture which speaks of the disciples' "joy being full." He never understood it before. His joy was full; it was all he asked for, all he needed, all he could bear.

About one week before his death he engaged Geo. Carpenter, pastor of the Baptist church in his place, to preach his funeral sermon, there being no minister of his order near. Not twenty-four hours before he died, he selected the following text; 2 Tim. 4 : 7, 8,—"I have fought the good fight," etc. His funeral was attended in the meeting house by a large concourse of mourning friends, and a solemn, and we hope, profitable discourse preached according to his request. His remains were deposited in the new cemetery, there to await the appearing of the Lord.

"How still and peaceful is the grave!
There the weary pilgrim rests."

Dea. B has left a large legacy to his surviving companion and two children; not perhaps in the things of this world, but in his cheerful and confident trust in the Savior for temporal and spiritual blessings, and in the evidence they have that his trust was wise and well founded. The fact that the Savior carried him triumphantly through, should give them, and all who read this, confidence to trust the same Savior. G. C.

The Pays gives a rumor that England intends an expeditionary corps to Syria, and will occupy the point of territory between Upper Syria and Egypt.

ITALY.

Reactionary attempts have been suppressed at numerous places.

Portugal acknowledges the new Italian kingdom.

The health of the Pope is unsatisfactory.

AUSTRIA.

The Austrian Diet has unanimously passed a vote of thanks to the Emperor for the new law relative to Protestants. Another law published grants to women the right of voting at elections for members of the Diet.

The Journal St. Petersburg gives the following version of the renewed disturbance in Warsaw: Great crowds of people having assembled before the Castle, they were dispersed by force. The conflict was renewed several times. Ten persons were killed and as many more wounded. Five soldiers were killed. Forty-five persons were arrested. Other accounts say that the number of victims was larger, even than stated in the original telegram. A renewal of the disturbances was expected. The number of troops at Warsaw is 32,000.

SPAIN.

Warlike preparations on the largest scale are spoken of, and an expenditure of twenty millions sterling is rumored.

DENMARK.

A Cabinet Council on the 8th resolved that the whole infantry force shall be doubled. It is said the whole army is to be placed on a war footing.

TWO DAYS LATER.

New York, April 25th. The steamship Asia from Liverpool 13th and Queenstown 14th, arrived this morning.

In France warlike rumors were increasing.

Very warlike rumors continued to prevail in Paris, and among others it was stated that 60,000 troops were suddenly ordered to Marseilles, and that France was about to notify her intention of indefinitely prolonging the Syrian occupation.

It was also said that sharp notes were exchanged almost daily with England relative to the Syrian question. These rumors all lack confirmation, but they caused great uneasiness.

Paris letters say that war is regarded as inevitable.

Garibaldi's health is improving.

The Pope's health causes much uneasiness.

The American Minister at Rome was insulted by the troops, owing to the Easter festivities. He threatened to use his revolver, but afterwards demanded of the government better protection for the future or his passport. His demand was complied with.

ONE WEEK LATER.

By the arrival of the Steamship Arabia, we have advices from Europe to Apr. 21st:

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Italian question was debated. The French occupation of Rome was deplored; a prospect of collision between Austria and Italy was deprecated by all the speakers.

FRANCE.

The Paris correspondent of the Daily News says Russia has informed France that, in consequence of events at Warsaw, it will be impossible to join the French in any measure for the settlement of the Eastern question. The alleged reason for this is, that Russia regards France as an accomplice in the Polish disturbances.

ITALY.

Garibaldi took his seat in the Italian parliament, and business was temporarily suspended by the applause.

The action of the Ministry in disbanding the Southern army was debated, and measures taken for its re-organization.

Garibaldi made his speech so violent that it excited a tumult in the chamber. He made offensive allusions to the Ministry, against which Count Cavour protested. The President of the Chamber put on his hat, and the sitting was suspended for a brief interval.

Garibaldi, in resuming, spoke with more moderation. He defended his comrades in arms, and said that the formation of three divisions of volunteers, as decreed, was not sufficient for a national armament. He explained several facts alluded to by Cavour, and expressed his belief that Cavour loved Italy. He designated the French army as the enemy of Italy, because it occupied Rome.

On the 19th, Garibaldi was again received in the Chamber with loud applause. A discussion took place on the organization of the Ministry of War. The excitement of the previous day had subsided, and words of concord between Cavour and Bixio were applauded by all, and Garibaldi expressed himself satisfied.

POLAND.

Warsaw advices say matters are daily growing worse. It is feared that the exasperation of the people will lead to fresh disturbances.

DOMESTIC.

New Orleans, April 23. Fifteen hundred Tennesseans are en route to join the Southern Confederate army.

The people of Washington are greatly alarmed, and all who could have left the city. The hotels are nearly all deserted, and there is some talk of closing them.

Dr. Dimonton reports that Judge Robinson of Richmond offered General Scott a commission as Commander-in-Chief of the Confederate army. The General interrupted him with the declaration that if he went any further in making such a proposition he (Robinson) would not be permitted to get back to Richmond alive, adding that having sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, he realized all the honorable obligations of that oath, and should of course observe it.

Havre de Grace, April 24. It is thought the navigation of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal will be stopped, as it is apprehended all cargoes will be seized.

Two Light boats on the Potomac were burnt by the Virginians, to prevent government vessels from carrying troops to Washington.

The mails between Washington and Annapolis had been stopped. The mails from Richmond have been stopped by Government.

The Virginians had taken possession of the port of Norfolk, and secured a large quantity of ammunition, which was sent to Richmond.

PURCHASE OF ARMS. A number of agents went in the last steamer for Europe to purchase arms, one being a merchant from this city. The arms obtained will, doubtless, be of the most efficient character.

A resident of Kent County, Maryland, has received information that the negroes are burning the houses of the whites, and that two of his buildings have been destroyed.

New York, April 26. A special dispatch to the Times, from Harrisburg, says Mr. Buchanan has hurriedly disposed of his farm and fled to Canada, on account of threats against him by the Ohio troops.

A letter from the wife of Bishop Polk of Louisiana, says his house was burnt over his head, on the night of the 12th of April, by his negroes. Also the residence of Bishop Elliott.

A special dispatch to the Post from Chicago says Illinois troops, under orders of the President, crossed to St Louis last night, advanced to the Federal Arsenal and brought away immense stores of artillery and small arms belonging to the government. There was no fighting. Among the articles obtained are 21,000 stands of small arms, and a stock of artillery.

New York, April 28. The Virginia ordinance of secession is published. It repeals her ratification of the Federal Constitution, and affects to resume for her all her rights and powers as a free and independent State. The ordinance is to take effect when ratified by a majority of the votes of the people of the State on the fourth Tuesday in May.

Philadelphia, April 25. Passengers from Harrisburg via. the Northern Central Railroad, also via. Chambersburg, report that all was quiet at Baltimore yesterday. Guards were stationed at all the public buildings, and there was a strict surveillance over strangers passing through. The price of a carriage to York was $60. All the wholesale houses were closed. Many northern born clerks were escaping, as all had been ordered to enlist. Five cars arrived at Chambersburg this morning, filled with families flying from Baltimore. All the males over fourteen were required to enlist.

The Sun says that the war spirit in Virginia is fully aroused; volunteering and arming is going on rapidly. Capt. Russell, of the steamer Louisiana, reports over 7000 troops from the South arrived at Norfolk on Tuesday. Their destination is a secret.

New Orleans, April 25. Accounts from the upper parishes state that the military spirit is increasing. Volunteer companies are forming, the planters offering money freely.

It was stated at Brazos that the Mexicans are getting up another guerilla war on the Rio Grande, above Brownsville. The town of Roma has been pillaged and burnt, and many American families murdered. Brownsville has also been threatened.

Fort Kearney, April 25. Serious Indian troubles are apprehended, as large numbers are collecting near the settlements, and committing petty depredations.

Washington, April 24. All well people are leaving the city, apprehensive of an attack.

Provisions have advanced 25 per cent.

A deputation of twenty Indians has arrived to tender 300 warriors of the Sioux and Chippewa Indians to the President.

Washington, April 26. There are 14,000 troops here, and no trouble has been anticipated since Friday.

Jeff. Davis, on the 22d, was making active preparations for an attack on Washington. Our informant passed en route from Alabama and Georgia, troops bound for Richmond.

Gen. Renau of Tennessee was at Montgomery, making arrangements to send 2000 desperadoes in citizens' dress to Baltimore and Washington, to secretly operate in an attack near Washington.

The Confederate States are in a state of anarchy. Business is prostrated. People are less confident, and the country is in a state of mob law. The people are escaping every opportunity.

New Orleans, April 26. The city is crowded with volunteers of a most warlike aspect.

A letter from Central Ohio says: "This country is all alive. The wildest excitement prevails. Soldiers are passing through here nearly every hour in the day. Our railroad shops are closing up and all are going to war. One hundred men have left the Bellefontaine Railroad and enlisted in the service."

Cairo, Ill., April 28. Gentlemen from New Orleans on Friday report the whole country between Jackson, Tennessee, and New Orleans in arms. Companies were seen drilling at every station along the road. They seemed to be destitute of arms, using old muskets, shot guns, and rifles.

The telegraph is in possession of the secessionists, and is not permitted to give any information of the movement of troops. All the troops, except those at Fort Pickens, are being moved rapidly North.

A gentleman who left Columbia, S. C., April 22d, furnishes the subjoined information to the New York Times:

At Columbia, all business has been closed for two weeks past, and every person who can bear arms is a soldier. Besides the citizens of Columbia, there are 2300 militia from the mountain regions in that place. They are of all ages, sizes and characters, without uniforms, except blankets, and are unarmed except about 400.

Every citizen is out on patrol duty one night in each week to guard against insurrection of the slaves. This has been kept up since January. All slaves have to be in at bell-ringing—a quarter to 9 o'clock—on penalty of going to the guard house, and receiving a whipping in the morning. Since secession they are required to be in an hour earlier than before.

A Chambersburg (Pa.) letter to the New York Times states that a force of blacks from Canada and the Northern States is organizing for the purpose of stirring up insurrection among the slaves in Eastern Virginia. John Brown, Jr., will take command of the enterprise, in which Anderson, a mulatto, who was with John Brown at Harper's Ferry, is active. They will be fully armed and equipped, and act on their own responsibility.

It is said there are now 35,000 troops in Washington, or moving towards it, and 18,900 more ready and awaiting orders.

The ports of Virginia and North Carolina are to be blockaded.

SUNDAY AT THE NAVY YARD.—The Navy Yard [at Charlestown, Mass.,] yesterday, [April 28th] presented a striking contrast to the quiet which usually reigns there on the Sabbath. The urgent necessity of the times requiring that every moment of daylight shall be laid under contribution to the National safety, the bells summoning workmen to their labor were rung yesterday as usual. The men with but few exceptions answered to their names at roll call, and pursued their customary avocations. Operations were carried on in nearly every department of the Yard. Teamsters hither and thither transporting provisions, water tanks, spars, furniture, and various supplies to the several ships. The marine guard for the Minnesota were out for drill, under Maj. Reynolds, preparatory to being sent to sea, and everything about the Yard, save the work of rebuilding the barracks, went on in the usual routine.—Boston Journal.

LETTERS FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.—On board the U. S. Steamer Baltic.—Monday, April 22d.—To the Editor of the Boston Journal:

No man ever saw such a Sunday in New York as yesterday. The 6th and 72d, and 71st regiments left the city; the marching of the men, the crowd of friends, the streaming flags from all the churches, with banners from all the houses and windows, the strains of martial music, Dixie and national airs, the huzzas of millions, the empty churches, make the day one long to be remembered.

The 12th was ordered to form at 9 A. M., Sunday. As early as 8 the crowd was on hand. The leave-taking was painful. The regiment could not keep Broadway; the soldiers and the people fraternized. Some families actually marched the whole way, ladies and all, down to the boat in the line.

I never saw such an ovation. As Col. Butterfield rode up Broadway, he was almost drowned with cheers. The regiment was 1000 strong, and men and women who never are seen at Sunday parades, left their churches and cheered and shouted as the 12th filed along.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

For the Crisis.

Resurrection Morning.

BY W. SHELDON.

AIR.—"As time's last sands seemed wasting."

The angels soon are coming,
To gather all the just,
Who are in death reposing,
Unconscious in the dust;
They hear the trumpet sounding—
It penetrates the graves—
Now into life they're bounding,
No more to death are slaves.

The resurrection morning,
With all its dazzling light,
Is now upon us dawning
In rays of glory bright;
The saints are made immortal,—
The living and the dead,
Their bodies are celestial,
Like Christ their living head.

The Savior then descending,
In clouds of glory bright,
The angels are attending—
How swift their downward flight!
The saints then upward rising,
The holy angels meet—
An army vast comprising
In holiness complete.

A city, too, in splendor
Shall to the earth descend,
Earth's kingdoms shall surrender,
And wickedness shall end;
Messiah's kingdom holy,
Upon the earth shall bloom,
There all the meek and lowly
Will find an endless home.

For the Crisis.

THE COMING STRUGGLE Between the Church and the Powers of Darkness:

SHOWING THE MISSION AND DESTINY OF SPIRITUALISM.

No. 12.

THE ORDER OF DEVELOPMENT.

The various phases of the movement in the order of their development, as they appear to me, are as follows:—First we have the seducing spirits, teaching "doctrines of devils," and also the men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith, being unholy, blasphemers, "despisers of those that are good," etc. They speak lies in hypocrisy, having their consciences seared. They forbid to marry, and creep into houses and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts. They resist the truth as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses. This is the present phase of the movement. The next step in development will be a successful champion for their faith in the head of the two horned beast, doing great wonders, even to making fire come down from heaven on earth in the sight of men. The world, gazing with wonder and reverence on his strange displays of power, will be disposed to regard his mission according to his claims as a sort of forerunner of the "Coming Man." By fraternizing with the Catholics and others, he will change the popular tide in favor of Spiritualism, and bring up the image of the beast, or new dispensation, as they will call it. In this new arrangement the head of this two-horned beast power seems to resign his political relation, and assumes the head of the religious element as high priest, diviner, or prophet called in scripture the false prophet. The Beast seems to occupy the head of the political department. And the dragon will be over all as the "false Christ," "man of sin," etc.

With this arrangement of things they now go on in their work of subduing the world, claiming that the coming of Christ has its complete accomplishment in this New Dispensation, with their "Coming Man," the false Christ, at its head. Hence all must yield up their claims to his earth, and submit to him as loyal subjects, from whom, as the only rightful authority, they can now lay any claim to the earth or the fulness thereof. They guard with jealous care their claimed "right to rule," putting to death as far as may be all who will not recognise this right, by submission; and to facilitate this work of subduing all, they introduce a mark of loyalty, conspicuously placed in the right hand, or forehead, in order, probably, to detect at sight such as refuse to submit. They further provide that none shall buy nor sell save those who have this mark, which seems also to imply a confiscation of their goods. When they have succeeded in getting things to moving about after their own way, and have become intoxicated in their anticipations of peace and safety, in their supposed triumph over the restraints of Christianity, then the judgments of God will overtake them in the pouring out of the "seven last plagues," making life a burden and its blessings a curse.

The first plague puts an end to their high glee by smiting all those who have the mark of the beast, or worship his image, with a noisome and grievous sore. Then the sea becomes as the blood of a dead man, and the fish die. Then the rivers and springs are all turned to blood, and they have nothing but blood to drink, as a judgment for shedding the blood of the saints. Then the sun is made to scorch them with fire, and they blaspheme the name of God, but refuse to give him glory. The next vial is poured out on the seat of the beast, and they gnaw their tongues for pain, and blaspheme the name of God, who has power over these plagues, but repent not of their deeds.

Enraged at God as the author of these plagues, whose power and resources the spirits have represented as inferior to their own; and understanding probably through the spirits that Christ is soon coming to Mt. Zion to set up his kingdom; they muster all their forces throughout the world, and hasten to the city of Jerusalem, where Christ descends. A special effort is made here by the spirits, in sending out three messengers from the invisible world, in order to gather all that is possible to this battle. Then Christ comes and gathers his children from the earth. But still they assemble, hoping perhaps to hinder him from setting up his kingdom, and, gathering to the battle, they are overthrown forever. Thus ends Spiritualism.

We will now inquire how the church deals with this delusion of Satan, while it is coming up and doing its work.

THE CHURCH DOING THESE PERILOUS TIMES.

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the Everlasting Gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven and earth and the sea and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication. And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation, and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone, in the presence of the holy angels and in the presence of the Lamb. And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever (until the ages of ages) and they have no rest day nor night who worship the beast and his image and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name. Here is the patience of the saints. Here are they that keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus. And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, 'Write, blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them.' And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of Man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle."—Rev. 14: 6–14.

In the 13th chap., commencing with the 11th verse, we have an account of the two-horned beast, and the image, and their work of oppression toward the church, carried down in their progress to the time of Christ's coming to Mount Zion in the commencement of the 14th chap. Then the account of the saints triumph, glorification and rejoicing follows to the sixth verse, where the division of chapters should have been made instead of where it is. For with this sixth verse John takes up the movements of the church during the same period of their oppression by this power, and carries them through the proclamation of three different messages directed against their persecutors, in three different stages of their progress, down to the coming of Christ.

These three messages, directed by the church against this power, have a peculiar significance as directed against Infidelity or Atheism in the first message; against a general departure to Spiritualism, or that Babylon has accepted it, in the second; and against receiving the mark of the beast or worshiping his image in the third. The first is made against the present phase of the movement; the second when the departure to Spiritualism becomes general; and the third when they have got the power into their own hands, and are proceeding to subdue all; then the coming of Christ is introduced as one sitting on a white cloud, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle. That the first message is directed against Infidelity, or Atheism, seems to be clearly implied in the language used by John giving the substance of the message. A proclamation generally made by the church, (and it is allowed that these angels each symbolize the church,) to "Fear God and give glory to him," implies that people are regardless of the fear of God, and withhold the glory due to him. But the world are further admonished to "worship him that made heaven and earth, the sea, and the fountains of waters." This allusion to God as "him who made" all these things, shows that the cry is directed against Atheism, and may be very properly directed against that doctrine of Spiritualism which asserts that the world made itself. From the phraseology, the cry seems coupled also with the warning, that God will show himself the God of all these things which he has made, in the pouring out of the seven last plagues; and capable of suspending their infallible law of nature when he will. This message is sealed to their hearts, if possible, by the solemn announcement "For the hour (or season) of his judgment has come." Therefore let this message be made where it will, when it will, and by whom it will, this feature embodies the essence of the Advent sentiment, and shows it an Advent message. And I have no doubt in my mind but it is soon to be made by Adventists.

☞ If there is an angel form on earth, it is that form whose soul breathes only the mild spirit of kindness, and is employed in the generous deeds it inspires—who lives and feels and acts under the sweet and balmy influence of a kind, benignant heart. Kindness is the very spirit and soul of religion.

For the Crisis.

"A Little While."

Like "oil upon the troubled waters" are these words of cheer, to those weighed down by the sorrows incident to this "vale of tears." The christian soldier is often weary of buffeting, from without and within; his soul is assaulted by the sin that dwelleth in him, as well as by the malice of the "Prince of the power of the air," who knows that his "time is short." To repel his fiery darts, we must put on the "shield of faith," assured that "stronger is He that is with us, than all that are against us." This will nerve us to endure "yet a little while" the battle of the christian warfare. Is sickness and disease our allotment, wearisome nights being appointed us, pain and anguish, making our life a burden, so that the language of our hearts is, 'How long, oh Lord, how long?" Peace, chastened child of God. These "light afflictions" are but for "a little while,"—yet they are "working out" for thee "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," when patience has had its perfect work in thy soul.

Do relative afflictions try our souls, and desolation of heart lead us to feel "there is no sorrow like unto my sorrow"? Yet, the same "balm of Gilead" can avail for such grief. One friend there is, above all others; in whom all fullness dwells. Look to Him—make him thy all—wait "yet a little while," and the joys of the coming kingdom shall more than compensate for trials here. These words tend to inspire as well as comfort. The christian will not sit with folded hands, because his "redemption draweth nigh." He will be stimulated to renewed exertion in the paths of privilege and duty, doing what his hands find to do with his might, improving to the utmost the "little while."

The potency of this little clause is not confined to the sorrowing. To the sinner, and "those at ease in Zion," it is a caution fraught with meaning. Your cup of happiness may now overflow; but remember, you may not rest in any earthly good. The day of grace is but for a little while. Oh, improve it by securing eternal joys.

"Yet a little while—the Lord
Gave his saints this precious word,
That their hearts with joy might burn,
Thinking of his quick return.

Yet a little while—the hour
Comes, when we can work no more;
Let us then with single eye
Seek our God to glorify.

Yet a little while—and we Shall with our beloved be;
May each word and action show
That our hearts are with him now."

Women as Preachers and Lecturers.

[Extracted from the "Portadown News," Ireland, of March 2d, 1861.]

BRO. GRANT:—The following is from across the water, and shows what some of our Irish brethren think of female preachers. As for myself, I know of none among us whom I would silence, and think if there are yet others who are moved by God to the work, they had better "up and at it." There are none too many who "preach the coming of Jesus." D. T. T.

To the Editor of the "Portadown News:"—DEAR SIR,—A correspondent, in your paper, takes up the question of woman occupying positions as public speakers, and, by every means in his power, endeavors to show that woman ought not do so; still, as he is "open to conviction," and as he wishes for "an explanation" of the texts which he quoted, I shall endeavor to gratify him therein.

I will say here that if a woman can effect good in a world like ours, where so much is yet to be done for its reformation, I would think twice before I would discourage her or throw any obstacle in her way. Perhaps no man living has effected half as much for a revival of religion as Mrs. Phoebe Palmer; but "An Admirer of Woman in her proper place" would not suffer "a woman to teach." I would like to know if ever he saw a female engaged in a school to "teach." Could such a man not see that the "teaching" of which Paul writes is not such as that given in our Sunday-schools, and from our pulpits or platforms? I hold that each individual in this world is morally bound to do as much good to others as he or she can; and he or she is bound to leave the world better than he or she found it—if they possibly can. And is Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe and other ladies to "teach" me through my eyes, and are they prohibited from teaching me through my ears? Certainly not. Has Miss Buck, of England, powers in the pulpit equal to the greatest pulpit orator of the day, and is she not to use such powers? Are Spurgeon and such men to be lauded to the skies whilst sowing the heresy of Calvinism, mixed up with scraps of street songs and old wives' fables, and is Miss Buck to be condemned while she preaches, with much superior eloquence and dignity, the glorious gospel of the grace of God to sinful, fallen mankind—none excepted? Let us hear no more of this condemnation of woman going about doing good. I suppose, indeed I might venture to assert, that Mrs. Palmer, Miss Buck, and women like them, have each done more to lead sinners to a Savior than any man of the same period; and will not the souls thus saved be to these women "a crown of rejoicing?" To be sure they will.

Who would object to a woman rescuing his friend from temporal death? No man. Then why object to a woman rescuing men from eternal death? Who would dare say that Grace Darling did wrong to go out in the life-boat and rescue the crew of a sinking vessel? No man. Why then object to a woman pushing out the gospel life-boat to rescue men sinking into perdition? Who would dare to say Mrs. Fry did wrong in seeking to rescue men from dismal dungeons? No man. Then why object to woman going "to seek and to save" those that are pining in the dungeons of sin and iniquity?

Is not Mrs. Theobald one of the ablest advocates of the Total Abstinence cause? Is she surpassed by any as a speaker on that question? I venture to affirm she is not. Then why silence such an advocate?

Neither Paul nor any other Apostle forbade women preaching, or lecturing. I affirm such a command is nowhere in the Bible, and I shall proceed to prove it; and, besides, I will prove that Paul taught the very opposite.

"An Admirer of Woman in her proper place" has quoted 1 Cor. 14: 34, 35. Now, surely the fourteenth chapter does not contradict the eleventh, which was necessarily written before it. In 1 Cor. 11: 4, 5, St. Paul says—"Every man praying or prophesying having his head covered dishonoreth his head; but every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoreth her head." Why did not "An Admirer" read this chapter before he read the other? It would not suit his prejudice.

Instead of St. Paul forbidding woman to conduct public worship—for that is what "praying and prophesying" mean—he actually condescends, as "An Admirer" would, perhaps, think, to settle and arrange how a woman is to dress when she "prophesieth," or preacheth. It will be seen from the verses I have quoted above, that whatever "every man" was to do in the church in "praying and prophesying," woman was to do the same; and, instead of Paul forbidding the woman, he merely tells herself and the man how they are to dress—one with the head uncovered, the other with it covered. "An Admirer" has made some reference to Eve, but he is evidently totally ignorant of the nature of the temptation to which Eve was exposed, of the manner in which it was put, and of the share which Adam had in the matter.

Dr. Adam Clarke says the prediction of Joel 2: 28, would not be fulfilled unless women prophesied, preached, or taught; and he says Peter understood it thus when, in Acts 2: 17, he quotes it, saying—"Your daughters shall prophesy." Dr Adam Clarke, in a word, is entirely in favor of female preaching, and contends that the verses quoted by "An Amirer" bear no such meaning as that attached to them by those who oppose female preaching.

Perhaps some may ask—"What is prophesying?" In 1 Cor. 14: 3, St. Paul says it is to speak "unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort," and women were to do it. And, according to the "word of the Lord" by the prophet Joel—"Your sons and your daughters shall prophesy;" and, according to Paul, this prediction was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost; and, according to Paul, women were to pray and prophesy as much as men, only to keep their heads covered. And why even this rule about the covered head? Simply because in the East then, and at present, an uncovered female was, and is, looked upon "all one as if she were shaven"—the latter being the mark of prostitution. The reader will now see why St. Paul ordered the covered heads—that is, covered with a veil as in the East—and this portion of his directions does not apply at all to our fashions.

Will the reader be kind enough to turn now to 1 Cor. 14, from which "An Admirer" quotes, and read the entire chapter over. You will see that St. Paul is writing on a different topic to that on which he wrote in chapter 11; and every fair interpreter of the Scripture will admit that, if in chapter 11th Paul authorizes female preaching, then he cannot in chapter 14 forbid it. Let us now see what chapter 14 refers to. There seems to have been some "confusion" in the church at Corinth, in their meetings of church courts; for it could not be in the ordinary or regular public service. The men speaking (verse 27) were to speak "by two, or at most, by three, and that by course," or, in other words, in their turn—after one another. This was to prevent two, or three, or half a dozen, men speaking at once—or even a dozen, as I have often seen in public meetings. This was a meeting for discussion and debate on church matters, such as that recorded in Acts 15, where there was "much disputing." It was not a regular religious service, and could not be such. At verse 29, it is said—"Let the prophets speak, two or three, and let the others judge." Here again, it was not an ordinary regular service; it was a meeting for discussion, and for the election of church officers; and the candidates for positions in the church were to be heard, and all the other members were to judge of the qualifications of each, and to make their selections accordingly. At the 33d verse, this view is sustained still further by the words—"For God is not the author of confusion." In order to prevent much discussion in these church courts, he forbids the women to speak in them—they are to "ask their husbands at home;" therefore Miss M'Kinney cannot be included.

Having thus clearly established that the place in which a woman was to "keep silence" was in a court of the church, not in an ordinary regular meeting, I shall pass on to notice the passage from Timothy.

In 1 Tim. 2: 12, 14, St. Paul is forbidding the woman to "usurp authority;" and if any reader will but read this chapter, of fifteen verses, through, he or she will see at a glance that he has nothing whatever to say to public speaking. If "An Admirer" had quoted 1 Tim. 2: 9 it might have been more needed in the present day. Our Methodist ladies seem to have forgotten that such a passage is in the Bible—"That women adorn themselves in modest apparel, (could Paul have had hoops on a windy day in his prophetic vision?) with shamefacedness and sobriety—not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, of costly array; but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works." There is not a word in the entire chapter against woman speaking and doing good—adorning herself "with good works"—in the cause of God and of fallen and debased humanity. If "An Admirer" will have a literal rendering of verse 12, then out with all our thousands of female Sunday-school and day-school teachers, for if a woman is not "to teach," in the literal sense, then all our female teachers, religious and secular, in Sunday-schools, national schools, Church Education Society schools, etc., are all rushing on in direct opposition to Paul, when he says—"I suffer not a woman to teach." The woman is to "learn in silence with all subjection." "Subjection" to whom? "Wives submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as it is fit in the Lord" (Col. 3: 18.) This is the "subjection" spoken of in Timothy, as is clearly shown by Adam and Eve—husband and wife—representatives of all our race of husbands and wives—being brought in by way of illustrating his subject, and the object which he had in view. A woman is not "to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man," that is, a wife is not to act so towards her husband. The passage has nothing whatever to do with regard to Total Abstinence lecturers, or gospel preachers. On the contrary, a woman is to pray and prophesy (1 Cor. 11: 5,) just as the man, and with equal power and authority; and this is according to the prediction of the Holy Ghost (Joel 2: 28; Acts 2: 17.)

"An Admirer" could not have quoted a case which tells more against himself than that of Phoebe mentioned in Rom. 16: 1. She was a deaconess. Does not "An Admirer" know that the Church of England and other churches hold that a deacon was a certain rank in the ministry? and if so, then so was a deaconess. Dr. Adam Clarke says, too, that the deaconesses "were ordained to their office by the imposition of the hands of the bishop." In the second verse of this chapter, Paul actually directs the christians at Rome—the men, too—I wish "An Admirer" had been amongst them, how it would have lowered his dignity—to assist sister Phoebe "in whatever business she hath need of you." Does this not look very like an appointment of Phoebe as "the first Pope of Rome," for she was to have absolute authority over all the church there?

I will conclude by glancing at female characters in Scripture who occupied a position as teachers and leaders of the people equal to men. Deborah, the wife of Lapidoth—mark she was married too—was a prophetess, and judged Israel (Judges 4: 4, 10.) Huldah, the prophetess, the wife of Shallum—a married woman also—dwelt at Jerusalem, in the College; and her dignified message to the King, who came to inquire at her mouth the will of God, does not betray any trembling diffidence or abject servility, although "An Admirer" would have woman so much inferior to man. It would be, perhaps, useless to remind him that in Christianity "there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." (Gal. 3: 28.) It is said (Micah 6: 4,)—"For I brought thee up out of the land of Egypt; and I sent before thee Moses, Aaron and Miriam." God here classes Miriam with Moses and Aaron, and declares that he sent her before his people. I presume had "An Admirer" been there he would have refused to go up through the wilderness under such a female leader. Need I refer to Anna, the prophetess (Luke 2: 37, 38) and to "the women which labored with Paul in the gospel" as his "fellow laborers"—therefore, preaching as he did? Timothy, in Thess. 3: 2, is styled "a minister of God, and our fellow-laborer in the gospel of Christ." Then these women were the same as Timothy, who was a bishop of the church. In Rom. 16: 12, three women are named as having "labored much in the Lord;" and Dr. Adam Clarke contends that they preached, for he says they prophesied, and that "if a woman thus prophesied, then women preached." This is Dr. Clarke's view, and I value it as highly as John Wesley's.

"An Admirer" seems to think that woman is much inferior to man, and throws out taunts about "mother Eve," to which taunts I have already alluded. If, through Eve, sin first entered into this world—and that, too, with the hearty concurrence of Adam—then let it not be forgotten that by woman, without the concurrence of man, a Savior came to bring deliverance. If woman be taunted about Eve, she can turn and point to Mary, and all the women who ministered to Christ daily up to his burial, and at his resurrection. Dr. Doddridge exhorts man to "rejoice that, as by woman came transgression, so by her came redemption too;" and I may add—why should not women preach that redemption also?

Judging by the results which have followed the labors of such women as Mrs. Rogers, Mrs. Fletcher, Miss Tooth, Miss Cutter, Miss Buck, Miss Marsh, Mrs. Theobald, Mrs. Stowe, Mrs. Palmer, Mrs. Booth, and a host of others, I rather think "the Lord of the vineyard" will require some more satisfactory excuse for even female timidity and backwardness in his service than the one given by "An Admirer," before they will be justified in ceasing to labor in his cause. I may say that I think Miss M'Kinney chose an admirable hymn.

I am yours, etc., J. A. MOWATT.

Why am I not a Christian?

1. Is it because I am afraid of ridicule, and of what others may say of me?

"Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed."

2. Is it because of the inconsistencies of professing christians?

"Every man shall give account of himself to God."

3. Is it because I am not willing to give up all for Christ?

"What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

4. Is it because I am afraid that I shall not be accepted?

"Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out."

5. Is it because I fear that I am too great a sinner?

"The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin."

6. Is it because I am afraid that I shall not "hold out?"

"He that hath begun a good work in you, he will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ."

7. Is it because I am thinking that I will do as well as I can, and that God ought to be satisfied with that?

"Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."

8. Is it because I am postponing the matter without any definite reason?

"Boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth."

9. Is it because I am trying to save myself by morality, or in any other way of my own?

Tobacco and Hard Times.

AN APPEAL TO A POOR MAN TO GIVE UP TOBACCO.—SIX REASONS.

MY FRIEND:—I respectfully call on men in all positions to drop tobacco—doctors, deacons and potentates—and, thanks to a gracious God, many have done it.

You say you are a poor man, and dependent on friends; hence, consider a few reasons why you should drop tobacco.

1. Drop it, for it does you no actual good.—It is not a necessary of life. Any honest physician will tell you that it is a rank poison, containing not a single particle of nutrition, and that it does no more to furnish blood, bone and muscle, than would sawdust or ashes. True, it may blunt your sensibilities, and enable you to bear trouble with a more stoical indifference. True, it may relieve the terrible "goneness" of which you speak; but it actually creates the very "goneness" you think it cures, and deceives you. True it appeases a vile appetite, which God never gave, and affords momentary gratification. Rum and opium appease a similar appetite, and drunkards use them for this purpose.

How useless is your tobacco! Thousands now delving at the plough and anvil—thousands now preaching Christ in this and other lands, together with all the self-sacrificing reformers, the Howards, the Wilberforces of the age—do without it, and so can you. Be not deceived. You need this drug no more than you need the "seven heads and ten horns" mentioned in the Apocalypse.

2. Drop it, for you are poor, and should use every cent to the best advantage.—There is no apology for any man, rich or poor, who consumes money for this nuisance; but is not this especially unbecoming in you when your friends give you money simply for the necessaries of life? Is it not a perversion of funds? The evils of tobacco, it is true, are overlooked by church and state, and hence your friends do not consider for a moment that a part of their money is wasted on a vile poison. Tell them, as they pass you the next dollar, that you shall use one-eighth of it on cigars, and they might give you to understand that, were it not for your family, they would never aid you with another farthing! Money for rum, gambling and tobacco, is all the same in the eye of common sense!

You say, your tobacco does not "cost much." What victim of the weed will allow that his tobacco does cost much?

You, my friend, have paid enough for it every year to give your wife a twenty-five cent de laine, or each of your girls a pretty bonnet, or each of your boys a pair of boots. You are about fifty years old, and I understand you to say that you began to use cigars at fifteen. Take the following calculation—altogether too low,—and you will see that you have expended $1,383,35!

From	15 yrs. to	18—1 cigar a day,	at	2	cts. each,	$21 90
"	18 "	20—2	"	2	"	29 20
"	20 "	25—3	"	2	"	164 25
"	25 "	30—4	"	3	"	219 00
"	30 "	35—5	"	3	"	273 75
"	35 "	40—5	"	3	"	273 75
"	40 "	45—5	"	2	"	182 50
"	45 "	50—4	"	3	"	219 00
						$1,383 35

Garabaldi, who masters kingdoms, says he can live on eight cents a day! Is it not a shame that any man should waste even eight cents a day on a loathsome poison? Is it not a sin?

3. Drop it, for it impairs your enjoyment of natural and simple food.—Tobacco is acrid and pungent, and neutralizes your taste for everything else. It monopolizes tastes; and an appetite for this, like Aaron's rod, often swallows up every other. The tastes of a tobacco sot are pretty much extinct. He likes strong coffee, fiery condiments and drinks, corned beef, cayenne pepper, and cares nothing for the many pleasant forms of food so grateful to a pure palate. Chewing his cud, puffing his pipe, what does he care for delicious fruits?—for a sweet apple, a peach, a plum, a fig, an orange, or indeed for a land flowing with milk and honey? I once said to a poor man, give up your pipe, and I will give you a pair of boots. He shrugged his shoulders, and said, "No; I like my pipe—it is all my comfort. Yes, friend, I said, here is the mischief—you like it too well—better than the choice fruits of this garden, or the berries on these hills and valleys. In a guttural sound, like that of a bull-frog, he muttered, "I like my pipe better than all the berries God ever made."

I appeal, my friend, to your selfishness. Do you wish to really enjoy a cherry, a strawberry, a potato, an egg, a tumbler of milk or honey, or the honey-comb? drop your tobacco. A rich glutton can afford to sacrifice half his luxuries on this filthy altar; but you need the full enjoyment of your meagre fare, and just in proportion as you stand clear of deadly drinks and drugs, keeping your body in subjection to the laws of God, you will be a happy man.

4. Drop it, for it wastes your bodily strength—strength you need to support yourself and family.—Tobacco is a South Carolinian in the republic of your nature—forever making disturbance. It drives at your stomach, disorders digestion, diminishes appetite; and the result is, less food is received, less bone, less muscle, is manufactured, and you of course are less a man. It stupefies and by turns exasperates your nerves, and sooner or later the nerve system ceases to energize the muscular, and the whole frame becomes relaxed and inactive. It enters the circulation, poisons and thins the blood, and insidiously assails you from head to foot, and tends to make you, like Pharaoh's monsters, lank and lean, the mere apology of what you once were.

Many paupers are made such by this process; and if you, my friend, would regain your strength, and rise in life, then drop this drug, which has had much to do in rendering your life a failure.

5. Drop it, for it tends to crush ambition, and make you satisfied with poverty.—Tobacco, by enfeebling the nerve-power, paralyzes the sensibilities more or less, and its victims, as a consequence, have less mental and moral power, and manly force for the battle of life. As a soporific, it deadens emotion; self-satisfaction takes the place of commendable ambition, and a mind once nobly independent becomes reconciled to beggary, and passive under degradation.

Let any young man in our factories who smokes morning, noon and night, continue to smoke, and it is a fair presumption that he will always be an understrapper—never "boss" of the factory—never build a house or a hen-coop. A recipe to manufacture our young men into paupers, which should leave tobacco out of the account, would be essentially defective.

Here is no extravagance. I have seen poor men, the victims of this drug, whom you might tread down as mire in the street, who gave it up, and in six months regaining admirable health and courage, displayed a backbone which James Buchanan might envy. "I would not go back to it again," said a poor man, "for all California."

6. Drop it, for you can do it with comparative ease—more easily than a rich and gluttonous man.—The rich and gluttonous man loads his stomach with "the fat of the land," with the luxuries of every clime. "His eyes stand out with fatness"—his veins are swollen with blood; and if he must continue to be as he is, literally a stuffed animal, then his expectoration must be free; he must rid himself of an odious plethora, or probably die of an apoplectic stroke. A glutton does not drop tobacco unless he drops gluttony. He must curb appetite, rise superior to swinish indulgences, or remain an abject slave.

You have no apoplexy or paralysis to fear, because you have no gluttony to battle. You have only to drop tobacco, and, so recuperative is your nature, your juvenile taste will soon come back, and you will enjoy your humble fare better than any smoking nabob can enjoy his gloating meats or soul-destroying wines.

A Boston Don, a gormandizer, taunted an Irishman, at work in his garden, about his black cutty pipe. The sinewy little man straightened up—"Please yer honor, just drop yer Spanish cigar, and I'll drop my pipe."—"Done," said the millionaire. The poor Hibernian dropped his pipe, and, like a man of honor, stuck to his bargain. Not so with the rich man; he continued to gormandize, and ceased to expectorate, and was soon laid upon his bed, the apparent victim of a burning fever. The doctor, on being apprised of what had passed, said, "One of two things must be done: I must reduce you by calomel to low water mark, or you must return to your tobacco. Take your choice." He took his choice—returned "as a dog to his vomit"—smoked and gluttonized, gluttonized and smoked, and died a beast, as thousands die.

I do not state this to show that an Irishman or anybody else drops tobacco without a struggle, but to show that, as you can do it with comparative ease, you are under especial obligations to do it.

My friend, I wish you well, or I could not address you as I have. Tobacco, like strong drink, is a deceiver; it deceives millions; it has deceived you, and is the bane of your life. I hope you are no coward—that you have courage enough to look your nearest neighbor—TOBACCO—in the face, and to sacrifice this monster at once, and SHOW YOURSELF A MAN, by signing this Pledge:—

"I hereby pledge myself to abstain from the use of Tobacco in all forms, totally and forever."

Your friend, GEO. TRASK.

PLEDGE.

I HEREBY PROMISE TO ABSTAIN FROM THE USE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS AS A BEVERAGE, AND FROM THE USE OF TOBACCO, TOTALLY AND FOREVER.

Please cut out the foregoing valuable pledge, sign it, trusting in the Lord to help you keep it; and get all your family, young and old, and your neighbors to unite with you. Save the money that has been wasted for these things, and give it to the poor. Come, do it now.—ED.

☞ Swine's flesh is the worst of meats. God told the Jews not to touch pork, because he knew pork was bad for them. And I echo the voice of my profession from almost every civilized country when I say that this immense use of the flesh of the swine is filling all christendom with salt-rheum, erysipelas, scrofula and other vile humors. And all this is more emphatically true when the animal is fattened in a close pen without exercise, and stuffed with every conceivable kind of filthy food. Mutton is without doubt the healthiest meat, especially if eaten cold. Beef and fowls are good. Fresh fish is excellent if taken at the right season. Salted cod fish, if well freshened and cooked with milk, is one of the very best kinds of animal food.—Lewis' New Gymnastics.

For the Crisis.

To our Aged Brother—Henry Grew.

Long hast thou fought the battle of the Lord,
My honored brother, and hast nobly done.
While some have turned aside to jarring strifes,
Contending about names, or minor points
Taught in the blessed Word, and others still
Have fallen into error, thou hast stood
For Truth and Righteousness—firm at thy post,
Defending boldly, and yet gently too,
The full, harmonious, perfect and complete
Gospel of God—precepts and doctrines both,
All linked together in one lovely chain,
To elevate and sanctify the creature man,
And make him "meet for the inheritance
Of saints in light." And now thou dost commend
That Charity which is the "bond" indeed
"Of Perfectness"—embracing all within
Its spacious heart who truly love the Lord.
Not those alone who think as we may think,
Or who in knowledge are quite far advanced;
But takes in all, the lonely and the meek
Of every sect or grade in whom is found
The principle of right—love to our God
And to our neighbor. Thou dost advocate
This broad and heavenly rule; and my heart says
Amen to such pure teaching, from its depth.
I do not deem thee faultless, nor would say
Thou art from every error wholly free—
For this would make thee more than fallible—
But that thou givest "good and wholesome words,"
And that thy teachings in the main are right,
Is my sincere conviction. Yet to God
Belongs the honor for all thou hast done,
And still art doing in this blessed cause,
To which your heart most readily responds.
And may the same kind hand that hath thus far
Led you, my brother, through life's chequered scenes,
Still lead and guide, preserving, if His will,
Till He whom thou so long hast waited for,
Shall in his glory come again to earth!
Thus prays your Sister in the same blest hope.

A Condensed Report

Of a Discussion held in South Ashburnham, March 19th–22d, 1861, between Rev. Jacob Baker and Eld. Miles Grant.

REPORTED BY J. D. MERRIAM.

(Concluded.)

THIRD SPEECH OF MR. BAKER.

He continues to examine passages showing that apollumi does not mean utter extinction. After quoting all the passages in Matt., he quoted Mark 1: 24—"Art thou come to destroy us?" Certainly not. He came to save them. He cast out the spirit from the individual. So he did not come to annihilate them. He referred also to Mark 2: 22; 4: 38; 8: 35; 9: 22, 41; 11: 18–19. This term is applied to various things. If the Bible be the word of God, why did not the Almighty, in inspiring the words of this volume, use words about which there could be no cavil when speaking of the destiny of man?

Referring to the parable of the tares, he says, the wicked one consists of all the sin; all that is wrong; it is wickedness everywhere. David says, "Let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end." Did not pray, let the wicked come to an end, but the wickedness. An enemy sowed the tares. While good men are sleeping, bad men are sowing tares, bringing men into the abodes of condemnation; their noble natures seem to perish, and would utterly perish if it were not for the Savior that comes and saves the lost.

Of that text, "Whose fan is in his hand and he will thoroughly purge his floor," we inquire, where is the floor? The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hands. The earth is the Lord's, and they that dwell therein. The whole human family are the dwellers in the earth. He thoroughly purges his floor, separates the chaff from the wheat, which is, in my opinion, that which is made in the moral image of God. The chaff is blown away, burned up; but the wheat is gathered into his garner, when it is perfected. There is progress in the future world, room for more growth. If not fully developed in moral excellence here, we shall continue to grow until we come to the measure of the stature of the fullness in Christ.

ELD. GRANT'S FIRST SPEECH.—P. M.

In regard to the various meanings of the term apollumi, none of them signify preservation or salvation. "Why did not Jehovah use terms about which there could be no doubt?" He did. Of the thirty-eight different words rendered destroy in the O. T. and the eleven in the N. T., not one is defined to signify either suffering or salvation. Here are the words used to express the destiny of the wicked: "Destroy," "perish," burned "up root and branch," "be no more," "shall not be," etc. These terms are used repeatedly in the Bible to express the end of the wicked. What words of stronger import could be used? "The wickedness of the wicked shall come to an end." How? By the destruction of the sinner. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Does wickedness go about doing wickedly, sowing tares? The chaff is the same as the tares. He "shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire. . . . Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Again. Mal. 4: 1,—"Behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, (not all pride,) yea, and all that do wickedly (not all wickedness) shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." What language could be more expressive of utter extermination?

What is the wages of sin? It is death. What is death? "Extinction of life." Is death a punishment? Yes, capital punishment. Then eternal death is eternal punishment. The first death is not the punishment for sin, for that is common to the righteous, as well as the wicked. In Rev. 21: 8, we read of "the second death." There is no proof that any who suffer this are ever delivered from it. If eternal life is a reward, then eternal death must be a punishment. When the wicked are rooted out of the earth, then will be brought to pass the saying in Matt. 25: 34,—"Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom;" and then the whole earth will be filled with his glory, and the song heard from every creature will be sung, saying, "Blessing, and honor," etc.

MR. BAKER'S FIRST SPEECH.—P. M.

God changes not. He is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. How happens it that there will be no chance for persons to become good after the present life? In heathen countries there are persons of excellent impulses that have never read the Bible; they die without a knowledge of what it contains, and unless they have a chance in the future world, how can God be as good to them as to others?

The term kolasis, rendered punishment, means to correct, to check, to prune. When you go out to prune a tree, would you go and cut the tree down and burn it? Certainly not. An argument is drawn for the future restoration by a reference to the deliverance of Jonah, and of David from the lowest hell; by reference to the silver cup, which, though scattered, is found.

Man dies, and where is he? Destroyed utterly, perished. Thank God there is a resurrection. Jesus has risen from the dead, and he shall see the travail of his soul and be satisfied. Claims that the text in Mal. 4: 1, had its fulfillment in the days of the first advent. The term rendered immortality in Rom. 2: 7, the same as in 1 Cor. 15,—incorruption and immortality. Jesus brought life and immortality to light. The gospel is good news, glad tidings to all people. Could Paul desire to have men raised from the dead to be destroyed again? This is worse than endless misery, because they hold there will be a little good, a little pleasure.

ELD. GRANT'S SECOND SPEECH.—P. M.

There is no chance for people after the resurrection, because there is no place in Scripture where such an offer is presented. They are not brought from the dead for the sake of destroying them, but justice demands it. "Prune," to cut off, excision from everlasting life. If eternally cut off from life, it would be everlasting punishment. David is to be brought from the grave—hades. Christ will be satisfied when the wicked are destroyed, as well as when the righteous are preserved.

He shows that man, made of the dust of the ground, is mortal. Brings the testimony of God, of Christ, and of angels, that man is mortal. Rom. 2: 6, 7, shows us how to get immortality. It is a gift from God, on conditions. Matt. 19: 16, 29, shows that something is to be done to inherit everlasting life. It is a subject of hope, Titus 3: 7. Matt. 25: 31–46 gives the time when the righteous obtain it, viz., when Christ comes.

In summing up the argument, he brings in the texts which have been quoted, showing that the wicked are to perish, to be destroyed without remedy, to be burned up, etc., and concludes therefore that none of the wicked shall inherit everlasting life. Texts also showing there is a second death, from which man must be delivered if they are to be saved. My friend must show that there is a resurrection from the second death, or it remains proved that the wicked shall be no more; shall become "extinct." Then justice is satisfied, God's law honored, and all creation will praise him.

THIRD SPEECH OF MR. BAKER.

Repeating Scripture is not proving points. The question turns on the definition of terms. As God is good, the results of his government will all be right. My brother says the wicked shall all be destroyed after the resurrection. Will he put his finger on the chapter and verse where it so says? There is no such passage. Hades sometimes means natural death and sometimes moral death. David in speaking of the mercy that caused him to repent of his great wickedness, says, "Thou hast delivered my soul from the lowest hell,"—moral death. He has had one resurrection from this. He has died again, and hence there is a resurrection after the second death, if he is raised again from the dead.

1 Cor. 3: 13-15. Here is the fire of God's judgments that is to try every man's works. The man's works are to be burned up, but the man saved, because made in the image of God. If the Sodomites, which are set forth for an example, are to be raised from the dead—and that is an illustration of the second death—then, after the pruning and correcting influence of God's Spirit, they would be raised from the second death. God purposes to raise man from the dead, for he made him for immortality and glory. If raised, I find them raised incorruptible, immortal. There is a second death. Yes. You hath he quickened who were dead, etc. There is one death. Let us candidly look at the whole matter. Hear, then judge.

CLOSING SPEECH OF ELD. GRANT.

God is good, but he has allowed sin and sorrow and death in the world. I do not claim that my expression is in the Scripture, but the terms which are used clearly convey the idea. The Bible does not say that David has had one resurrection. There is no proof that all men are to be raised to immortality. My friend admits we have not got it now. Death is to be destroyed. It does its last work when it destroys the wicked.

Points admitted. 1. Man is not immortal. 2. Some die in their sins. 3. The gift of eternal life depends on character. 4. The punishment of the wicked is as long as the life of the righteous.

A few passages not noticed. John 8: 44,—"Ye are of your father the devil." Mark 3: 29,—"Hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation." Matt. 5: 20,—"Ye shall in no case enter the kingdom of heaven." Ps. 92: 7,—"The wicked . . . shall be destroyed forever,"—for eternity. I have no interest in preaching error. When the Scriptures are so plain, we see no chance for doubt on this point.

MR. BAKER'S CLOSING SPEECH.

We have had a friendly interview, and hope we shall always be friends. Repeating of Scriptures is not argument. I think I have noticed his strongest passages. The end of the world, aion, age. "Hath never forgiveness," neither in the Jewish nor christian age. There is sorrow in this world. The result shall work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; it shall bring us by its discipline to our Heavenly Father. These bring us nearer to God. I have thought more of heaven since I buried my son. My brother thinks God's children will all be saved. I have thought we were all God's children. Have we not all one Father? The chaff is not the wheat, and never can be. The wheat is to be gathered into the garner. He refers to a few texts relating to death, and closes by exhorting the people to a more earnest and faithful examination of the Scriptures. What peace and joy to meet as one happy family in the eternal world. May God bless us henceforth and forever. Amen.

☞ The christian's work is too curious to be done well between sleeping and waking, and too important to be done ill and slumbered over, no matter how. He had need to be awake that walks upon the brink of a deep river, or brow of a steep hill. The christian's path is so narrow and the danger so great, that it calls for both a nimble eye to discern and a steady eye to direct; but a sleepy eye can do neither.—Gurnall.

☞ The desire of showing little kindnesses proceeds often merely from an obliging disposition; but the habit of it must be formed on christian motives, and on an habitual course of self-denial and thoughtfulness.

For the Crisis.

"Worthy the Lamb!"

O hark! that burst of rapturous song
That rolls o'er heaven's fair plains;
On every breeze it floats along,
It swells from an immortal throng
In glad and lofty strains.

Ten thousand times ten thousand stand
Around you radiant throne;
Gathered from every clime and land,
A spotless, glorious, blood-washed band,
Their Savior's love they own.

Worthy the slaughtered Lamb! they cry,
Who for us shed his blood;
Who by his blood hath brought us nigh,
Hath made us live no more to die,
And brought us home to God.

As kings and priests unto our God
We on the earth shall reign;
And to eternity prolong
In grateful strains our glorious song,
Worthy the Lamb once slain!

All heaven renews the sound of praise,
All angels cry Amen!
We here on earth our song would raise,
That we may sing to endless days,
Worthy the Lamb once slain!

Providence, R. I. H. L. H.

What is your Position?

"He who is not with me is against me."—JESUS.

There are two antagonistic principles in this world ever contending for the supremacy; it is an "irrepressible conflict," that can never terminate, until one or the other gains a final victory and utterly destroys its opponent. These opposing principles are called by various names, according to peculiar circumstances. My purpose is, in these few remarks, to confine myself to those names appropriate to the subject of politics and religion. Liberty and oppression will represent the former, truth and error the latter. Now, between these two parties there has always been a third, a sort of amphibious, or mongrel, or amalgamation animal, that claims affinity to both parties; but whose sympathy and influence may always be reckoned on the most popular side of the question, and, like a false friend, is only to be seen in summer, and is always absent when most needed. Our present national difficulties will serve to exemplify the working of these principles. The free states represent the principle of liberty, the seceding states, that of oppression; the border states, between the two, are in a state of transition, seeking only their own interest and advantage. All they have yet done, or are likely to do, is to embarrass, weaken, and demoralize the free states, and induce them to sacrifice their principles for the sake of peace and pretended unity. These are our worst enemies; let us beware, lest the viper we have hugged so closely does not insert its malignant venom in the bosom where it has been so long nourished and petted.

How similar to this is the conflict between truth and error in the theological world. The traditions of men, the rudiments of the world, the apostasy of these last days from the truth as it is in Jesus, have well nigh overwhelmed our churches in a vortex of popery, infidelity, and Spiritualism. Every form and place of antichrist is now in the ascendent; the word of God trampled in the dust; the Scripture doctrines of the sleep of the dead, the destruction of the wicked, and the personal reign of Christ on the earth, are scoffed at by the church and the world, and those few who yet remain faithful, and valiant for the truth, are denounced as infidels, heretics, and "monomaniacs," by secular and religious journals, that count their readers by millions. Surely on us the end of the world is come; let us watch and be sober; evidences thicken around us; the nations are angry; they are in perplexity and distress; the love of many waxes cold; and the scoffers of the last day are rife, saying where is the promise of his coming?

But while the little flock of Christ are fighting against such fearful odds, and earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, what shall we say to those who, while they profess to believe these precious truths, yet stand aloof from the "irrepressible conflict," give aid and comfort to the enemy, and, from the fear of man and the love of popularity, or the love of ease and the gratification of self, refuse to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty? There is no neutrality in this war; he who is not with me is against me. These borderers are the greatest enemies we have; they discourage the faithful soldier of the cross; they make an excuse for others, to follow their pernicious example; they strengthen the too prevalent idea that the truth is of little consequence, and it is a matter of indifference what we believe, if we are only honest or sincere; a principle, if carried out, which would destroy all faith or confidence in God or man, and make the gospel of Christ of no more use than an old almanack.

I know not but I shall weary the readers of the Crisis by referring so often to this "one idea." But there is no one thing that tries the faith and patience of a true man so much as to be surrounded by cowards and false professors; and, if I understand the Bible aright, there is nothing so offensive in the sight of God as a luke-warm professor,—one who has a form of godliness, but denies the power thereof—who, Judas-like, betrays the Son of man with a kiss. Rev. 3: 15, 16.

J. PARRY.

For the Crisis.

A Letter.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS:—Suffer a word of exhortation from one who with you is deeply interested in the salvation of a lost and perishing world. Being mutually interested in the welfare of Zion, we of course are desirous of promoting her highest welfare, in not only bringing our tithes into God's store-house, but being careful to refrain from bringing in anything contraband, or, without parable, or innuendo, to do all we can to glorify God, and build up his cause, and to refrain from doing anything which at all serves to pull down or impede the work of God. I think it is conceded that we are a laborious people; most of us are necessarily so, obtaining our bread by the sweat of our brow, in harmony with the prediction of Jehovah. But at this season of the year, particularly, we are in danger of going beyond duty in our physical exertions, and thereby grossly infringe upon our moral obligations. And now the question comes home, is it right thus to do? I know there are circumstances which sometimes seem to oblige the former, but with suitable care, and a just appreciation of our moral obligations, could not those circumstances be greatly abridged? I know there is a great deal to be done by both sexes. The brethren say, now is the time for them to be provident, and they have every thing to do, by way of planning and executing, that they may be able to "provide for those of their own household." And the sisters feel the necessity of a thorough ablution in all the household department; and then, there is the change of raiment to be fitted up for the family, and they really desire to do a little in the floral department, because it adds much to the interest of their plain rural hours.

My dear fellow pilgrims, it does seem to me that this is the time we are in danger of being overcharged, and becoming profane. "Profane!" I hear some one reiterate in astonishment; "God forbid!" Well, let us read Heb. 12: 16, and we shall see that God calls him profane who does not rightly estimate things: "Lest there be any fornicator, or profane person, as Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his birthright." Now if we set such value on our worldly business that it must be done to the neglect of spiritual things, do we make a right estimation? Does not a vigilant care of the latter involve that which is more consequential than all the secular labor ever performed? For one, I am determined the past shall suffice in this matter; if something must be neglected, let those go which are of the least moment, and make sure of the most important first. If we thus incessantly overtax our physical system, to say nothing of the weekly prayer meetings, the Lord's day morning sun will be likely to find our eyelids closed, as he mounts up, UP; and then we have not time to perform life's necessaries, and attend church in the morning. And so your faithful minister enters the house of worship, with hope buoyant that he shall be enabled to edify and build you up in the most holy faith of the gospel; for he has labored hard, and fervently importuned the Master of the store-house for just the food requisite to produce spiritual health in the household. But, alas! how his poor heart sinks within him as he walks along up to the pulpit and discovers your vacant seat! Though he has done his best to arrange what the Master has dealt to him, yet your absence has so dispirited him, ten to one if he serves it up in a manner palatable to the few who are present. When the reason assigned to Mr. Fletcher for non-attendance at the morning service was, that they could not awake in time to get ready, this great man immediately devised the plan of awaking them himself, by taking a bell and going round at five o'clock Lord's day morning. I presume many would be willing to be at this trouble, yea, more, if by that means they could see all present who profess to be mutually interested in building up Zion.

But to return. You perhaps arrive in time for the afternoon service, and your minister's heart is gladdened, as he enters the holy courts, to see your seats occupied; hope plumes her golden pinions, causing him to feel, though unuttered, I shall by the blessing of God be enabled to give them one meal which may give them some strength and fortify them against the power of their common foe. But, alas! his eye—it does not catch yours, for that is closed, and your nodding head shows that Morpheus holds you firmly in his grasp! Your minister is a patient man; he does not accuse you publicly or privately, but oh! it is like a dagger to his heart. There! he says, it is of no use; it is impossible for me to fulfill the command of the Apostle to edify and build them up in the faith of the gospel. I have the week past ransacked heaven and earth, as it were, to procure and arrange something to do them good. Then he appeals to the Master of the store-house, saying, O my God, what can I do? Thou hast given me out of thy store-house, and thou knowest I have been assiduous in trying to arrange a suitable portion; but the world drives them so, they can scarce get where this food is dealt out, and when there, they sleep instead of partaking of the rich dainties of heaven! My dear Brn. and Sisters, shall we be instrumental of such a complaint being carried to the court of heaven? But says one, is it more trying to the servant of God than to keep awake, and yet appear uninterested, by reading, or turning over a book or paper, or gazing listlessly from one to another during sermon? Nay, verily. This would seem to transcend every rule of christian courtesy, as well as common etiquette. If we were addressing a friend upon a point of great interest (showing this by our manner,) and they should take up a book or paper, and keep their attention fixed on it without scarcely noticing us at all, or listlessly gaze at different objects in the room, would not our hearts be deeply wounded? "If it had been an enemy then could I have borne it;" but such neglectful contempt from a professed friend, lacerates the very heart. And shall we thus treat those whom God has said should receive "double honor?" If we have one of God's ministers, they labor to present us faultless, without one stain of the world upon us. And shall we ever dishearten him in this god-like labor? No, let us all be in the sanctuary of the Lord, and make up our minds to keep awake, without reading or gazing, for about one hour. Only think, it is but one hour that he requires our attention! If, like our pilgrim fathers, he held us three hours at a time, there might be more reason for manifesting weariness. Only two hours, or at the most three hours a week, and that only one at a time, to listen to the preaching of God's word! And shall we say, or even think, we cannot give our attention thus to obtain knowledge of the kingdom, and the way to get there?

Now, brethren and sisters, let us go to meeting forenoon and afternoon, if we have to leave some things undone; and if we cannot possibly get there until after sermon has commenced, let us go in as careful as possible, and be very cautious about shutting the door, because they are large and heavy, and, if you are not careful, they will make such a noise that all will start up involuntarily and look to see what is the matter. Then we will step lightly as possible; as we have not been able to carpet all our houses of worship yet, we must be the more cautious in this respect. Then we will sit upright, and not even lean our heads down on the back of the slip, even if our head and eyes are tired; better that we should endure a little than manifest any disrespect in the house of God. Who will do this? And who of God's children will not do it?

R. M. M.

For the Crisis.

The Coming of the Lord.

"Wherefore, comfort one another with these words."

Is it not almost wonderfully strange that, while most other subjects are well nigh exhausted, are thought of, talked about and written upon, comparatively little is said about the coming of our blessed Lord and Savior, who, we are taught in the sacred writings, will appear unto them that look for him without sin unto salvation? The coming of our blessed Redeemer, and the future kingdom, in all its glory and splendor, appears to be the crowning point held to view through the holy oracles. The prophets of old touched their highest notes, and sung their sweetest songs, when foretelling the reign of future blessedness that should be in the latter days upon the earth.

The prophet Daniel, a man greatly beloved of God, tells us in his wonderful vision, that he beheld till all earthly thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool, his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire. And he continued to behold, until one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed. The prophet still saw, when the saints of the Most High should take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever. And further, the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him. This is the glowing description of the Prophet of the perpetuity and greatness of the inheritance of the saints, when our Lord shall come again to reign upon the earth; and yet we are slow to believe, to look after and rejoice in the promised blessings of our extensive legacy. If the apostle Paul could exhort primitive saints to comfort one another with the delightful words embracing the coming of our blessed Savior, how much more appropriately may we derive consolation from the fact that his sounding footsteps are near at hand.

The Apostle Peter, with others, his cotemporaries, rejoiced in the glorious prospect of the new heavens and new earth, wherein should dwell righteousness; and he would have us also rejoice in the same contemplation. And as pilgrims and strangers here upon the earth, are we not weary enough of our long and tedious pathway, to make us look up with joyous anticipation to the time of our redemption, as being nearer than when we first believed? O, shall we not, as christians, quicken our pace in the divine life, and "seeing we look for such things, be diligent, that we may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless." Too long already have we catered to the world, and lived beneath our privilege as the expectants of a crown of life. We have not enough declared our adoption into the heavenly family, and, by a godly walk and holy conversation, adorned the doctrine of God our Savior, who hath left us behind to fill up the measure of Christ's sufferings in the various departments of duty and labor assigned us in his vineyard.

Then in view of our glorious inheritance in the golden city with pearly gates, where every true disciple of the dear Redeemer will have a share, let us toil on in the service of our divine Master, ever favoring virtue and frowning upon vice, remembering the poor and needy, sympathizing with and laboring for the oppressed, that suffering humanity may be made the better for our relation to it; so that, when speedily the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, we may, through the merits of the Lamb of Calvary, hope with rejoicing and triumph to reign with him forever and ever.

For the Crisis.

To whom it may Concern.

The blessings of the gospel come to us conditionally. Abstractly they are a part and parcel of our nature; but concretely their enjoyment depends on circumstances. It is a fact patent to the religious world, that any scheme, any design, that may be adopted to diffuse light and knowledge, if not accompanied with interest, every effort becomes a nullity. Does any one suppose that satisfactory results will emanate from misconceived plans? It is well known that neither religion or science ever arrived at its present gigantic stature by one vigorous stride. There must be a beginning somewhere, and if its rudiments are the corner-stone of the superstructure, the edifice eventually may be perfected.

Religion is not a perfecting principle except as it acts in conjunction with the will of God. To suppose a man a whole christian, a new man through Christ, without acceding to the purposes and will of Christ, is as absurd as to suppose the eradication of disease from the human system by purification of the blood, which is never for one hour nor ever for one minute the same. The idea is as absurd as would be the idea of cleansing the waters of a running stream.

The effect produced by a signal change of heart or mind, should always compare favorably with the first lesson of christian discipline, namely, "As ye have received Christ Jesus, the Lord, so walk ye in him." Previous prevailing notions respecting God's ways and means, have not the shadow of a claim upon the newly [illegible] heart; for the man that cannot say, by precept and example, "Thy will, O God, not mine, be done," has never felt the overshadowing of the Holy Spirit, nor experienced a joyful hope of a life hid with Christ in God. On the other hand, the very moment he is inducted by faith into the life of a [illegible] in Christ, that moment God's wishes become his law, and however able or unfathomable a gulf may lie between him and mathematical church [illegible] his [illegible] heart, [illegible] through the [illegible] repentance, has a secret guidance from a higher wisdom than what is barely human, namely, the spirit of love and truth. He becomes emancipated from the shackles of tyrannic wrong, and abject servitude, and shines with living lustre borrowed from the face of God. He seeks council and guidance from his new-found Savior, and although the answers of peace are inaudible and indistinct to the sense, yet to him they are just as real as though he heard a man saying, "This is the way, walk ye in it."

This is the point in christian character where church dogmas become subservient to God's word; when eternal life, with all its divine attributes, becomes of more importance to a man than any form or thesis of ecclesiastical government; when church polity, with her elaborate argument, is reckoned of less importance than the doctrine of Christ; then is the time when men will seek immortality on the terms of the gospel. Faith at once assumes her proper sphere, and becomes exercised by the immutable promises of God. Never, no, never will animosity, superciliousness, prejudice, cease to rankle in the hearts of God's people until the grossness of our natures is wholly swallowed up in the will of Christ. The judgment may find us congregated within its audience chamber, with the bitterness of sectionalism still an element unpurged by the blood of Jesus.

Are these opinions uncharitable? Matt. 18: 3,—"Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter the kingdom of heaven." Are they prejudicial? Eph. 4: 31, 32,—"Let all bitterness, and wrath, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice. And be ye kind, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." Finally, am I in error? 1 Pet. 3: 8,—"Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, be pitiful, be courteous."

To these simple behests, the religious world, with but few exceptions, gives speculative assent, but practically care for none of these things. Custom, fashion, popular favor, these are the things that fill up the entire vision, and generally decide every question of opinion and duty. The moral appetites assume a signal sovereignty over the claims of Christ. Fraternal ties are severed, and the worship of God is made a question of convenience.

Well, it will not always be thus. Jesus will one day walk on these troubled waters and cry, "Peace, be still." The sun will be walking his usual path on the firmament,; the grass wil be growing green in the fields. Merchants will be thronging the exchange, and the avaricious counting their gold, when the "sign of the Son of man" shall appear in the heavens, and that august throne, with fire and clouds, be piled for judgment. The gates of the city will open, and the splendors of immortality will burst upon the new powers and capacities of the soul. God grant that when we stand before his throne, it may be with the consciousness of sins pardoned. And when that banner of universal peace shall wave in victory o'er death, may we be gathered beneath its folds. C. G. CARRE.

The Resurrection of the Dead.—No. 2.

ACTS 26: 6, 7.

But the promise to which Paul refers in our text, is the substance of all the promises made of God unto our fathers. Without the resurrection of the dead, which to Agrippa seemed incredible, all the promises would fail. In Gal. 3: 16, he specifies: "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ." But without the resurrection, "they which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."—1 Cor. 15: 18. Let us look, therefore, to the promises made to Abraham and his seed, and see if they can possibly be fulfilled without the resurrection. First, God promises to make of Abraham a great nation, and that in him all the families of the earth should be blessed.—Gen. 12: 1-3. Second, He promises, "All the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever;" (13: 15;) meaning the land of Canaan, (ver. 12.) He also promises an innumerable seed,—(v. 16.) Again, the word of the Lord came unto Abraham in vision, and confirmed unto him and his seed the inheritance of the land, chap. 15, giving its limits. (v. 18.) The covenant is still further established and pronounced everlasting, ch. 17: 7, 8,—"And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God." Has this promise been fulfilled to Abraham and his seed? "Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost," (Acts 6: 5,) says, (7: 5,) "And He gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on; yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child." He is addressing those who then dwelt in the land promised to Abraham, and of that land he is speaking. Paul, speaking of the same, says of Abraham, "By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the promise. For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose maker and builder is God."—Heb. 11: 9, 10. And in ver. 13, he adds, "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." The promises seen and embraced were far off when they were made to those here mentioned as dying in the faith, and consequently must be fulfilled in the latter days. They can be fulfilled no where else but on the earth, for nothing but earthly possessions are spoken of in the promises The heavenly country, therefore, which they desire, (v. 18,) must be the land of promise restored to its rightful owners, and renewed under the kingdom of heaven, in which many shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, (Matt. 8: 11.) This kingdom was future when this promise was made, for Christ preached it as at hand, (4: 17) Consequently, the patriarchs were not then in it. That Abraham expected a literal resurrection in order to receive the fulfillment of the promises, Paul proves by what he says of him in relation to the offering of Isaac, Heb. 11: 19,—"Accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead" The city prepared for them (v. 16,) is one to come,—Heb. 13: 14; Phil. 3. 20, 21. In this last text, the apostle expresses no hope of seeing the Savior, until he comes from heaven, to "change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." "Who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing, and his kingdom," (2 Tim. 4: 1,) and from the righteous Judge he expected a crown of righteousness at that day, which should be given, not to him only, "but unto all them also that love his appearing," (v. 8.)

Texts of Scripture might be multiplied showing that the promises of God to our fathers are to be fulfilled, not in heaven, but on the earth, at the appearing of Jesus Christ. To the Hebrews themselves, to whom the promises were made, Paul says of him who "came to his own, and his own received him not," (John. 1: 11,) "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin (or a sin offering) unto salvation."—Heb. 9: 28. The glorious appearing of Jesus Christ is the "blessed hope" (Titus 2; 13) of all the promises of God unto our fathers. This present world spoken of in the preceding verse, is contrasted with "the world to come, (Heb. 2: 5,) which is not put in subjection to the angels, but to him who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death; (v. 9;) that is, he was made a little lower than the angels in order that he might die or suffer death; for the angels are immortal. He was manifested in the flesh, or took a mortal body, that he might taste death for every man. In this present world we die; in the world to come "there shall be no more death."—Rev. 21: 4. "The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage; but they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection of the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."—Luke 20: 34-36. "The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom, but the tares are the children of the wicked one," etc.—Mat. 13: 38-43. "Ye are of your father the devil; and the lusts of your father ye will do," etc.—Jno. 8: 44. "Forasmuch, then, as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them, who, through fear of death, were all their lifetime subject to bondage."—Heb. 2: 14, 15. Here it is expressly stated, that the purpose or object for which Christ took upon himself a human or mortal body, was that through death he might deliver them who were subject to bondage during all their lifetime through the fear of death. The dead have passed beyond the fear of death; consequently, their deliverance must be from that which they feared. The bondage is death; deliverance is the resurrection; which is giving "liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound."—Isa. 61: 1.

☞ Moments are moments more precious than gold. Time lost is lost forever! Have a time, a regular time, a specified time for duties public and private, for lying down, rising up, going out, coming in, for prayer, social prayer, family prayer. When the moment arrives for these sacred duties, be on the spot instantly! Have a specific time; adhere to it consistently, perseveringly. By being in time, you save time. Golden moments are lost by lingering, for want of punctualty. One lingers, another lingers; one is behind the time, another and another. Thus, often, a whole family, a whole audience is delayed by the delay of one negligent, slack, sleepy, tardy soul. Punctuality is the redeemer of time, the life and soul of business. Have a time and keep it! The way to make tardy is to be tardy.—Golden Rule.

CONTENTMENT.—A contented mind is the greatest blessing a man can enjoy in this world; and if, in the present life, his happiness arises from the subduing of his desires, it will arise in the next from the gratification of them.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 8, 1861.

NEW ARRANGEMENT.

At the last meeting of the Board of Directors of the "Christian Publication Society," held in Boston on Monday, April 15th, 1861, Rufus Wendell was chosen EDITOR of the CRISIS and Business Agent in all matters pertaining to the paper. Therefore, all letters relating to the Crisis, all remittances for it, all matter designed for publication, and all orders and remittances for any of the Publications on sale at this office, should be directed to "RUFUS WENDELL, Crisis Office, BOSTON, Mass."

Salutatory.

In entering upon the duties of Editor of this paper—this weekly visitor to the homes of thousands who are "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ," I am reminded of the message sent by the king of Israel to Ben-hadad: "let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off." This position was wholly unsought on my part, and its responsibilities are undertaken with diffidence, and with a deep consciousness that I shall greatly need not only the prayers and sympathies but also the forbearance of the patrons of the CRISIS. I bring to the work a firm determination to do all in my power to make the paper what it should be, but knowing that my success in this must in large measure depend upon the "hearty co-operation" which was gratefully acknowledged by the retiring editor in his Valedictory, I ask that this may be continued without abatement. My best judgment, aided by the counsels of those associated with me in the editorial department, will be employed in giving to the reader the best matter furnished by the disciplined pens of our truth-loving, Bible-searching contributors, and thus it is hoped the flock of God will be fed with "meat in due season." We have fallen upon times pregnant with events of deepest interest to those who are taking heed unto the sure word of prophecy, and from eager thousands the watchmen hear the inquiry, "What of the night?" Many who have been hitherto unmoved by the proclamation of the speedy return of our absent Lord, are becoming convinced that the world's crisis has come, and a leading object of this paper shall be to give efficiency and practical power to this conviction. Beloved in Christ, let us "stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel." With "the Bible" as our "great weapon, storehouse, furniture, text book, constitution, creed and charter," and with Christ for our Master, our example and our only hope, let us "fight the good fight of faith and lay hold on eternal life."

In behalf of my predecessor, our beloved Brother GRANT, whose work as an Evangelist will in the future be less encumbered than hitherto with other cares, let the church pray that increasing success may attend his faithful labors; that he may "be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might;" and that in the day of Christ many stars may adorn the crown of his rejoicing.

RUFUS WENDELL.

Special Notice.

This number of the Crisis will be sent to many of the Editor's personal friends who are not subscribers. Any of them who would be glad to receive the paper regularly, can remit pay for 3 months, 6 months or a year: for Terms see last page. Postage stamps may be sent in lieu of change. After the next number, our editions will be limited to the wants of our actual subscribers; hence, persons desirous to receive all the papers from this number, should let us hear from them immediately. WHERE ARE WE?—The Boston Traveller of the 2d inst. sums up an article on the "Distress of Nations," in "the London Review," as follows:

"India is the scene of a desolating famine, after having gone through a desolating rebellion. Austria is on the verge of bankruptcy, and about to lose Hungary and Venetia. Italy is preparing for war. So is France. Prussia is about to contend with Denmark. Turkey totters to its base. Bosnia is in arms, Rome is in its last agonies, and Poland appears to be on the verge of revolution. To this we may add our own dreadful catastrophe of civil war."

Truly, "Rome is in its last agonies," and so, too, we trust, is the waiting church of Christ. But how unlike their destinies! While the one is to "be thrown down with violence" so that it "shall be found no more at all;" the other shall sing the song of victory and redemption forever and ever. May divine grace prepare us for the world into which "distress" shall never enter. The word of truth assures us that "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."

☞ We invite attention to the notice in another column of the Annual Meeting of the "Western N. Y. General Association," to commence at Seneca Falls on the 6th of June. We trust the attendance will be large as the invitation is hearty, and that the meeting may be attended with profitable results. Bro. Grant, we have learned on inquiry, expects to be present.

☞ Contributions from the assistant editor will hereafter be over his own signature. Letters to him should be directed as usual,—MILES GRANT, BOSTON, MASS.

"The World is One Vast Camp."

The following truthful statement composed the leading editorial article in the Boston Daily Journal of April 30th, 1861.

M. GRANT.

THE NATIONS IN COMMOTION.

"If an inhabitant of one of the planets (supposing the planets to be the abodes of intelligent beings) should visit our earth at the present time, he would have the strongest reason for believing that the principal occupation of the different populations is fighting: and if he came from the planet Mars, he would no doubt rejoice to set his foot on a globe so full of congenial spirits, and where the science of mutual destruction is carried to such a fearful extent. War, and not peace, seems to be the prominent idea. The world is one vast camp, and the military power everywhere predominates. That glorious period when the nations shall learn war no more, seems as far distant as ever. Take a map of the world, and the eye can scarcely rest upon a country where warfare does not actually exist or is not on the point of belching forth its impatient thunders. To begin at home, the two sections of the United States have already lit the torch of war. The fires of civil war are hardly extinguished in Mexico, while her guerilla chieftains are likely to embroil her in a conflict with Texas. Civil war exists as a chronic disease in all the Central American States. Venezuela is in the full tide of civil war, and New Granada also, we believe, while Ecuador, Peru and Chili are similarly engaged, and a fresh war has broken out among the States of the Argentine Confederation. In Europe, Italy is at war with the Roman Pontiff; France is evidently about to "let slip the dogs of war" upon some one of her old enemies; Austria is alive with bristling bayonets, waiting the single word that shall set them in battle array; Russia is pouring troops into Poland, where revolutionary blood has already stained the soil; Denmark is arming to resist German demands, and last, but not least, England has armed her shopkeepers and tradesmen to defend the "fast anchored isle," and is putting the finishing strokes on an iron-clad "Warrior" to be launched at Louis Napoleon, if need be.

In Asia, French bayonets overawe the sanguinary hate and murderous longings of the Syrian mountaineers, not yet sated by blood and carnage. China, the oldest nation in the world, is torn by a gigantic rebellion, to which was recently added a disastrous war with two of the greatest nations of the earth. Japan is rent by civil dissensions, traceable singularly enough to the United States, who are suffering from a like affliction. Cochin China is engaged in a fruitless struggle against French aggression; and in India the remnants of a formidable rebellion still linger. Africa alone seems to enjoy universal peace, but that is either because her people are not civilized, and do not fight much, or because we don't happen to know much about them. In Australia, England is engaged in a war with the aborigines.

Thus it will be seen that the nations of the world are in a state of fearful commotion. The sword still holds its place as the grand arbiter of disputes; and in some of the most momentous issues, as the minister of an advancing civilization, called upon to enforce the dictates of enlightened reason and christian principles. The manufacture of rifled cannon, Minie rifles, and death-dealing missiles of all sorts was never so active in the world's history, and there are no signs of cessation."

Napoleon III.

The following interesting letter from an intelligent Philadelphian, now in Paris, was published in the Philadelphia Inquirer of April 17th, 1861.—M. GRANT.

PARIS, March 29th, 1861.

* * * The antagonism of the French official clergy to the policy of NAPOLEON is very strange, and very difficult to be accounted for. No man has ever done so much for them, ever protected them to so great an extent, ever gave them such power as the very man on whose head they heap a mountain of maledictions!

"Thus far" they have gone against their Emperor, almost without notice from him; but unless the "signs of the times" are very delusive, "no farther" has gone forth to them in a fiat clothed in language respectful to religion, but as firm as the foundations of the vast Arc de Triomphe de l'Etoile.

And here I might remark, en passant, that France is divided on the Papal question, to wit:—

The Official Clergy—For the Pope and against the policy of NAPOLEON, so far as it is against the Pope.

The Women—Ditto!

The Ordinary Priests—For Napoleon, and in favor of his policy, so far as it concerns the Holy See.

The Men—Ditto.

Of course, you will understand this as being in general terms. Numerous exceptions exist, but the majorities are as placed.

The present position of the Roman or Papal question is as anomalous as it has ever been, and the policy of NAPOLEON seems to contradict the idea of his wishing to destroy all, even of the temporal power of the church. But this is more apparent than real—at least, I believe so.

It is a curious fact in the Italian diplomacy of the Emperor, that its apparent aim has always resulted in something antagonistic to itself. At the present moment he declares that he shall continue his army at home and protect the Pope. Most people, especially out of France, look upon this as opposing the ultimate unification of Italy, and the enthroning of VICTOR EMMANUEL in the Quirinal. To me it looks exactly the reverse. So long as France keeps an army at Rome, just so long will the Pope be prevented from calling to his aid Austrian or Spanish troops. But when the proper time arrives, the "King of Italy" will enter Rome, unattended by soldiers, and he will then proceed to declare ALL the Roman States annexed to his kingdom. This accomplished, the French will retire and give place to native soldiers, whose duty it will be to DETAIN the Pope at Rome as a SPIRITUAL SOVEREIGN! The Emperor does not wish to hurry things; his policy is to overcome one difficulty at a time—to move slow and sure, and by means that SEEM to oppose the end aimed at. He could at once, and at a blow, place VICTOR EMMANUEL in the "Eternal City," and withdraw his troops; but this might involve him in some disagreeable troubles at home. He likes to exercise the French people, and as for the matter of that, the people of Europe, in a result to be accomplished; and this, I believe, he is now engaged in.

I do not suppose there are a hundred persons in Europe, who do not believe, say what they may, that the only solution of the Papal question is in the destruction of its temporal power; but they see at the same time that this destruction will not be immediate.

They object, scold, fret, and threaten, if the Dual Government is upset; still NAPOLEON lets the "spirit of the age" slowly narrow the bounds of that Government, and will let those bounds be reduced to the single point of the Vatican, to be finally lost in the subdued splendors of a purely Spiritual Throne.

A few words now about some of the peculiarities belonging to NAPOLEON III., and I will close.

The more I study the man who now fills the throne of Charlemagne, the more he seems to resemble AUGUSTUS CÆSAR, endowed with the spirit of the present age. That he is a man eminently fitted for the place he occupies no one can question. But I believe the world has not yet stamped him so much a great man, as it has a fortunate man. I believe in his greatness, and his "fortune." I believe in the result of that greatness, and not of accidental circumstances.

In statesmanship and diplomacy, he is a head and shoulders above any man on earth. In prudence and wisdom he is a WASHINGTON. In administrative and executive force, he is like NAPOLEON I. on the field of battle.

He rules with a strong hand, but with consummate ability. He is virtually the Dictator of Europe. No Government or Power dare cross his path, and yet all acknowledge that he aims to do good to all men. He never asks what other nations or cabinets will think of his policy—but all others ask what NAPOLEON will think of theirs. His days are devoted to the multitudinous cares and demands of not only his own great Empire, but to Europe and the world; and his nights are devoted to study and writing history!

He has raised France to the proud position of being the strongest nation on the globe; and this giant strength he wields with matchless discretion, and to the glory, honor, prosperity and happiness of his people. Intellectually, comprehensive as gigantic, he stands among men without a peer—alone, colossal, a Titan! If you look back carefully over his career during the last twelve years, you will, I think, endorse my opinion of him. If you examine the whole of his marvellous past life, how wonderful it is! Does history furnish a parallel?

A Vision.

Bro. E. S. Willard, Hammonton, N. J., sends us the following vision of Joseph Hoag, and says it is "well attested to by persons in Western New York, with whom we are all well acquainted."—M. GRANT.

A REMARKABLE VISION.

This article was published shortly after the date of the vision, but at that time was only regarded as the mere chimera of an excited brain; since its striking fulfilment in many important particulars, it is generally viewed as evidence that the author was gifted with prescience bordering on the supernatural:—

VISION OF JOSEPH HOAG.

In the year 1803, probably in the Eighth Month, I was one day in the field, and observed the sun shone clear, but a mist eclipsed the brightness of its shining. As I reflected on the singularity of the event, my mind was clothed with silence the most solemn I have ever witnessed, for all my faculties were laid low and unusually brought into silence. I said to myself, what can all this mean? I do not remember ever before to have been sensible of such feelings; and I heard a voice from heaven, saying:

"This that thou see'st that dims the brightness of the sun is a sign of the present and future times. I took the fathers of this country from the land of oppression; I planted them here among the forest; I blessed and sustained them, and while they were humble I fed them, and they became a numerous people. But they have become proud and lifted up, and forgot me who nourished them in the wilderness, and are running into every abomination and evil practice of which the old country was guilty, and have taken quietude from the land and suffered a dividing spirit to come amongst them. Lift up thine eyes and behold."

I saw them dividing in great heat. This division in the churches was on point of doctrine. It commenced in the Presbyterian society and went through the various religious denominations, and in its progress and close, its effects were nearly the same. Those who dissented went off with high heads and taunting language, and those who kept to their original sentiments appeared exercised and sorrowful. And when the dividing spirit entered the Society of Friends, it raged in as high a degree as any I had before discovered; and as before, those who separated went with lofty looks, and taunting, censuring language; those who kept to their ancient principles retired by themselves.

It then appeared in the Lodges of the Freemasons, and set the country in an uproar for a length of time. Then it entered politics throughout the United States, and it did not stop until it produced a civil war and an abundance of blood was shed in the course of the contest. The Southern States lost their power, and slavery was annihilated from their borders. Then a monarchial government arose and established a National Religion, and made all societies tributary to support its expenses. I saw them take property from Friends to a large amount. I was amazed at beholding all this, and I heard a voice proclaim:

"This power shall not always stand, but with this power will I chastise my churches until they return to the faithfulness of their forefathers. Thou see'st what is coming on thy native land for their iniquities, and the blood of Africa, the remembrance of which is come before me."

This vision is for many days. I had no intention of writing it for many years, until it became such a burden that for my own relief I have so written.

JOSEPH HOAG.

Going "forth unto the Kings of the Earth."

The following from the New York World shows that the demons, or "unclean spirits," are busy in seeding their mediums "unto the kings of the earth," as foretold in the Revelation. The article in The World is from a Paris correspondent.—M. GRANT.

"A young man, named Squire, from Boston—one of the editors of a Spiritual journal called the Banner of Light—is puzzling the Parisians, and promises to create as great an excitement in the circles of the curious as Hume did two years ago. Most of the newspaper itemizers have been to see him, and have published descriptions of the performances of his wonderful table, which he has made expressly from solid oak, for the purpose of testing the strength of the spirits, who, he says, raise it from the floor, and, carrying it over his head, land it upon a bed in the rear of him. The table weighs about a hundred pounds, and being placed in the centre of a room, Squire, with his legs tied to a chair, sits just far enough away from it to be able to reach it by extending his left arm to its full length; and his left hand rests upon the edge of the table, while the other is held by a person who sits behind him. . . . While the room remains lighted, nothing remarkable occurs; but, upon the lamps being removed, a creaking noise is heard, the table gives signs of agitation, and the lights being introduced, it is found upon the bed, having by some means been carried eight or ten feet. The Russians seem to be particularly delighted with these feats, and, as they did Hume, they have taken up Squire, and he has given several seances at the houses of prominent Russian noblemen. Hume, as the reward for his endeavors in the Spiritual line, married a Russian lady of great wealth; and it is not impossible that Squire, who, like Pyramus, is a 'sweet youth and tall,' may be equally fortunate. At any rate, he has become one of the celebrities of Paris, and has, it is said, been already requested to appear before the Emperor, who, when Hume was here, invited him frequently to the Tuilleries. While in England, Squire and his table had the honor of appearing before the Queen and royal family."

Evening Shadows.—No. 6.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"He carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast, full of names of blasphemy."

DEARLY BELOVED IN CHRIST:—In christian meekness permit me to present some few thoughts on the above Scripture in connection with former articles. The revelator presents to us two prominent objects—a Woman and a Beast. With respect to the first, little is needful to be said, as all Protestants are agreed on the seemingly plain fact that the Woman is the church of Rome. In article No. 4 we submitted to you some reasons, in connection with many facts, why we believe the papacy to be the two-horned Beast. We shall now attempt to give our opinion in proof that the Beast above named and the "scarlet-colored Beast" are identical.

First. The papacy is frequently spoken of in the masculine gender:—"the horn," "the man of sin;" "whose look was more stout than his fellows;" "and he shall subdue three kings." The horn cannot, it seems to me, be the woman, neither the man of sin, nor the he be understood to be the woman. In plain terms, I consider the woman to symbolize the Roman laity and hierarchy—the church; and the horn, the man of sin, the Pope. A few reasons on this point at this time may not be amiss.

Second. In a previous article we presented testimony showing that the popes had been monarchs, sovereigns, despots, statesmen, warriors, etc., and they have as temporal rulers had organized bodies of military men, such as papal dragoons, infantry, guards, police, etc. On this head let me give an extract from Koch:—"The Romans took special occasion from this to expel the governor who resided in their city on the part of the emperor, and they formerly erected themselves into a republic A. D. 730, under the pontificate of Gregory II. By usurping all the rights of sovereignty and at the same time reviving the Senate and the Roman people, the Pope was recognized as the chief head of this new republic, and had general direction of all affairs both at home and abroad." Koch, Lond. Ed., p. 18.

Third. The scene described by the revelator is during the "wilderness" state. He is carried away into the wilderness. Is this not a fact? He sees the Beast carrying the Woman in the wilderness state.

Fourth. There does not appear to me an identity concerning this Beast. It is "full of names of blasphemy!" "Names of blasphemy," seems to be a distinctive characteristic of this power. Here are a few of the great fullness of papal blasphemous assumptions:—"The most holy pontiff and father in Christ and Lord our (God) Pope Leo XII.;" "arbiter of heaven and the Lord of the earth, successor of St. Peter, the anointed of the Lord, the master of the universe, the light of the world." Christ declared himself to be the "light of the world," but the pope assumes blasphemously that prerogative. "The Emperor Constantine says Nicholas the First conferred the appellation of God on the pope." "Marcellus in the Lateran council, and with its full approbation, called Pope Julius God on earth, his holiness the pope, holy father in God." The papacy is "full of names of blasphemy." The holy name of God was blasphemed by the French atheists, but neither France nor any other but the papacy has been "full of names of blasphemy," so far as I am informed at present.

Fifth. This beast is represented as carrying the woman—evidently conveying the idea of an affinity existing between the two. Such has not, it seems to me, been the fact with the Woman and France since the "reign of terror." But more on this point in the next article.

My object, dearly beloved, has been to simplify these very interesting portions of prophecy, as seen in vision by the revelator. "He wondered with great amazement." (Syriac Translation.) He was doubtless amazed to behold such a prostitution of the ennobling principles of religion corrupted and perverted into an institution of the most cruel, debasing and destructive character that ever cursed the earth. In the 8th verse he predicts the ascension of a power out of the bottomless pit—one that possessed no controlling influence. When the scarlet-colored Beast was carrying the woman in the wilderness, one that had been a predominant power, but was not during the wilderness state, and shall (future tense) ascend out of the bottomless pit. And they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, when they behold the beast that was, is not, and yet is. That power is now doubtless consummating his work. The last act is now about to be unfolded, and the last scene in the bloody drama of this world's history, before the curtain falls, is just opening. Cry! herald of the coming one—lift up thy voice! The lengthening shadows o'er the scene proclaim the close of day.

The cry is up, the strife's begun!
The struggle of the mighty ones!
And Armageddon's day comes on—
The carnival of slaughter's son;
War lifts his helmet to his brow—
O God! protect thy people now.

For the Crisis.

My Experience.—No. 7.

We now felt that we were truly in the land of the dead and dying, and a voice from the grave was loudly saying to us, "Prepare to meet thy God!" Solemn reflections filled our souls while we remembered that no more could we listen to the gospel sermons, melting fervent prayers, and affectionate entreaties of the man of God who had so suddenly and unexpectedly been taken away. Our hearts were humbled in the dust. Again did I renew my covenant engagements with God, laying all upon the altar, seeking earnestly for the path of duty with not only a willing mind, but desirous to engage in whatever work should be made ready to my hands. I very soon felt that God accepted the offering, and a spirit of prayer and labor for the salvation of my husband rested heavily upon me. I could plainly discover a deep conviction for sin, and a constant effort to resist the Spirit's influence upon his heart. Carefully did I watch and employ every opportunity of conversing with him upon the subject of religion, endeavoring to lead him to Christ, while he as resolutely and cautiously avoided the same. This the more increased my anxiety and distress, enabling me daily for months to bear him in the arms of my faith to the throne of grace, beseeching God to have mercy upon him. Truly God had spoken once, yea twice, and I felt confident that, should he still disregard it, let this opportunity pass, and fail of entering in, it was more than probable the door might be closed against him, and that forever. I saw, too, that his present submission to God depended in a measure upon my faithfulness and efforts in his behalf, and that I, poor, frail creature, must erect the family altar and offer sacrifice thereon alone. Several weeks did I suffer and shrink from the cross, fearing, too, that he was losing conviction and would ultimately be lost. At length I resolved to make the effort, trusting in God. One Sabbath evening we were alone; I took the Bible, seated myself beside the table, upon which he was reclining, and commenced reading aloud—my feelings and interest increasing as I proceeded—and when I had finished the chapter he was apparently asleep. I hesitated, feared and trembled, but considering a moment my position and the step I had taken, I concluded to read on, hoping thereby to arouse him. But the reading of one or two chapters more found him occupying the same position still. My courage now failed, and I wept before the Lord. At length I arose, went to my room in despair, thinking to retire, but felt forbidden. I returned, waited in anxious suspense for his arousal. The third time of so doing, while undressing, a voice seemed to say, "This is the turning point," which aroused all my energy and nerved my heart to the trial again. I immediately returned, when he awoke, and without hesitation I at once told him my past and present feelings with regard to his salvation, and my impressions of the duty of praying with and for him. He coolly replied that if I wanted to pray no one would hinder me. This was spoken in such a careless and indifferent manner that for a moment my heart quailed beneath its influence; but, God strengthening me, I bowed before him, and never before was I so sensible of the presence and power of God as at this time.

Words flowed freely, love filled my soul, while I poured out my whole heart in prayer. When I arose he was standing near the fire-side. After a moment's pause I inquired if he could not pray for himself. He walked the room, then to the door, opened and closed it, and returned again to his former position before answering. Evidently a fearful tempest, a mighty struggle, was going on; but the same faithful monitor whispering, "this is the last opportunity, the turning point," enabled him to decide, when he replied that he did not feel safe to retire without trying. I told him I would try to pray again if he would kneel and try to pray for himself. We bowed together, and again the Lord assisted in a wonderful manner. When I ceased, he hesitated and trembled, but, after a moment's struggle, he faintly yet feelingly said, "Lord, have mercy!" This prayer, though short, was more than all the world to me. Language fails to describe the varied emotions of my soul at this time. Rejoicing and weeping, fearing and trembling, seemed the portion of my cup. The Lord greatly assisted me with words of instruction and encouragement. We continued our evening supplications some two or three weeks without much change or a satisfactory evidence of a true conversion to God. At times he seemed nearly discouraged, but selected texts of scripture enabled him to hope in the mercy of God.

Many persons wonder why they do not come directly into the enjoyment of the love of God when they have taken the first step towards repentance, but it seems there must be a confessing Christ before the world in order to come into full fellowship with him. With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. It was not till after he had, through much solicitation, manifested his desires for religion in public, that Jesus said, "My peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you." In a few months he was baptized in the same beautiful lake, and united with the same branch of Zion. We now went on our way together rejoicing. O, how my heart triumphed in God! What a work he had done! what a change he had wrought! Already a hundred fold had been recompensed for all the sorrow and suffering endured. It was now easy living, easy laboring for God. Yea, the yoke was easy and the burden light.

Correspondence.

From Eld. J. Blain.

Bro. Grant:—Allow me to say, through the Crisis, to brethren east, that I much need what they may owe me for my works which they may have sold. The reason of this need and call-in, that the war has depreciated bills on western banks so that I can collect nothing there, nor sell a large stock of books and tracts I have on hand. I do not expect to come east this season, and they may send either to me, at Buffalo, or to Bro. Grant, Crisis office.

J. Blain.

Buffalo, May 1st, '61.

If Bro. Blain wishes money for him sent to us, instead of Bro. Grant, we will receive it.—Ed.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

Dear Bro. Grant:—May grace, mercy and peace, from God the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ, be multiplied to you and the brethren scattered abroad in this wicked world. I thought it good to write a little of what I see, hear and feel, that the brethren may have fellowship and rejoice with me in the good work of the Lord.

It has been my privilege to be in Danbury, and witness the power of God's Spirit, and his gifts bestowed upon the church there. Eight have been baptized, and go on their way rejoicing. Several others stand ready for baptism. Some of the gifts mentioned by Paul, in 1 Cor. 12th chapter, have been witnessed, and some of the signs which Jesus says shall follow those that believe, have been seen and felt in Danbury; some of which signs Paul says were given, not for those who believe, but for those who believe not. There have been four cases of healing by the prayer of faith; though I did not see the work done, yet I was acquainted with the persons so healed; have seen them since the work was performed, and conversed with them about it, and become no doubter of the reality of the work. The church seem to be comforted, built up, strengthened, by what they have experienced, and appear humble, meek and devoted. I feel to give them my heart and my hand. May the good Lord thus bless all the churches of our Lord Jesus Christ.

I have found the brethren generally in N. H. firm in the doctrines of God's word—the literal coming of Jesus to set up a kingdom on the earth; the resurrection of the dead, and the unconscious state until the resurrection; in the destruction of the wicked by the great burning day, and the restoration of the earth to its original state of beauty and fertility. From what I have seen, I should think there was a coming up—an increase both of numbers and graces; and an increase of those gifts and talents which God gives for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, until we all come, in the unity of the Spirit, to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. Thank the Lord! Praise his name for what he hath done for his people!

O let us keep humble, meek and devoted; keep our eyes on the signs which show plainly that the coming of the Just One is near. Let us love one another, and try to encourage one another to love and good works,—yea, good works. Brethren, let none be frightened at the idea of good works, for they are good and profitable to all,—yea, and they show our faith; let others show their faith without their works if they can.

Brethren, beloved of the Lord, let brotherly love continue, and do not be forgetful to entertain strangers, for some have thus entertained angels unawares. Use hospitality without grudging, remembering that he that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord. My health and spirits are greatly improved, praised be the Lord, and I feel like consecrating myself to the work of the Lord. Pray for each other; pray for unworthy me. Yours looking for Jesus.

Alexandria, N. H., Apr. 20, 1861.

From J. W. White.

Bro. Grant:—In compliance with your request, I will briefly state what the Lord has done and is doing in this place. I came to E. Kingston the 9th of Sept. last, by request of the brethren at campmeeting, and have preached here every Lord's day since. At first but few came out to hear, as there was much prejudice against the Advent doctrine. But under the influence of judicious preaching, prejudice has gradually melted away, and within the last six months between 40 and 50 have been converted and reclaimed—35 within the last three weeks—and the good work is still going forward. Lord's day morning, we had a love feast indeed. We had 49 exhortations, in 35 minutes. The work is chiefly among the middle-aged, and young men and their wives; and some of the most hardened and wicked in town have been converted, for which we feel to praise God, and are encouraged to labor on. And with that wisdom that comes from God, we expect to see a company here that will love the truth and be saved in the kingdom at last. Bro. Munger was here three days, and rendered essential aid. Our meetings still continue afternoons and evenings, and conviction is among the people. One characteristic of this work is, many have been convicted without coming out to meeting. The Spirit of God has found them in the shops and in the woods. The Lord is indeed at work, and the devil also; but we expect many more will leave his ranks and come over on the Lord's side.

E. Kingston, N. H., Mar. 1861.

P. S. Many thanks to the kind Bro. or Sr. that sent me that package of tracts. May God reward you.

Obituary Notices.

Fell on sleep and was gathered to her fathers, 27th ult in this city, Sister Sarah M. Wheelock, aged 55 years.

Her last sickness was brief and painful, but was borne with perfect patience and terminated most triumphantly. Those who attended her in her last hours say that it was most blessed to be in her room—she exhibited such confidence, such faith, such assurance of final victory after a brief and sweet sleep in dust! She has been but little known among us, being of a very quiet and retiring disposition, but she was a firm believer in the nearness of the Kingdom, and waited like "Anna" for the "consolation of Israel." She also accepted Christ as the "believer's life," and expected to be raised to immortality through Him alone. She has left a circle of friends who mourn not as those "which have no hope." May God cause the bereavement to be sanctified to their eternal good.

Randl. E. Ladd.

Springfield, April 14, 1861.

Died at Hesper, Winneshiek Co., Iowa, Feb. 6th, 1861, Sister Elizabeth, wife of Albert Croff, aged 30.

The subject of this notice was formerly of Washington, Davis Co., Indiana, and removed to this State some six years ago, and was much beloved as a friend and neighbor, but had never made a profession of faith, but was deeply impressed with the necessity of a preparation, to meet her God in peace.

In the commencement of her protracted illness her mind was, like many others, undecided, and confused in regard to the future destinies of mankind. She had been failing for about a year under the baneful and fatal disease, consumption. About seven months of this time she was confined to her bed. During her illness, it was her earnest desire that the people of God should visit, instruct, and pray for her. The influence that was thrown around her, and the teaching of a certain class of individuals that endeavored to harass her mind by modern theology, only confused her. Such was the state of her mind until the hope of the gospel was presented. She had been warned not to listen to the people who believed in the unconscious state of the dead, and their literal resurrection. Such advice, although gratuitously given, only seemed to wake up in our sister a more intense anxiety to hear and know more of the doctrines believed and taught by the Advent christian people; therefore she desired that they should have social meetings of worship at her place of residence. We therefore met occasionally, (although but few) about the first of November. At her earnest request, we adjourned our established prayer meeting to her house. At the close of the meeting she requested that Bro. Higgins should preach, which he did shortly after, from the following words: "We love him because he first loved us." After listening attentively to a short discourse on the above, light seemed to break upon the mind, and from that period onward, she began to take hold of the precious promises of God with unshaken confidence, and her faith grew stronger as she neared the confines of the narrow house.

In her last moments she grew unspeakably happy, and several times, (although very weak) clapped her hands and shouted glory to God! She called her husband, and the writer and wife, shook hands with us, bid us farewell and exclaimed, "O, is this not sweet dying!" She warned us to meet her in that better land, and calmly fell asleep, with a bright hope of immortality when Jesus comes. And may husband and children and friends meet her in the kingdom. She leaves a companion and seven children to mourn her absence, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope, for

> She sleeps, her sufferings all are o'er,
> She sleeps, on earth to wake no more,
> Thus faded from our sight away,
> Her sun has set while yet 'twas day.
> She sleeps the silent sleep of death,
> Her pulse is still, and hushed her breath,
> Her eyes are closed no more to weep,
> She sleeps the last, the dreamless sleep.
> She sleeps, nought can disturb her rest,
> Her pains are o'er, her sleep is blest,
> She rests secure from mortal woes,
> While angels watch her sad repose.
> She sleeps in Jesus and is blest,
> How sweet her slumbers are,
> From sin and suffering now released,
> And freed from every care.
> She sleeps, but will she never wake?
> Yes, Jesus will her slumbers break,
> His voice the sleeping dead shall hear,
> Then shall awake to die no more.

John McKee.

Fell asleep in Jesus, Dec. 30th, 1860, at the residence of her sister, in Morristown, Vt., Sister Paulina S. Keith, of Troy, Vt., aged 29 years.

Sustained by the "blessed hope" through a distressing illness, she fearlessly passed thro' the dark valley, expecting that soon the last trump would summon her to meet Him, whom not having seen, she loved; but in whom having believed, she was enabled, even here, to rejoice with "joy unspeakable and full of glory." Her last words were: "I have given myself away and have no desire to take back the sacrifice. All is well." "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord. . . They . . rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." All that "sleep in Jesus" when he comes will God bring with him. We, if faithful, shall meet her then on the other shore, where "there is rest for the weary."

N. Orcutt.

Died, of diphtheria, March 20, Joseph A., son of Gideon Greenman, deceased, and Elizabeth C. Gould, aged 12 years and one month.

Also, of the same disease, April 21, Lydia Alma, daughter of Nicholas and Elizabeth C. Gould, aged six years and six months.

Although death has invaded our little home and snatched two of our loved ones from our embrace, and we are called to mourn, and our hearts are sad, knowing we shall listen no longer for their familiar footsteps—that their pleasant laughter and innocent prattle will make glad our hearts no more, there is joy mingled with our grief, for we know that our darlings sleep in Jesus, and we have the blessed assurance that Joseph and Lydia will soon with all the ransomed be delivered from the "land of the enemy," and live forever in immortal beauty in the paradise of God.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

The Adriatic has brought us a week's later intelligence from Europe. On the 15th ult., the Chancellor of the Exchequer made his financial statement in the House of Commons. He estimated the expenditure for the current year at £69,900,000, the revenue at £71,823,000, and the surplus at £1,923,000. This balance he proposed to dispose of by taking the tenth penny off the income tax, and repealing the paper duty. His statement gave general satisfaction. In the House of Lords on the 19th, Lord Ellenborough asked if the Government was doing anything toward reconciling the question between the King of Italy and the Pope, and Lord Wodehouse replied nothing whatever, it not being the policy of the Government to interfere in Roman Catholic questions. The Correspondence Autographa says that Spain will accept the annexation of St. Domingo as soon as it is confirmed by a vote of the people, if no foreign power object. Garibaldi had taken his seat in the Italian Parliament, and was enthusiastically received. In the course of the debate on the disbanding, and reorganization of the patriot army, he made a vigorous attack on the Ministry, and pronounced the French army of occupation at Rome the enemy of Italy. In Warsaw matters were daily growing worse and worse. The coercive measures of the Government had so exasperated the people, that fresh disturbances were anticipated; while at Kiew a sanguinary conflict had taken place between the Russian troops and the inhabitants, in which 150 are said to have been killed or wounded. The Hungarian Chamber of Deputies had been definitely constituted, and had held its first sitting. The President in his opening speech laid stress on the equality of rights of all citizens and nationalities in Hungary, and the majority will demand the restoration of the laws adopted in 1848 by the Diet. We have letters from Cochin China to the 28th of February. On the 24th an attack was made by the French and Spanish on the Anamese. The allies were victorious, but sustained severe loss. The island of Java had been deluged with great floods, by which cattle, crops, and villages had been destroyed—by which hundreds have lost their lives, and thousands have been ruined. The Government has contributed 300,000 florins, and the merchants of Batavia 150,000 florins, for the relief of the sufferers.—Indep., May 2d.

DOMESTIC.

New York, May 4th. The Herald's Washington despatch says that a gentleman from Richmond, 1st inst. states that the people there are greatly alarmed at the determined war policy of Mr. Lincoln, and it is stated there that all the Governors of the Slave States have been notified to repair to Montgomery for conference.

A million percussion caps were seized yesterday, which had been shipped for Charleston. A case of revolvers were also seized at the American Express office.

A special despatch from Washington to the World says that the Alexandria custom house and post office will be taken possession of soon by the Federal troops.

It is contemplated to suspend all Southern mails next week.

A report is current that there has been a collision between two vessels near the mouth of the Potomac.

All supplies for Washington by the up-country roads have been cut off by the Virginians.

A corps of telegraph operators are being organised, to be attached to the army.

The Times' Washington dispatch says that the Federal forces are moving towards Baltimore, and Fort McHenry has been well reinforced.

It is surmised that Harper's Ferry will be retaken, and Richmond invested shortly. The Cumberland, Monticello, Yankee and several tugs are strictly blockading Hampton Roads and James River.

Letters from Boston indicate that five millions of the new loan will be taken in that city.

The Navy department is to charter ten more steamers at New York, five at Philadelphia, and five at Boston, to be added to the Navy.

Washington, May 3d. Fourteen companies of Kentuckians from the border counties have tendered their services to the Secretary of War through Col T. V. Guthrie. Ten were accepted, with orders to encamp on the Ohio side of the river.

The Unionists in the Panhandle section of Virginia have enrolled 2600 men for the Government, who will fight the tyrants of the "Tide Wide" to the last.

It is believed that the first battle of the campaign will be fought at some point between Washington and Richmond. Late intelligence from Virginia indicates that Gov. Letcher is getting frightened, not only by the strong measures of the government, and the blockade of the Chesapeake, but by the extraordinary manifestations of a Union sentiment in Western Virginia.

The entire volunteer force called into service by the two proclamations of the President amounts to one hundred and seventeen thousand and thirty four men. The regular army is also increased from eighteen thousand to forty thousand seven hundred and fourteen men. The government will thus be able to throw an army of one hundred thousand men into the field for active operations, while, at the same time, it will have at command a reserve of over fifty-seven thousand men, to be employed in the defence of Washington, or in garrison duty.

Notices, &c.

Western N. Y. General Association.

The Annual Meeting of this Association will be held at Seneca Falls, to commence on Thursday, June 6, 1861, at 7 1-2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the following Sunday. All are invited to attend.

Arrangements will be made by the Church at this place to accommodate all who come with bed and board. Let all come by railroad who can, as it will be more inconvenient to provide for teams than mankind. However, let all come, and we will provide as best we can. Some two or more of our eastern elders are expected, and we desire more, nay all who can and will come, both east and west—both male and female.

Come, brethren, let us meet once more in love and harmony and worship before the Lord, as it were on the very threshold of the "time of trouble."

B. B. Schanck, President.
T. G. Newman, Secretary.

Discussion.

I am to hold a discussion with Rev. Jacob Baker in Wales, commencing the first Tuesday evening in June, and continuing four evenings and days, if thought best.

H. Pratt.

Barn Meeting.

The brethren from Earlville and Shabona grove are especially requested to meet us at this meeting. We trust Bro. Chandler, Bro. Calkins and Bro. Spencer, also my brother H. G. McCullock will be present to preach the word, and all others who can. In behalf of the Brn.,

Peter S. W. Deyo, Evangelist.

Notice.

I will commence a meeting, the Lord willing,

At Greely, Delaware Co., Iowa, May 21st, at half-past seven o'clock, and continue over Sunday.

Amboy, Lee Co., Ill., May 26th, and over Sunday. I hope to see a general gathering at each place. Horace Chandler.

A Liberal Offer.

For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

M. Grant, per order of Publishing Committee.

For the Crisis.

Our Savior.

"Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows."—Isa. 53: 4.

Then to thee I gladly hasten,
For thou canst my sorrows feel;
Though my heart is aching, fainting,
I will all in thee conceal.
All beside thee
Do but chide me
If the tears my grief reveal.

Others love me when I'm cheerful,
And my sympathy can tend;
But when I am sad and fearful,
I still find in thee a friend.
Yet neglectful
And forgetful
Of thy care I long have been.

When my heart with grief is swelling,
Such as drew a Savior's tears,
From these words a balm is flowing—
"He hath borne our griefs and fears."
Then, when sighing
O'er the dying,
This my bleeding heart shall cheer.

When my all in thee I'm trusting,
Thou wilt ne'er unfaithful prove;
And my strength so fast declining,
Thou wilt shield me with thy love;
Till to-morrow,
With its sorrow,
Haunts my slumbers in the grave.

For the Crisis.

THE COMING STRUGGLE Between the Church and the Powers of Darkness:

SHOWING THE MISSION AND DESTINY OF SPIRITUALISM.

No. 13.

But this message is called "the everlasting gospel," which shows that in its proclamation the gospel will be presented without adulteration. And why not? Since Spiritualism is designed of the Evil One as a counterfeit for the genuine gospel, why should we not have the genuine on the other side without adulteration, as a beacon light to those who would know the truth? I can look back but a few years, and behold the Spiritual movement in its apparently infantile weakness; but, watching its progress, I see them falling into its ranks, first individually, next by hundreds, then by thousands, and now they number millions in our own country—millions of Atheists—fearfully and surely undermining and destined to sweep away that foundation on which the mass of the professors of religion are building.

And will God leave us in this hour of peril without the strongest support and the brightest light which the gospel can give, as a guard against this strong delusion? Never! It would impeach his faithfulness. Hence I look back a few years, and, marking the dealings of God with his church during the same period, I behold him leading out a people, first, on the "signs of the times," nearness of Christ's coming, and his reign on the earth made new; then an agitation of the importance and necessity of Christ's coming, showing it the time when all who have died, as well as the living, shall receive their reward, and to enjoy it on the new earth—never in heaven; and lastly, an agitation of the question of man's inherent nature in relation to a future existence, showing that he does not possess immortality by nature in any sense, but is a candidate for it, on the same conditions and from the same source that he has remission of sins, namely, through faith in the blood of Christ. This doctrine of life only through Christ, involves also the sleep of all those who have died, till Christ comes, when they are raised from the dead and put on immortality. Depending also upon this doctrine of eternal life only through faith in Christ, is the future destruction of those who do not come to Christ by faith—the wicked. For as men by nature have not immortality, they must certainly perish for want of it, if they do not come to Christ, the only fountain, and get it.

Here, then, we have as the system of doctrines provided of God as a sure foundation against Spiritualism in all its speciousness, and devices of Satan: First, man is mortal, and when he dies he remains asleep till the resurrection. Second, if he is a wicked man, he is raised at his resurrection to judgment, when he is sentenced to receive death as the wages of sin—the second death, which is their everlasting destruction. Third, if righteous, they are raised when Christ comes; the living also are changed, and all, being made immortal, will dwell with Christ in his kingdom on the new earth forever. Nor have we embraced these doctrines as by a reaction from Spiritualism, or seeking some escape from it; on the contrary, most of us have had to conquer the stern difficulties of prejudice and early education in our own breasts, and foster a willingness to bear the continual reproaches of others, before we could accept of these doctrines or even give them a candid consideration. We must insist also that the doctrines are not new as our opponents urge, (through misapprehension or otherwise,) but are as old as the Bible. We do not claim, either, that they must be true in that we can find in the Bible, as for some doctrines, an apparent excuse merely; but we insist that they are true because they have the support of the whole Bible, and exclude all opposing doctrines.

It may be said that it is a weighty and almost fatal objection against these doctrines, that they have not been more generally believed, in the past and at the present time, by eminent men and by professors of religion generally. Well; if we were to look for "many mighty, and many wise men after the flesh," to be "called," and to find the things of God well pleasing in the sight of men, it would bear with some weight; but, as we are assured that it is "not many mighty," etc., we are not troubled when we find with us a Luther, a Tyndal, a Locke, a Milton, and others since the Reformation, and various able and learned men of to-day: though we are generally by common consent "the poor of this world," as in the apostles' day, and "the common people," such as heard Christ gladly,—while those who sought the praise of men could proudly ask, "Have any of the Pharisees believed on him?" But we have a special reason to look for an adulteration of the gospel in the past, since Paul has told us that the time would come when they would "not endure sound doctrine," but would "turn their ears away from the truth, and be turned unto fables," (2 Tim. 4: 3, 4;) and as good reason for expecting it here without adulteration, since divine wisdom has chosen to call this first message directed against the Atheism of Spiritualism by the appellation of "the everlasting gospel." And we insist that the message belongs peculiarly to us—Adventists—since none others would be guilty of making the proclamation, "The hour (or season) of his (God's) judgment is come." Or, if they did, it would make them essentially and really Adventists. Hence I must insist, and without any feeling of dogmatism or boasting, that "the everlasting gospel" is inseparable from the Advent message, and must be embodied in the present but more especially the impending preaching of Adventists in their efforts to warn the people against the delusive doctrines of Spiritualism.

I have said that the second cry declares Babylon to have embraced Spiritualism. I judge this to be the case, not from the language as here used, but as found in the same cry, evidently given in the 18th chap:—"Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird." Whiting has it "unclean spirit," instead of foul spirit. If then "the unclean spirits, the spirits of devils working miracles," of Rev. 16th, and the seducing spirits teaching doctrines of devils, of 1 Tim. 4th, are the spirits of Spiritualism, I can see no way of understanding the announcement that Babylon has become the habitation or dwelling place of devils and the hold of every unclean spirit, but that she has embraced Spiritualism. It declares that she has become the habitation of devils, which must imply, in view of the work of devils on earth at this time, that she has yielded herself to the direction of these spirits of devils.

Some have thought this cry declared the destruction of Babylon at the hand of the Lord. But this cannot be so, for John says, after she is said to be fallen:—"I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people;" hence there were people in her then, which does not admit of her destruction. But the reason given for coming out,—"that ye be not partakers of her sins," shows that she is to sin enormously after she is said to have fallen and become the habitation of devils; and they would be partakers of those sins if they did not come out and leave her. And the warning, "that ye receive not of her plagues," shows that her "seven last plagues" and destruction are yet in store for her. It is a question in my mind whether we are to understand by Babylon the Catholic church alone, or all Christendom—not including those who are truly the children of God. Babylon means "confusion;" and if this should have any weight in determining the application, I think it could be better applied to the mass of religionists comprising the adherents of all the multitudinous systems which Christendom presents. To say, then, that they have all become the dwelling place of devils, is to declare a general departure of the religious world to Spiritualism. But if it should be applied to the Catholic church alone, it would make no particular difference in the chronology of the event, nor its importance, as the Protestant churches bid fair to keep up with the tendency of the times toward Spiritualism. The chronology of the cry, "Come out of her, my people," seems to be after this general departure to Spiritualism, and before the system of persecution has become inaugurated. For the substance of the cry is not, now, against the Atheism of the Spiritual movement principally, nor announcing a general departure of the mass, termed Babylon, to Spiritualism and its corruptions; but in view of the impending proclamation throughout Christendom that "There is no God;" attended with the blasphemous inauguration of the false Christ, and setting up of the counterfeit kingdom of heaven; and the inauguration and enforcement with rigor of a code of laws designed to exterminate or subdue all who question their course, and especially Christians,—they call to all, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins." And, to seal the warning, they are reminded of the "plagues" sure to come on those who remain in Babylon, in the language, "That ye receive not of her plagues." The phraseology of this cry clearly anticipates the immediate development of the "image to the beast," and when developed, we have the next and last cry before the Lord comes.

This cry, like the others preceding, is made at a time when circumstances demand it; and since it is a warning against receiving the mark of the beast and his image, the time must be before all have made their choice, but when they are compelling all to worship the beast and receive his mark under penalty of death. The warning assures them that they "shall be tormented with fire and brimstone, in the presence of the holy angels and in the presence of the Lamb," referring probably to their presence at the final battle, and the fire and brimstone on that occasion. They are also further assured that "they shall have no rest, day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name;" referring to the torments of the plagues as their "noisome and grievous sore," from which none will be exempt; their springs, rivers, and sea all turned to blood, which they are compelled to drink; the sun's rays burning them with scorching heat; and their kingdom filled with darkness, from which they gnaw their tongues for pain:—enough certainly to give them no "rest day nor night." This warning against worshiping the beast and his image is, as I have said, the last cry of the church, and with it comes her sore trial.

The scripture assures us that "Here is the patience of the saints;" and, what is a great encouragement to us in our cold, barren state, it adds, "Here are they that keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus." The distress of the church in this trying hour is most forcibly presented in the next verse:—"And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth, yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." Though we would gladly wait and behold Jesus coming in the clouds of heaven, as many no doubt will, yet in view of the distress of the faithful in these "perilous times," it will be a relief to die in the Lord and rest from our labors and trials, assured that Jesus will soon come and burst the graves asunder, and take us home with him. We may wish to live, then, but shall account it a relief to die. May God grant us grace to stand the trial. The next verse announces the coming of Christ in the following language:—"And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle." My Household Hearth.

I.

Once I'd a happy home, a circle round my hearth,
And merry sounds and pleasant sights there had their birth;
But years went round, and desolation marks the place
Then filled with joyous hearts—gone is each pleasant face;
For over death's dark stream, upon the shadeless shore,
My household band will gather soon to part no more.

II.

They sleep who then gave life to that dear household hearth,
The opening bud and blooming flower have sunk to earth;
No joyous sounds around that once bright hearth beguiles,
Nor memory of the past brings back its former smiles,
Beyond the dark, cold stream, the dying ones of earth
Will meet again in joy, where endless love has birth.

III.

Vacant the seats, and that once festive board is bare,
In vain I list for merry sounds resounding there.
The loved and beautiful, the opening buds of life
Went one by one—now with them sleeps the faithful wife,
Far o'er the stream, upon that ever blooming shore,
I long to meet the loved that time shall there restore. W.

Revival Intelligence.

The London Wesleyan Times publishes the following revival movement in Sanday, Orkney. Should we not see more such Pentecostal seasons, if there was a like definite waiting before God for the promise of the Father?

"Wick, Dec., 1860.

In some places on the island of Sanday, the work is proceeding calmly; in others, many may be seen earnestly engaging in prayer and supplications, with strong crying and tears. Some have been stricken down as in Ireland. For some time past there has been a spirit of earnest inquiry in the island, accompanied with an increase of prayer meetings in private houses. The Free Church minister, the Rev. Matthew Armour, was the first who noticed the matter publicly, which he did by intimating to his congregation on Sabbath, the 7th Oct., that on the following Sabbath afternoon THEY SHOULD SET THEMSELVES AS A CONGREGATION TO WAIT FOR THE PROMISE OF THE FATHER. In the forenoon of Sabbath the 14th, nothing unusual occurred; but in the afternoon, while Mr. Armour was addressing a word to the congregation, especially on "the effects produced by the coming of the Spirit," one of the members lately ordained to the deacon's office rose up in his place, lifted up his hands, and prayed with singular earnestness for the Spirit to come down and revive the congregation. The whole congregation was filled with cries and weeping. This continued, though in a more subdued form, throughout the rest of the service. On the way home the people were weeping and crying: "Lord, have mercy upon me!" When the children assembled for the Sabbath-school, the same individual who had prayed in the church, gathered them at the door, and many of them were weeping bitterly.

On Sabbath, the 11th Nov., was the communion in the Free Church of Sanday, when Mr. Armour was assisted by the Rev. N. P. Rose, of Romsay. On the Sabbath and preceding days the feeling was very strong, and the excitement great, but it reached the culminating point on Monday evening. Mr. Rose preached, and the service was a protracted one, as the people listened so intently and earnestly that it seemed as if they would never weary of hearing the word of life. After Mr. Rose had concluded, Mr. Armour addressed the people for about a quarter of an hour; and, as they seemed unwilling to depart, intimated that they would meet again after a short interval. When the minister returned to the church, the scene was indiscribable. Outside the church the people were leaning against the wall crying for mercy. The vestry was crowded with persons in deep earnestness—some crying for mercy on themselves, some pleading earnestly for others, and uttering such exclamations as, 'Come, come, Jesus!' 'Come, come, Holy Spirit, come!' On entering the church, the scene baffled description, and the first feeling was one of fear, at seeing the people in such excitement. This was speedily succeeded by a feeling of awe, at seeing strong men writhing in agony under a sense of their guilt. Some who had nearly found peace were singing:

'Happy day, happy day,
When Jesus washed my sins away.'

The second verse of the fortieth Psalm was a special favorite:

'He took me from a fearful pit,
And from the miry clay.'

Young and strong men were shouting with almost superhuman voice, declaring what God had done for their souls. Many were lying prostrate around the pulpit, and all through the church. The ministers, finding it impossible to address the assembly on account of the excitement, were obliged to speak to the ones instead of the many; and thus they continued during the night. It was with the greatest difficulty that the people could be persuaded to depart to their homes, and it was between four and five o'clock in the morning when they finally dispersed. Many relate that they slept none that night, but went to their houses and gathered in groups for prayer; and they say it was the happiest night they ever spent. Among all it was observed that they spoke with a fluency, and A CORRECTNESS and A SCRIPTURALNESS REMARKABLE in men who had never opened their lips publicly before. On Tuesday morning, the people obtained the key of the Established Church, and held a meeting there in the forenoon. The day was very wet; but notwithstanding this, the area of Mr. Armour's church was filled by four o'clock in the afternoon, the time appointed for the meeting. It was arranged that two of his converts, one of them an office-bearer, the other an old man, should conduct the devotional exercise. Mr. Rose delivered an address on the words, 'How much owest thou unto my Lord?' for the young converts, and another for sinners: 'Now is the day of salvation.' Mr. Armour followed with, 'What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?' The addresses smote like axes; for Mr. Armour had not proceeded far, when the people burst forth into loud cries, till his voice was completely drowned, and he was unable to proceed further. The scene became similar to what it had been on the previous night, but the excitement was more general, and young men seemed to be brought more under the power of the Spirit. This continued till about four o'clock on Wednesday morning."

Brethren, this is what we need, the coming of the Holy Spirit in power, to awaken the consciences of the multitude, and lead them to cry out in earnest for salvation. It is not the mere "rational preaching," the theorizing discourses, that will make men's hearts feel; it is "the demonstration of the Spirit," accompanied with "power from on high," that penetrates the slumbering conscience, awakens it from its dreams, exposes its vileness, reveals the yawning gulf of perdition, and inspires the cry, "What shall I do to be saved?" Would that it might be earnestly sought, and that in answer to believing prayer, it might descend upon the formal minister and the listless congregation, breaking up the dry, theorizing sermons, stereotype prayers, and cold-hearted exhortations and testimonies. Amen. M. D. W.

Oil on the Waters.—A lady once dropped a valuable diamond ring from off her finger into one of the canals of Venice, on which she was sailing in her gondola. A slight breeze ruffled the water, so that, although it was not deep, the gem could not be seen. Some one proposed to pour a flask of oil on the troubled waters. They did so, and through the smoothening and pellucid medium perceived the diamond and recovered it. So if we were to pour the oil of kindness into many a storm-ruffled breast, we might often discover virtues laying concealed there that we had never dreamed of.—Ex.

Christian Hospitality.

"Mr. Jay is going to be out of town, and it is a dull day, Sally; we will make a dinner of what is in the house," said Mrs. Jay to her cook as she rose from the breakfast-table. "There is a small piece of steak that will answer, with a few vegetables."

And giving some further necessary orders, Mrs. Jay proceeded to settle her arrangements for the day above stairs, and at eleven o'clock was comfortably stationed before the parlor fire with her writing-desk.

"This is just the day to have a good, cozy, undisturbed time," said she to herself as she arranged her papers. "Little danger of calls, and these letters that have been so long accusing me, shall be answered."

The sky was gray and cold, with a threatening snow-storm without, and the glowing fire, reflected from books and furniture, invited to comfort within. It was a rare and quiet opportunity for the busy housekeeper, and she was not loth to make the best of it. An hour passed busily and silently, and then came a ring at the door-bell. The sudden first thought was, "Dear me, who's come to spoil my day?" But a more hospitable one was fast succeeding, as two ladies entered the parlor, half frozen in spite of furs and all manner of wrappings—two old friends, always welcomed and always expecting to be. The cloaks and wrappers are removed, for they have come to spend the day.

Mrs. Jay's plan for the day was spoiled, but her temper was not. Her dinner was small, but not her hospitality. Nor did the vision of her slender table scare her out of all recollection of kindness and politeness. She did not sit down with an anxious, abstracted air that should say very plainly she wished her visitors were very comfortably at home. She did not put by her pleasant employment with a manner that told more plainly than words how much she was disturbed. Neither did she run to the kitchen and get into a nervous fever to prepare a "company dinner."

She was glad to see her friends, in spite of being disturbed, and they were not long in discovering it; and under such warming influences, lively chatting and merry laughter filled the parlor for the next half hour; when at length, the door-bell rings again.

Enter Aunt Sophia, from ——ville, just arrived in town. Cold and fatigued, the gay circle around the parlor fire was a sight to revive her; and the warm welcome soon thawed the traveler into a state of sympathetic talkativeness. Nor yet did the dinner weigh heavily on Mrs. Jay's mind. It was late—the traveler would need a meal in season—and Sally, accordingly, received an order to prepare with despatch an extraordinary supply of baked dumplings, for which she was renowned. There must be a sufficiency of food; but any further alteration cannot be made without sacrificing the comfort of all. Mrs. Jay's code of christian duties included good breeding. According to her idea of good breeding, she would put her unexpected guests more at their ease and do more for their comfort by her presence in the parlor than by fussing in the kitchen to please their appetite. Contrary to the custom of a large number of her stylish neighbors, she understood hospitality to have a meaning extending beyond the dining room. She had an incomparable way of putting guests on a comfortable footing. Just where it lay, it might not be easy to say; but those who knew her best knew she had an original way of construing into household rules some sayings of Paul about hospitality, usually supposed to refer only to minister's families. At any rate, she could not be made to believe that her duty toward her guests consisted in making the greatest possible display to them of her housekeeping skill and resources.

So the dinner hour arrived, and the party repaired to the dining-room, where, for the first time a laughing explanation took place of the state of the table.

"You were too late to admit of my sending to market, so you are to try to be satisfied with a very small dinner and a very large desert."

In the midst of their merry acquiescence to this, the group was seated, when lo! another ring!

"Who, now, I wonder," exclaimed Aunt Sophia; "we certainly can't ask anybody else to dinner!"

"Never!" rejoined the others.

In another moment Mrs. J—— was in the hall, dusting the snow from cousin Charles' overcoat.

"Just in the very nick of time, Charles," she cried. "I've got a piece of steak for dinner only so big, and six people to eat it. And I want you to come and make it go round!"

The steak went around; the dumplings were abundant and incomparable, and the hearty, easy welcome of the hostess conducive to an excellent appetite for all.

"Never let me hear Maria's housekeeping found fault with," said Aunt Sophia, when she reached home. "Her house is always in sufficient order for comfort, her table perfectly nice, and there is not one house in fifty where you can feel so safe to go unexpectedly. Housekeepers need to learn that it is neither good breeding nor christian courtesy to stay fussing and fretting over the dinner, while the poor guest sits in a dark, upholstery parlor, reckoning the probable extent of his intrusion, and the trouble he will make. In our great cities, particularly, the special misconstruction of the day is to suppose that the command to use hospitality is simply an injunction to rack the market for something to eat, while every refined attention is forgotten."

But a "prickly, troublesome," distressingly nice neighbor of Aunt Sophia's, whose life is devoted to keeping clean, and whose guests are afraid for their lives lest they should lean a chair against the wall, or soil a carpet, replies, "that it is easy enough for such folks to be good natured; that Mrs. S. is no housekeeper, and her house is always at sixes and sevens."

Aunt Sophia indignantly said nothing to this; but after her departure she exclaimed,

"It must have been one of her peers, whose table Dean Swift ran from, to dine on sixpence worth of herring at home. She would find it very hard to prove all she says of Maria. At any rate, it is very certain I know whose guest I should rather be of these two, when I was unexpected, and there was a short dinner."—Independent.

Once, and only Once!

Once is enough, all-sufficient, better than a thousand. Parents, never allow your little ones to disobey or trample on the first moving muscle, the slightest wink, the least nod of parental requisition. Make no requests of your children, give no commands to them but such as are just, right, and reasonable, such as can be complied with and ought to be complied with; then let it be fully understood, the command given is to be obeyed cheerfully, unhesitatingly, the very instant the word falls from your lips.

Children, even little children, are eagle-eyed; they read the eye of the parent, his every look, the tone of his voice, the manner of his expression; they very soon learn whether or not the parent is in good earnest and intends to be obeyed. Beloved, do you request a child of yours to rise in the morning at a specific time, come to the altar of prayer, the breakfast-table, to do this or that? What now?—slacken the reins, repeat and re-repeat your requisitions; permit your little ones to obey or disobey at their own will and pleasure? Very soon you reap the fruits of this tardiness or parental slackness. What you sow, you reap. Sow to the wind, you reap the whirlwind. It is utterly impossible to have clock-work in-doors, or out, in the kitchen or in the parlor; quiet, order, peaceful harmony, good will, at table, around the family-altar, where this repetition is allowed for a moment. Besides, this one deviation from family order is the letting out of waters, the stepping-stone to more general and perpetual deviations, to more startling, head-strong, reckless outbreaks; till the family (instead of an Eden or paradise) becomes a little Bedlam, a scene of disorder and confusion.—Golden Rule.

The Test.—"When you see a dog following two men," says the Rev. Ralph Erskine, in one of his sermons, "you know not to which of them he belongs while they walk together; but let them come to a parting road, and one go one way, and the other another way, then you will know which is the dog's master. So, at times, will you and the world go hand in hand. While a man may have the world and a religious profession too, we cannot tell which is the man's master, God or the world; but wait till the man comes to a parting road; God calls him this way, and the world calls him that way. Well, if God be his master he follows religion, and lets the world go; but if the world be his master, then he follows the world and the lusts thereof, and lets God and conscience and religion go."

Old Grudges.—A writer in the Congregational Journal says: "I take this opportunity to say, that, according to my acquaintance and prayerful observation of many of our feeble churches, the greatest cause of decline and of the withholding of God's blessing, are old grudges among the brethren and sisters, and a destitution of family religion. Old grudges are like old ulcers within the body, unseen except by their effects, wasting away the moral and spiritual life of man, and imparting to it an effluvium that poisons the whole atmosphere of Zion. Those who harbor them never act in character as christians, for they are always under a more potent influence than that which proceeds from the love of Christ and his cause, yet they take no open stand on the side of the world."

Reading for Youth.

Be a Comfort.

Be a comfort, little girl! "Me? Aunt Katie," methinks I hear you say, "only seven or eight years old! how can I be a comfort?"

In many, many ways, little reader. Let me tell you a few very simple ones.

If brother Willie wants some of your playthings which it is proper he should have, don't hold them just out of his reach till he gets impatient and cries. If you have anything given you to eat which Willie ought not to have, don't eat it before him, and say, "Sister has something nice, and Willie can't have any." That is not being a comfort to your dear little brother.

If mamma tells you to go and do something for her, don't whine, and say, "Oh dear! cannot Susie or Jamie go? I want to play."

If you ask mamma for anything which it is not best for you to have, or if she is not willing you should go out to play or to walk when you want to, don't shrug your shoulders and look cross, and say, "I should think I might go! Ellen and Sarah are going;" for then come naughty thoughts which make you very unhappy, and anything but a comfort to the dear mother who is always doing so much for you.

If mamma is busy with company, don't hang about her chair, nor meddle with things in the parlor which you know she never allows you to have. Your little brother, younger, is watching, and will learn to do everything naughty which he sees you do.

When cousin Mary is busy, don't be meddling with her work-basket or pin-cushion, and making her "fidgety," when she is perplexed and troubled about her work.

If mamma has a headache and wants to be quiet, don't be noisy yourself, and try and keep the little ones still, too, by showing them pictures, or building houses for them with the blocks. Mamma dearly loves her little children, and nothing makes her so happy as to see them kind and affectionate to each other. If you meet any poor little girl in the street, not so well dressed as yourself, don't laugh nor make fun of her. If at school, any little scholar does not learn so easily as you do, don't call her stupid, but try and help her, and speak kindly to her.

Always have a loving heart, always say pleasant things, always try to make others happy. Your every day life will show you many ways in which you can do some little thing which will make you a great comfort to all about you.

Do you think it will be very hard always to remember and to do right? Then ask the blessed Savior, who loves you, and wants you to be good, and he will help you to be just what you must want to be, a "comfort." Will you not try it?—From the Child at home.

Selfishness and Self-denial.

There were two little boys, named James and William. One day, as they were just starting to school, their father gave them each a three cent piece to spend for themselves. The little fellows were very much pleased with this, and went off as merry as crickets.

"What are you going to buy, William?" said James, after they had walked a little way.

"I don't know," William replied, "I have not thought yet. What are you going to buy?"

"Why, I will tell you what I believe I'll do. You know mother is sick. Now, I think I'll buy her a nice orange. I think it will taste good to her."

"You may do so, if you please, James," said William; "but I am going to buy something for myself. Father gave me the money to spend for myself, and I mean to do it. If mother wants an orange, she can send for it. She's got money, and Hannah gets everything she wants."

"I know that," said James, "but then it would make me feel so happy to see her eating an orange that I had bought for her with my own money. She is always doing something for us, or getting us some nice thing, and I want to let her see that I don't forget it."

"Do as you please," said William, "but I go in for the candy."

Presently they came to the confectioner's shop. William invested his three cents in cream candy, but James bought a nice orange. When they went home at noon, he went into his mother's chamber, and said: "See, ma, what a nice orange I have brought you!"

It is very nice, my son, and it will taste very good to me. I have been wanting an orange all the morning. Where did you get it?"

"Pa gave me three cents this morning, and I bought it with them."

"You are very good, my dear boy, to think of your sick mother. And you would not spend your money for cakes or candy, but denied yourself, that you might get an orange for me. Mother loves you for this exercise of self-denial." And then she threw her arms around his neck and kissed him.

Now, here, you see how the giant selfishness made an attack on these two boys. James fought him off bravely, by the exercise of self-denial. William refused to exercise self-denial, and so the giant got a hitch of his chain around him. We shall find this giant making attacks upon us all the time. We can only fight him off by self-denial.—Dr. Newton.

Boys, help your Mother.

It looks bad to see three or four large, robust boys sitting around the kitchen stove, toasting their shins, cracking nuts and eating apples, while their mother, a slender, feeble woman, lugs in wood from the shed, wets her feet going through the snow for water, and stands in the damp, chilly cellar cutting meat for breakfast.

It isn't right, boys, and when you get to be men, and your imagination wanders back to the old homestead, that pale face and fragile form, long since mouldering in the grave, will haunt your memory, and cause bitter regrets at your careless neglect. You think of her, as day after day she moved about in the well remembered rooms, uncomplainingly, performing all the harassing toil of the household, sacrificing herself, and wearing out her life for you. Think of it, and think how much you can do to lighten her burdens.

A mother's work is never finished. It is one of unceasing, monotonous, ever recurring round of toil. Her duties begin first in the morning, and she must perform the last stroke at night, and as she lays her head upon the pillow, it is with the thought that the same tread-mill of labor is to be begun at dawn. The calls upon "Mother" are endless,—here a coat to mend, a book to cover, a stocking to darn. Tommy has cut his finger, and "Mother" must bind it up with a rag. Father has got a cold, and none but she can make the hoarhound tea. After all have retired at night, she carefully goes about to see that the fires are all safe—to lock the smoke-house door—shut up the old cat and kittens, and see that the "hired girl" has the potatoes washed, the buckwheat batter prepared, and the coffee ground for an early breakfast.

Boys, think of these things, and keep the wood-boxes well filled, and don't let your mother pull that heavy well-sweep. Knock the mud and snow from your boots when you go into the house,—don't leave your cap and comforter, and books lying around promiscuously; and, instead of stopping to play on your way from school, hurry home and do that heavy churning. Do all this, and much more, cheerfully, and it will make home sweeter, and gladden the household circle with many sunny spots.

The All-Healing Spring.

All healing source of life and love,
Helper of every mortal pain,
I seek thy matchless power to prove,
I pant thy gushing streams to gain.

O Christ, thou ever living stone,
Smitten to pour the healing flood,
I come to thee, to thee alone,—
I drink and live the life of God.

O living fount, thy healing wave,
Purer than all beneath the sky,
Gushes a ruined race to save,
Imparting life that ne'er shall die.

All-Healing Spring, by thee I dwell,
Daily I drink thy living tide;
O let this water, like a well,
In me to endless life abide.

To every thirsty soul I call,
Who pants beneath a burning clime,
Come to the Fountain, one and all,
Come and be saved by grace divine.

The Spirit's Influence.

As some among us are rejecting the work of the Spirit, as held by most christian denominations in our land, and by most of second advent believers, I wish briefly to notice some errors in their arguments.

They quote Rom. 8: 9, "now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his," and say the "Spirit of Christ" they understand to mean "the temper and disposition of Christ," and that if we have not these, we are not Christ's. I will not stop to explain what this particular text may mean, but agree with them that we must possess such temper and disposition to be Christ's or to be saved. But this is not the point at issue. The question is, how do we obtain this temper or disposition? That we are born, and grow up with it, none will pretend. Do we obtain it by our own efforts, and by getting a knowledge of Scripture, without any other help from God? Some brethren say yea, but I say nay. I will quote a few out of the many texts which tell how we are made like Christ as to temper and disposition.

Rom. 5: 5.—"The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit which is given unto us." "You hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins," Eph 2: 1. "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me," Ps. 51: 10. Did David pray that the Scriptures might be given to him? No—he had them, but found he needed other help; and so do all who know the plague of their own hearts. 1 Kings 8: 38.

But it is not my purpose in this notice of the subject to go into the abundant Bible proof of the doctrine, nor into the striking proof derived from the experience of real christians in every age and country where the gospel is and has been preached; but mainly to show some of the false reasoning of those who oppose it. Some brethren say, that the sects who profess to have the Spirit, and to be influenced or taught by it, differ in many points of doctrine, and certainly have errors—such as going to heaven at death, endless misery, all are immortal, etc.,—and so conclude they are deceived as to being "taught, or drawn" by the Spirit, as that cannot err. Here is a misunderstanding or misrepresentation of those who believe in the Spirit's influence in the present age or since the Apostle's day. No intelligent christian holds that the Spirit, or God's power, is now given to teach doctrines and our duties. Some few, I know, vainly advance the idea, but the general belief has ever been, that the work of the Spirit is to change our vile affections, to give a love of holiness and hatred to sin, to love doctrines and duties we have already learned, and a desire to learn more of God's commands as revealed in the Bible.

All in gospel lands know some important truths and duties, but sad experience, as well as the Bible, teaches us that all do not love these truths and duties. When our affections are changed by the Spirit, or power of God, we must go to the Bible to learn more perfectly doctrines and duties which we knew but in part while unconverted—knew, but did not love. All who are "renewed by the Holy Spirit," (Tit. 3: 5,) believe and obey as they understand the Bible to teach, for Christ says, "if a man love me, he will keep my words," John 14: 23. Other texts tell us that such are tempted, and "overtaken in faults," Gal. 6: 1. Neglect in studying God's word enough, or the want of judgment to understand it, or being misled by teachers, are the causes of divisions and errors among real christians, and not the want of love to God and his commands, which love is the "fruit of the Spirit," Gal. 5: 24.

The text some quote to prove that none are now influenced or taught by the Spirit, because all err more or less, fails of proof. It is 1 John 2: 27, "the same anointing teacheth you of all things," etc. The failure is this—first, the Spirit was given in that day in an extra degree, so as to know truth and work miracles, while only its ordinary, or quickening and renewing power is given now. When any say there is no proof of this change, they show a neglect in critically examining the Bible. Christ said, "take ye no thought how or what thing ye shall answer, or what ye shall say, for the Holy Spirit shall teach you in the same hour what ye ought to say," Luke 12: 11, 12. But Paul said to Timothy, "study to show thyself approved," 2 Tim. 2: 15, and also "give attendance to reading . . . . meditate upon these things," 1 Tim. 4: 13–15. This and other things said by the apostles, show that they were inspired to see that there would be a change as to the Spirit's work. It seems also that even Timothy was not inspired in that day. None are now baptized (overwhelmed) by or with the Spirit. John 3: 24 tells that "God gave not the Spirit by measure unto" Christ, and its measure as given to men in different dispensations should be better understood than it seems to be by some.

But, in the second place, the word "all" in 1 John 2: 27 must be taken in a limited sense, as it often is in the Scriptures, from the fact that John and Paul were often teaching the saints doctrines and duties. We know not, as we are not told, that all saints were baptized with the Spirit in the apostles' day. We are told that many were, but this is not proof that all were, while all are said to have the Spirit in some measure; see 1 Cor. 12: 7; Rom. 12: 3; Eph. 4: 7.

But I can say no more now on this vast subject and vital doctrine; nor notice other equally erroneous arguments about it. Brethren should first learn the belief of the churches, and of a great majority of advent brethren, before they charge them with error as to the work of the Spirit, or God's influence on minds in our day, and gospel age, lest they be found "false accusers," Tit. 2: 3. They should also weigh well this matter, lest they prevent or keep poor sinners from asking the aid of that Spirit which Christ has said the Father was more willing to give to them who ask him, than earthly parents are to give good gifts to their children, Luke 11: 13, and so the blood of souls be found in their skirts. Jer. 2: 34.

The Sin of Israel.

The sin of God's ancient people was awfully great, and terribly has its curse rested on them. But the prophecy of their sin and its punishment stands identified with its forgiveness and their restoration to national exaltation and unparalleled blessing! Thus their sin, like the sin of Paul, will serve to set off (as a dark background) the grace of God. "With Him there is forgiveness!" He himself oft applies it prophetically to "Israel, Judah and Jerusalem." "Christ died for that nation; and not for that nation only," etc. John 11: 50–52. "He died for them that the whole nation perish not." Jesus, the Prophet above Moses and "above all," said, "Your house is left unto you (the Jews) desolate; ye shall not see me henceforth till YE shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." See Matt. 23: 38, 39; Luke 21: 24; Rom. 11: 25; Lev. 26: 40–46; Ps. 132; Isa. 1: 27, etc.; Micah 3: 12 to 4: 8; Jer. 31: 31; Ezek. 36 and 37 to 48th chapters, and almost "all Scripture."

Note. This assertion that "Christ died for that nation, and not for that nation only, but all the children of God," is the ground of faith as solid as "Rock." "On this Rock" I build my assurance that the oft-repeated prophecies of Israel's restoration "must be fulfilled!" It is incorporated in the covenant oath to Abraham, as really as is the blessing on "all the Gentiles, nations, kindreds." "The body of Christ—his church (now being gathered)—the many brethren," of which "he is the first-born!" occupies the pre-eminent position of "His household—an habitation of God." 1 Cor. 12; Eph. 1: 22; 2: 19–22. In every member of which He will be "in measure, manifested, glorified"—as most completely, He will be in "the Head!" Amen! John 17. These are to be "the Royal Priesthood, the Priest Kings," in high and unceasing association with "the King of kings in his everlasting kingdom." Hallelujah! Then "in Him all nations will be blessed."

The Resurrection of the Dead.—No. 3.

Acts 26: 6, 7.

Having proved from the Scripture that the purpose for which Christ took upon himself flesh and blood, was to deliver from the bondage of death, by opening the prison to them that are bound, I will now proceed to show that this deliverance is "the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers" referred to in the last, unto which the "twelve tribes * * hope to come." The deliverance could not refer to the living so long as they were subject to death; for while so subject, the fear of death must remain: consequently, the fear could not be removed but by the removal of the thing feared. The nature of the promises to Abraham and his seed imply a future life on the earth where they were to receive their "everlasting possession." Gen. 17: 8. That Abraham understood this is evident from what Christ says, Jno. 8: 56, "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day: and he saw it, and was glad." The Jews said, "Abraham is dead, and the prophets," verse 52, and Christ did not dispute them. He himself said, 6: 49, "Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead;" and Peter says of David, Acts 2: 29, "that he is both dead and buried," and "is not ascended into the heavens," verse 34. This was after the resurrection and ascension of Christ; consequently, if David was dead and buried then, he will remain so until "Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. 3: 4. The patriarchs, then, are dead according to the common acceptation of that term, though they are not really dead, for they shall live again. In the purpose of God they are prospectively alive, since their resurrection is determined, and, therefore, Christ says that "Moses showed" the resurrection "at the bush" by calling "the Lord the God of Abraham." Luke 20: 37.

But we will look for plainer testimony in the Holy Scriptures as the foundation of the hope of our fathers. It is a promise which concerns the twelve tribes, made of God unto our fathers through the prophet Ezekiel, chap. 37. The prophet first sees in vision an exceeding great army raised to life in a valley which was full of bones, and very dry, verses 1–10. He is then instructed, verse 11, that these bones represent or symbolize the whole house of Israel. "Behold, they say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost: we are cut off from* our parts." That is, they were cut off from those parts or divisions of the land of Canaan into which it was divided among the twelve tribes. They were now carried away to Babylon, and the promise of their deliverance refers primarily to their deliverance from that captivity; but its ultimate fulfillment must be yet future, when the Jews shall be gathered from their present dispersions into the promised land. This is clear from verse 25, "And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they and their children, and their children's children for ever: and my servant David shall be their prince for ever." That David here means Christ, "the good Shepherd," is evident from the preceding verse; also Jer. 30: 9, "But they shall serve the Lord their God, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them." Connect with this the promise of the angel Gabriel unto Mary, Luke 1: 26–33, and Paul's exposition Acts 13: 16–42, and there can no longer remain a doubt that Christ is the king promised. Therefore the prophecy of Ezek. 37th looks beyond the deliverance of the children of Israel from the Babylonian captivity. It was not fulfilled previous to the coming of Christ, and after his rejection by the Jews, Jno. 19: 14, 15, they were soon driven again from the land promised to Abraham and his seed, and have never regained possession of it to this day. The promise to Abraham has never been fulfilled, as we have already proved from Acts 7: 5; and were the Jews of the present day to come in possession of the promised land, that would not fulfill the promise to Abraham, unless he himself also had a part in it. Therefore, I am prepared to understand literally Ezek. 37: 12–14. Evidence of this is found in verse 25 already quoted. "Wherein your fathers have dwelt, and they (your fathers) shall dwell therein, even they and their children." Christ expressly teaches that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob shall be seen in the kingdom of God, or the kingdom of heaven, which means the same thing. Matt. 8: 11; Luke 13: 28, 29. And when the Lord God gives unto Christ the throne of his father David, I understand the kingdom of God will come, Luke 1: 32, 33. David's throne was located in Jerusalem, not in heaven; and if we are to understand literally Isa. 7: 14, and Luke 1: 31, I see no reason why we should not understand literally all that the angel Gabriel spake unto Mary. This being granted, it follows that when Christ speaks of the "throne of his glory," he speaks of a throne yet to be located in Jerusalem. Therefore, he says to his twelve apostles, who had forsaken all and followed him, "Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. 19: 28. Now look at the promise in Ezek. 37: 15–28, and tell me if this be not the "promise made of God unto our fathers: unto which" the "twelve tribes" yet "hope to come." And if we are to understand literally Jno. 5: 28, 29, I see no impropriety in understanding literally Ezek. 37: 12–14. Certainly, the promise to the twelve apostles can never be fulfilled without a literal resurrection. I apprehend that the Jews had spiritualized Ezek. 37: 12–14, which was the cause of their "blindness" and rejection of their promised king. They had overlooked Isa. 53, and did not understand that he must first suffer many things, and be rejected by them as a generation or nation. See Luke 17: 20–30. Elijah or Elias appeared mystically in John the Baptist, Matt. 17. 10–12, just as Israel's King appeared first veiled in the flesh. Heb. 10: 19, 20, 2 Cor. 3: 14–16. John the Baptist was a representative of Elijah, just as Christ manifested in the flesh was a representative of Israel's King; but the promise still remains, "Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things." Matt. 17. 11; Mal. 4: 5.

Importance of Prophecy.—No. 6.

Fourth. "While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. It has been objected, by some, that the tarrying of the bridegroom is not to be considered in the interpretation of the parable, from the fact that God has, in his economy, appointed the time for the second advent of Christ, beyond which he will not tarry. But what is it to tarry? Ans., to stay, to continue, to delay. Hence, Christ has tarried in the heavens ever since he ascended thither; and there he will tarry until he vacates his seat at his Father's right hand,—until he cometh with clouds, when every eye shall see him. But that this feature of the parable may be fulfilled, it is not necessary that he should tarry beyond the time appointed by the Father, but that he should tarry beyond the expectation of the church. And that he has tarried beyond the expectation of the church, since the passing of the '44 time calculation, is known to all christendom.

But, if the tarrying of the bridegroom was not intended to have a fulfillment, neither was the sleeping of the virgins. The latter item depends on the former. "While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept." Hence, exclude the tarrying of the bridegroom, and there can be no sleeping of the virgins. Exclude the sleeping of the virgins, and there can be no midnight cry. And this principle carried out, would exclude the coming of the Lord! Each succeeding feature of the parable depends on the next preceding one.

But the Master declared that the action of himself and of the church relative to his second coming, should correspond to those circumstances specified in the parable. And will the integrity of his word be broken? It surely will if it fails in this, or in any other instance. A failure in this instance would give falsity to the declaration, "My word shall not pass away." If the word of the Lord is to fail in one instance, who can safely confide in any of it? What assurance does it afford to fallen man of deliverance from the thraldom of sin and the pangs of death? Who can esteem it as a sure word of prophecy? Who can regard it as a "lamp unto his feet and a light unto his path?" In short, who would risk his eternal all upon it? But the word of the Lord is sure; not one jot or tittle of it will ever fail; and the same condemnation rests upon those who take from that word, as against those who add to it; and those who are wise will not do either.

"They all slumbered and slept." Slumber signifies to sleep slightly, doze; to be in a state of negligence, sloth, and inactivity. Hence, in carrying out the figure, the church must, for a time, be in a state of inactivity in regard to some subject relative to Christ's second advent. But as it will be necessary to allude to this subject hereafter, we pass to the next feature of the parable.

Fifth. "And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." This feature of the parable, like the first, requires definite time in its fulfillment; for in both instances the church is represented as being in a state of expectancy relative to the time of the Lord's coming; and in neither instance could they have carried out the figure without a definite time arrangement. But has there ever been any action on the part of the church analogous to the cry, "Behold the bridegroom cometh," etc.? In answering this question, we need only refer to the time arrangement of '54 and '55. Then there was an exhibition on the part of the Advent body, exactly corresponding to this feature of the parable. The fiat of Omnipotence had gone forth and must be obeyed. And the peculiar means which God employed for the protection of those who gave the cry, against the assaults of their enemies, is at least circumstantial evidence that the cause was His. The Master had set before the church—then in her sixth prophetic stage—an open door, and no man was able to shut it. But there have been some objections raised against this position, which I purpose to notice.

Obj. 1. "If the time arrangement of '54 and '55 had been the true cry, the Lord would have come according to the expectation of the church; for he comes when the cry is made."

Reply. If the Lord had come as the church then expected, it would have proved that proclamation not to be the true cry; for he does not come at the time the cry is given. There are several other features in the parable to be fulfilled subsequently to the development represented by the cry, and prior to the coming of the Lord. 1. The trimming of the lamps; 2. The call of the foolish for oil; 3. The reply of the wise to the foolish; 4. The foolish going to buy oil. It will readily be seen, by considering the nature of the example, that the virgins could perform no two of these actions at one and the same time, let the time required for their performance be ever so short. And we should expect the order of the parable to be observed in its fulfillment.

Obj. 2. Some have objected to this position, imagining that it involves two tarryings of the bridegroom, whereas there is but one specified in the parable.

Reply. The midnight cry does not mark the termination of the tarrying of the bridegroom: the sleeping of the virgins, the rising up and trimming the lamps, the parley respecting the oil, and the departure of the foolish to buy oil, are all included in the tarrying time. The bridegroom tarries till he comes, which is not till the foolish are gone to buy oil. Again, the bridegroom is not represented as meeting the virgins at the time when, and the place where, the cry is made; but they were to move forward and meet him at some other place.

Obj. 3. Some object that the definite time arrangement in question did not answer to the cry, supposing the announcement, "Behold the bridegroom cometh," will be made by the Archangel, as the Lord descends from heaven.

Reply. This is a mere assumption, without any proof whatever. The parable was designed to represent the action of the church; and every circumstance therein specified, that does not directly apply to Christ, viz., the tarrying of the bridegroom, his coming and his judicial proceedings, is applicable to, and must be fulfilled by, the church. And the application of any part of it to the Archangel, so long as he is not named in the parable, is nothing less than adding to the word of God. It is being wise above what is written. Whatever the Archangel has done, or whatever he may do, in relation to other matters, as he is not named in the parable, makes no difference; it affords no proof that he is appointed to give the midnight cry.

But it is said, that, in all nuptial celebrations in the east, the announcement, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh," was made by a messenger, or forerunner, dispatched by the bridegroom; and if the figure is carried out, some herald must be sent from God to make the announcement.

But if there were ten thousand circumstances connected with the nuptial celebrations in the east, not specified in the parable, it would make no difference; no application in the interpretation of the parable could be made of them. The Master did not say the kingdom of heaven should be likened to an eastern marriage;—but to those actions of the virgins which he specifically named. Therefore, as he said nothing in the parable respecting messengers, forerunners, or heralds, it is not in man's prerogative to drag them into the arena of its fulfillment. In giving the parable, the Lord chose such circumstances as would illustrate the action of the church in the last days of the gospel dispensation; and those only will have an application in its fulfillment. Nor is it necessary, in order to get an understanding of this parable, to be at the trouble to obtain a knowledge of the manner in which eastern marriages were conducted; we need only to observe passing events; and when there is a development on the part of the church, corresponding in all its bearings to some specification in the parable, we may confidently exclaim, as did Peter on the day of Pentecost, "this is that which was spoken by the prophet." And we conclude, as previously remarked, that the '54 and '55 time arrangement constituted the cry by which the church were aroused from their slumber.

But the question is asked, "could the church give the midnight cry while they were asleep?" We will answer by way of illustration. Suppose a number of persons, transacting important business away from home, stop at the same inn for the night. Being deeply impressed with the importance of their business, they would retire with the determination to arise early the next morning, that they might set about the prosecution of their work in season. Hence, under these impressions, they would sleep but slightly. The first indication of approaching day would be immediately discovered by some one of the company; he would call to his comrades to awake, for the day is approaching. The call would be reiterated until the whole company were aroused. And under like circumstances could the midnight cry be given by the same church that "slumbered and slept." But we pass to notice the subject in regard to which the church slept.

Having previously defined the nature of that sleep, i. e., to represent a state of lethargy, inactivity and darkness, we will proceed directly to the question.

The church slept in regard to the fulfill- of prophecy. The '44 time arrangement was the result of prophetic investigation. But when that time passed by, the church, in a great measure, lost sight of prophetic developments, and feasted themselves on the signs of the Lord's coming—the darkening of the sun, etc.—and on those doctrinal truths which had long lain buried beneath huge masses of papal rubbish. The few prophetic investigations they made were puerile,—fitly compared to dreams,—merely sufficient to show that the church were not dead, but sleeping. They were totally ignorant in regard to the prophecies now in process of fulfillment; otherwise they could not have made the proclamation, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh." But when the time passed by, the midnight cry then being in a state of completion, in which condition its awakening influences began to be realized by the church, they awoke to the fact that all prophecy had not been fulfilled. And "then,"

Sixth, "All those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps." Disappointed in not meeting the Lord as they had expected, the church soon discovered, as prophetic light increased, that they were to move further on in the way pointed out by the finger of inspiration than to the completion of the midnight cry, ere they could realize their hope. They then discovered the necessity of trimming their lamps; i. e., searching their Bibles,—trying their faith by the word of God,—that thus they might be enabled to act still in harmony with His economy, and continue to pursue that course which would lead them to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

As, in properly trimming a lamp, the wick is raised, the accumulation of cinders, which are obnoxious to a clear light, are removed, and the lamp replenished with oil, so those who are represented by the wise virgins, when the midnight cry was completed, notwithstanding they were disappointed in not seeing the Lord as they had expected, yet, instead of casting away their confidence in the past, they magnified that faith which had led them to make the midnight cry—except they abandoned whatever errors they could discover therein—and, beholding in their past action the unfolding of God's economy, seeing in it a fulfillment of his word, their hearts were enlarged; their love for God and his economy increased; they received a greater degree of the influence of the Holy Spirit, and an increase of light was the blessed result. But the foolish, in trimming their lamps, considered all that peculiar faith which they had exercised in making the proclamation, "Behold the bridegroom cometh," and which had just been tried as by fire, by the passing of time, as spurious. They imagined themselves to have been pursuing a wrong course; they relinquished the faith they had been following; thus extinguishing their own light, so that they were unable to discern that they had assisted in fulfilling an important item of prophecy. They cast away their confidence just at the time of which Paul is speaking when he says:—"Yet a little while and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry."

A Letter.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—The shades of night deepen, and the horizon darkens with the looming clouds. The earth is dark enough at best, but when the tempest of war spreads athwart the sky, how intense the gloom. Then science, industry and morality are veiled from sight, and in their stead stalk forth those vices which modern reformers long since had hoped were gone, but which had only withdrawn themselves to await an opportunity to sport in open day. But where is christianity the while? Does she, too, retire from sight? Does her light become dim, and do her votaries forget to inquire for her welfare? Is the christian's hope bedimmed by a war-cloud? Does the strife of nations tell him of hope fled, of expectation delayed, of light obscured? No, no. The sunlight which illumines his vision streams not from science, industry, or morality alone. They are but reflecting moons of his universe. From the word of God he receives light direct, and on the pinions of his hope he soars above the darkness that impends the jarring nations.

Brethren, we look to-day on scenes dark and full of evil forbodings to earth. The tempest of war has burst over our land, and the judgments of God are being poured out on a nation whose cup of iniquity is full. Who can declare the end of these things? Each government desires to gain the victory. Preachers, both north and south, pray for God to declare victory for that section in which they may be located, and are no doubt equally sincere. None of these can declare the end, for they are beneath the cloud, and see not the true light. But the true church sees, by the light of the prophetic word, a kingdom of peace and glory, of which these troublous times are but a precursor. Hence, the true christian keeps himself aloof from fanatics, for their hope is not his hope; his "citizenship is in heaven, from whence also he looks for the Savior, who shall change his vile body and fashion it like his glorious body." But he is to come in an hour when ye think not. Be careful lest ye be found unprepared to meet him.

"O let us be ready to hail the glad day."

The War.—What is our Duty?

There is one supreme God, and the Bible, as interpreted by the Holy Spirit, is a complete revelation of his will to man. It is his will that men shall have Bible repentance for sin, which is the cause of all sorrow and trouble in this world, especially of the last great battle, when the nations will be angry, and men's hearts will fail them for fear. It is also his will that men shall believe on his Son Jesus Christ, who is exalted a Prince and a Savior, and to love even their enemies. It is therefore evident that the heathen, (Joel 3d) or those who know not God, and who obey not his gospel, must go down to the battle and perish. And it is also evident that those who truly know God and obey his gospel, cannot and will not go down, to mangle and destroy the bodies of those they love, causing sorrow and mourning throughout the land. These need not go down, for Jesus being their high Tower nothing can harm them. Let those who hope to be on the Lord's side, cast away their false religion, secure a broken heart, faith and love, and the God of Israel will answer for their safety.

Notes by the Way.

After getting breath and building a water wheel, I started for Vermont prospecting. Found at Vernon a good congregation, well settled in the truth, having been refreshed, since I was there in January, by the labors of Bro. Crabtree. Three arose for prayers Sunday evening; prospect good when I left. Next to Keene, by a special request from Bro. Hall. Found some five to six that had got the light, but did not get a good chance to let it shine. The one meeting I held with them developed the fact that there was an opening for doing good if the right effort was made. The people had an ear to hear, and they could not without a preacher, and we concluded to write to three different persons, and if neither could come, I was to take up one of my appointments and go for one week. But I am glad to hear Bro. Grant is going there. The Lord help him to break his pitcher and throw light into the camp of the Midianites. Next to Springfield. Found Bro. Cook and other old tried friends well; rather a low state of religious feeling, but the prospect better the second evening of a rally after a hard winter. Next to Rutland. Found Bro. Batchelor laboring hard to regain the influence lost by the treachery of pretended friends; stayed two evenings; good attendance, it being court time; many heard something new; the Methodist preacher the second evening gave me an invitation to preach in his house, to the astonishment of the brethren, which I promised to do on my return. Next to Castleton. Found a good company in good church order, lively and consistent; not much to be done, the ground having been dug over the last year by Bro. Grant and nearly all the jewels dug up, but three requested prayers, and others manifested an interest they had not before, especially at Hydeville the last evening. Two or three meetings more would have done much good, but I had to leave this favored spot for Poultney. Found Bro. Howell very sick with the pleurisy. It did look too bad for such a disease to attack so small, feeble frame as that. It did look like the work of the devil to hinder the work of God. But prayer and the little pills, with the help of the battery, was blessed in giving him strength again to get out the third day. This place, like Castleton, has lately been dug over by Bro. Grant's long spade, and but little can be done only to encourage them to hold on where they are. We had interesting meetings. The members seemed to be strengthened and well united in Bro. Howell. I did enjoy my visit well, for the first time. I suppose Bro Grant prepared their minds somewhat before I got there. Thank you, Miles; I think your converts in that region enjoyed the meeting.

The first Monday in April I had two dispatches and one letter to go to Rutland again. Found Bro. Batchelor well and somewhat encouraged; the congregation had increased; a good interest manifested; there are signs of recovery from a partial paralytic shock which suddenly attacked them. This will open their eyes and learn them not to pick up every thing for gold that shines. Besides their other troubles, that miserable blot of an Adams floated in, claiming to be an Adventist, debating one evening against Spiritualism, and getting drunk. The next day he went from here to Springfield and duped them as you see by Bro. Ladd's exposure of him in the Crisis. I wish his photograph was in every paper, to guard the public against his impositions. But after all their pull backs, the congregation has increased lately. Bro. Batchelor is encouraged to still remain with them; they need just such a man, old in experience and sound in the faith. April 11, went to Proctorsville, by request of two lonely pilgrims. They are the butt of ridicule for a backslidden and suffering church, but they are firm, although they are young women and young converts. They hold their position, and are able to defend the truth, and had courage to write to me at Castleton to come there and preach one evening. They had been praying some time for the Lord to open the way; for some one to come and preach once to that people the faith of the Gospel, as they believed it, not having heard it but twice for two years, and then went many miles to hear it. This looked like steadfastness. I could not help going to that call. How could I? When I got there, I found they had got the notices up, schoolhouse engaged, opened, lit up, amid the jeers of church members, some saying, "if that man did come, he ought to be rode out of the place," etc. But that man did come to their help, and after he found out the facts, he stood up for the truth six feet high in a way the scoffers will not forget very soon here. I found Bro. Chedel had come six miles after me to go to Springfield. After meeting we started, and, riding through snow drifts and mud, we got to his good home, with his kind family, where we were more than welcome to all the house, barn and fields afforded, for it was sap time, and two cakes of sugar sister Chedel gave me to bring home proved this fact. The church here is rather low—forty per cent off from what it was two years ago when I was here. There has a "wolf in sheep's clothing" crept in and disaffected the flock. His power was mesmeric, with a design to seduce, which has come to light. How long must we endure this kind of deviltry? Is there no way to get rid of this devilish trash, floating around and tainting the morals of the innocent? Our people have opened their hearts a little too wide to those that profess our faith; it lays us liable to be imposed upon in these times. Bro. Cook has suffered much reproach for trying to detect this scamp. But facts have shown Bro. Cook's position right. He is about giving up business and going into the harvest field, and offers his place for thirteen hundred dollars;—twenty acres of good land, three of wood, a good new house and barn, and an excellent water privilege on it near the house; dam already built thirty feet; worth full double what he asks for it. Any one that wants to go into business, for further particulars address—Salmon Cook, North Springfield, Vt.

Next to Vernon, Vt.; found the brethren steadfast, rejoicing in the signs of the coming kingdom. There is a general inquiry here, as in other places, to know if these things are so. Now is the time to work, which God is helping us by signs, bringing anger on the nations.

Hiram Munger.

P. S.—While in Springfield, Vt., Bro. Cook and I got track of a swarm of bees, and I had to come away and left him to follow them. The following letter shows the result:—

North Springfield, April 15, '61.

Bro. Munger:—I have been hiving those be's we had a glimpse of when you were here. Have traced them to the hive; find at least seven varieties, living in the same hive, in harmony and order. The hive is more sacred than the one Solomon saw. They have many good things beside honey laid up in store. The varieties are as follows:—1st, will be, Matt. 6 : 10; 2d, can be, Rom. 8 : 7, 3d, shall be, 2 Thess. 1 : 7; 4th, not be, Jno. 19 : 36; 5th, cannot be, Jno. 10 : 35; 6th, must be, Jno. 3 : 7; 7th, may be, James 5 : 16. I will now notice some of their habits. All but the last one mentioned have so many similarities, that I will describe them together. Perhaps the most striking feature in their habit is, when they light, they never light on any thing movable or flexible, but it must be something solid, tangible, permanent, as the word of God. When lighted, they are both defensive and offensive; no enemy ever conquered them or even repelled them as yet. They are not very conservative in principle. Their sting or weapon is about equal to the wrath of God, and that will destroy all his enemies. But this may be is somewhat diverse; flies all times of the year, lights on many different objects, has no sting or weapon, always lights on condition; finally, he is some like the drones in a common hive, whose condition is work or die, and many have died. Theologians have got this may be into the bee box, carried it from the hive, and flew him through hades, purgatory and the spirit land. It may be they have heard him buzzing faintly the whole circuit. In doing this, many conditions have been made that the Bible does not make. The Scriptures do not say it may be the dead are conscious; it makes no such condition. "The dead know not any thing." Neither do they say it may be the wicked will roll in hell fire forever. The old shall be is still formidable; Ps. 37 : 38 says, transgressors shall be destroyed, etc.

You may do what you please with this bee story, i. e., finish it up, or burn it up.

For the Crisis.

Love your Wife.

A woman wants sympathy, love, affection. It is a need of her nature. Husband, you should love her. If so, she will return your love. If you do not love her, still her heart will yearn for sympathy, and it may be she will be led to love another more than you.—When you neglect your wife, you unlock her heart to other influences. Beware! You may plant thorns in your pathway and briers on your pillow. Many a grave has closed over some deluded, heart-broken, dishonored wife, whose steps first entered the way of death to seek at the hands of others that friendship, sympathy and love which an unsympathizing husband failed to bestow. Husband, love your wife, and woman, shun, as you would the gate to hell, the friendship of any man to whose society you are led as a substitute for a husband's sympathy and love. Better far it is to suffer on, to bear your present ills, to hide your sorrows, to let the canker eat your heart, and bidden sorrow sadden your your life; better to bear up with a brave spirit, and endure it all alone, than to seek forbidden consolation and bewail your folly when your repentance is too late. The bitterest sting of the soul is remorse—the vain regret for past transgressions and neglects. If you would spare yourselves and others this grief, then, husbands, love your wives, as your own bodies; and wives, love and obey your husbands in the Lord. Take the true affection between Christ and his church as your pattern, and follow him in all things. God bless you all, and make you to be happy in each other's love and in the love and grace of Christ our blessed Lord.

Your brother,

H. L. Hastings.

☞ "I shall go," cried a young man who was hastily deciding upon a course of life in opposition to his parents. "First consult the town clerk of Ephesus," said his aunt; "your grandfather would not act on an important proposition without first advising with the town clerk of Ephesus. His counsel you will find in the nineteenth chapter of Acts. It is to do nothing rashly."

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 15, 1861.

NEW ARRANGEMENT.

At the last meeting of the Board of Directors of the "Christian Publication Society," held in Boston on Monday, April 15th, 1861, Rufus Wendell was chosen Editor of the Crisis and Business Agent in all matters pertaining to the paper. Therefore, all letters relating to the Crisis, all remittances for it, all matter designed for publication, and all orders and remittances for any of the Publications on sale at this office, should be directed to "RUFUS WENDELL, Crisis Office, Boston, Mass."

"Eventful Times."

The N. Y. Independent of May 2d, in an editorial on "The Privilege of Living in Eventful Times," uses the following language:—"But now at last, all on a sudden, WE see and feel that WE of all who have lived thus far upon this continent are called to act in the most momentous and critical period of its history; that WE are at the point where prophecy converges most swiftly towards its accomplishment, and where all the trumpets foreshown in the Apocalypse seem to be sounding at once on the air, all vials to be poured out together on the lands; where too the future courses of this nation, so long and wondrously prospered and blessed, and now so suddenly and strangely aroused by unanticipated insult and peril, are to be marked out and decided! 'We are living, we are dwelling, in a grand and awful time.' No truer lines were ever penned or ever sung!"

These forcible utterances will suggest appropriate reflections in the minds of our readers, and we give them with the solemn admonition of our Savior—"What I say unto you, I say unto all, WATCH!"

Friendly Words.

Bro. C. F. Hudson, in a letter written from Syracuse, N. Y., on the 5th inst., says:—

"I see by last week's Crisis that you have become its editor. * * And without saying anything in disparagement of past editorship, I do cheerfully welcome you to the place. And I doubt not that the general confidence of the brethren in you will make the situation as comfortable as an editor's can well be. You will of course find varieties of opinion in various matters, the discussion of which you cannot adjust to the satisfaction of all; and there will be tastes which you cannot suit. But I know your hand will be as firm as your policy will be generous. And you know how to refuse one graciously. So I bid you God speed, and hope after a year or so to congratulate you in person on good success in your new field of labor."

Thank you, Professor, for these kind and hopeful words. You do not mistake our purpose in anticipating that our duties will be performed with a "firm hand" and a "generous policy." We shall not willingly give any one cause to complain, while we may often err in judgment. If you "have some things to say in the paper ere long," let us have them as soon as convenient, and thus afford us an opportunity to apply the "firm hand" or the "generous policy" to your own case!

It may be of interest to our readers to learn that Bro. Hudson is on a slow and somewhat zig zag tour to the "far west," selling his books as he goes. We are gratified to learn that, "notwithstanding the diversion of thought and money by the war," he has "done pretty well" since he left New York city some three weeks ago.

A prominent preaching brother, in a "private" letter received within a few days, says—"God bless you with wisdom and strength for the arduous and responsible work."

Bro. George Storrs, Editor of the "Bible Examiner," in a letter dated the 4th inst., writes us as follows:—

"I sincerely hope you will not countenance an undue excitement about the advent, growing out of the present state of our country. We want a calm and sober state of mind, rather than excitement, to fit us to meet our coming Lord. What will be the result of the conflict in which this nation is now plunged it is impossible to tell. Let us 'calmly wait the end.' The same devotion to Christ and his service, which it is our duty always to have, will be that which will fit us to meet him when he comes, and we need no extra excitements to fit us, and they will not do it, in my judgment. Death-bed repentances are always doubtful; so are preparations to meet the Lord under these extra movements."

This counsel is gratefully appreciated, and has our cordial approval. "A calm and sober state of mind" is not easily maintained in these days of "excitement," and in proof of this fact we see that it is proposed to dispense with the usual religious anniversaries this year, in this city, because every body's mind is so much absorbed with the political agitations of our country. Not easily maintained, we say; but it can be done, and Paul tells us how:—"Let us who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love; and for an helmet, the hope of salvation." With our dear Brother Storrs, our prayer shall be that "God our Redeemer may guide us all in the way of Life and peace."

"Thessalonica."

The following commendatory notice of the new work by Bro. Hastings, we find in the "American Presbyterian" of the 9th inst:—

Thessalonica; or, the Model Church, by H. L. Hastings, is a stirring little volume, in which the example of the Church of Thessalonica, as it appears in the Epistles bearing the name, is set forth and applied to the churches of our day, with no little forceful and healthy criticism. There is observable some disposition to use the cant phrases of those who set themselves against the church altogether; as on page 103: "One man, bringing Christianity in the shape of loaves of bread to hungry souls, would make more impression on the needy, than with a bushel of books, catechisms, and Bibles." This is, however, but a mere blemish in what is, as a whole, evangelical and scriptural in tone. The extract from the "Thessalonica Daily News," is a pungent and not unneeded sarcasm. Published by Rudd & Carlton, New York. For sale by S. Hazzard, Philadelphia.

The entire paragraph from which a single sentence is quoted for criticism in the foregoing, is as follows:—

"One man bringing Christianity in the shape of loaves of bread to hungry souls, would make more impression on the needy, for their good, than he could with a bushel of books, catechisms, and Bibles. Bread first, then prayers and preaching. One Dorcas, making coats and garments for the poor, would do more to commend Christianity to those who would stand weeping around her corpse, showing the work that she had done, than a dozen courtly ladies, with their rustling silks and glistening satins, with their laces and furs, their gold and jewels, who are too lofty to condescend to men of low estate, and who know not how to sympathize with the poor and the distressed. And I doubt not the Thessalonians had just this kind of commendation among the candid and honest people where they dwelt."

Concerning Dorcas, the author of "Thessalonica," in a foot-note on page 104, says:

"'This woman was full of good works and alms deeds which she did. And it came to pass that she was sick, and died . . . . and they laid her in an upper chamber. When Peter was come, they brought him into the upper chamber: and all the widows stood by him weeping, and showing the coats and garments which Dorcas made, while she was with them.' Acts 9 : 36–40. My fair reader, if you should lie in your coffin, and friends should gather around you, would widows and orphans show the coats and garments you had made for the poor? or would they show your jewels, your embroidery, your pictures, your worsted dogs and cats, your ornaments of fancy needlework, on which you have squandered your time and strength and money? Please think of this."

Reader, buy and peruse the book, if you have not already done so, and our word for it, the "blemishes" you will think most about when you are through, will be those which, in these days, so widely prevail among the professed followers of Christ. We were much interested in reading the "extract" which the "Presbyterian" pronounces "a pungent and not unneeded sarcasm." The work can be ordered from this office.

Wickliff's Disciples.

By request of a brother in Maine, we republish the following from the Crisis of April 29, 1857:—

Bro. Grant:—Here is the testimony of Reinher, a Roman Catholic writer of former times, concerning the people who were converted under the labors of Wickliff. Do they not seem like our brethren and sisters? Edwin Burnham.

"The disciples of Wickliff are men of a serious, modest deportment, avoiding all ostentation in dress, mixing little with the busy world, and complaining of the debauchery of mankind. They maintain themselves wholly by their own labor, and utterly despise wealth, being fully content with bare necessities. They follow no traffic, because it is attended with so much lying, swearing, and cheating. They are chaste and temperate; are never seen in taverns, or amused by the trifling gaieties of life. You find them always employed, either learning or teaching. They are concise and devout in their prayers, blaming an animated prolixity. They never swear, speak little, and in their public preaching lay their chief stress on charity (love.) They never mind canonical hours, because they say that a paternoster or two, repeated with devotion, is better than tedious hours spent without devotion. They explain the Scriptures in a different way from the holy doctors and church of Rome. They speak little, and humble, and are well behaved in appearance."

What Luther said.

Bro. L. Reimer, of Philadelphia, who is preparing the German tract, designed to show the Germans that they can have "Life only through Christ," sends the following extract from Luther's works.

When speaking on Eccl. 9 : 5, which reads as follows: "For the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward, for the memory of them is forgotten," Luther says:—"St. Hironomy has erroneously used this passage as alluding to the dead in purgatory, for Solomon says here distinctly, that the dead sleep; and I believe that this is one of the best passages in the Bible against those who talk a great deal about what the dead and deceased are doing, and teach much about calling upon saints and about purgatory; as God has not intended to reveal to us concerning the dead and deceased any more than is contained in these words of the scripture."

"Ver. 6. "Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in anything that is done under the sun."

"This passage, too, says something about the dead; and as Solomon here speaks of the dead, that they sleep, so the scripture says in another place the same thing. The Holy Spirit has not revealed in the scripture what the departed are doing now, but says plainly and distinctly, that they shall be raised from the dead. The dead count neither days nor years. Hell, the scripture calls the secret and hidden place, which is out of all temporal life, out of years, days, hours, time, and out of all temporal things. Whither the soul goes, we cannot comprehend with our reasons. Where and what that is, is hidden to us, and nobody knows it, for the scripture does not mention anything about it, until God shall raise the dead, and then all shall be revealed, as in Gen. 37 : 35 the patriarch Jacob says: I shall go down into the grave unto my son mourning; and 42 : 38 he says: then shall ye bring down my gray hairs to the grave, etc. Here he does not mean the place of the damned; the good patriarchs have not gone down to hell, to be tormented there. The dead are now out of all time, hour, year and place; for all, which is out of this temporal life, is out of all time and place, as we shall be after the resurrection in eternity, where there will be neither time nor any limited place."—M. Grant.

☞ Bro. L. Reimer acknowledges the following receipts for his German book, entitled, "Life only through Christ,' and returns his hearty thanks:

James Douglas, West Troy, - - - $1.00
D. E. Ford, Fairhaven, - - - - - $1.00

Bro. R. will need several dollars more before he can go on with the book. Who else will help in the good work? While the world and a backslidden church are giving millions for war, let the children of the Lord do what they can to arouse the people to prepare for the great day of the Lord, that is now emphatically at hand.

For the Crisis.

Evening Shadows.—No. 7.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is."

First. In the vision of Daniel he beholds a fourth beast, symbolizing the fourth universal monarchy. This doubtless presents the Roman power, both Pagan and Papal. John in vision sees Pagan Rome in the symbol of a great red dragon, and Papal Rome under the symbol of a two-horned beast coming up, and when fully up an established dynastic power, a scarlet-colored beast* carrying a woman—the so-called holy mother. The Pope occupying the same seat that the dragon did, namely, the so called "Eternal City,"—Rome, looked upon by the Romanist with the same reverential awe that the Hebrew does upon their mount Zion, their Jerusalem.

Second. Rome Pagan was the ruling power in the days of the Savior, when Caesar Augustus taxed the whole world. It was dismembered into ten petty kingdoms. Three of the ten were plucked up; it then became Papal Rome. The "mystery of iniquity" that "already worked" in Paul's day, in Pagan Rome, was taken away, and the Wicked One, the Roman Pontiffs, took their seat in the temple of God—so called by the Apostle and considered as such by the Romanist. Thus Rome Pagan became Rome Papal, and claiming to be Christ's vicegerent on earth, sending his swarms of missionaries into all parts of the world, erecting his mass houses, she sat on the many waters, namely, peoples, and multitude, and nations, and tongues, and the saints were given into his hand until a time, and times and the dividing of times. The same period is named in Rev. 11 : 3, that the witnesses should prophesy in sackcloth. And when they shall have finished their testimony, the Beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war on them.

Third. The prominent object that claims our attention in the next place is the one that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit. And in order to arrive at some consistent conclusion, let me be permitted to suggest an opinion concerning the bottomless pit, from whence he ascendeth.

In the Apocalypse various symbols are used; for instance, stars, sun, moon, heaven, sea, fountains, rivers, and the earth; and, doubtless, the bottomless pit is designed as a symbol. The Apostle declares the true church to be built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid. The Pope and the councils rejected this foundation and built the church of Rome upon tradition, decretals, the fathers, and the Pope himself their chief corner stone. Hence it was an abyss of error, without foundation,—virtually, a bottomless pit.

Fourth. Pagan Rome was a changeable, Republican, infidel government; detested Christ, his word, and his disciples. Those principles were professedly opposed by the Papacy, and held in restraint during the twelve hundred and sixty years of Papal rule, and, at the end of the twelve hundred and sixty days (years) of the sackcloth state, the Beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war on the witnesses. Accordingly, we find such a power arising in France,—rejecting God, Christ, his word; abolishing the Sabbath; shutting up the churches; burning the Bible; declaring Christ an imposter, and the gospel a forgery; posting on the places of burial, "Death is an eternal sleep;" swearing to extirpate christianity from the world; assuring the public as follows:—"Man when free wants no other divinity than himself. Reason dethrones both the kings of earth and of heaven. No monarch above, if we wish to preserve our Republic below. Every other than a republic of atheism is a chimera." For brevity's sake I leave this point.

Fifth. The reign of terror commenced in France at the destruction of the Bastile, A. D. 1789; an open profession of atheism was made on the 26th of August, 1792; on the 21st of Jan., 1793, the King was beheaded, and the queen shared the same fate on the 1st of Oct., 1793. Thus we see just such a power ascend out of that abyss of darkness, the bottomless abyss of Papacy, and forming a changeable, republican, infidel government, detesting God, Christ and his sacred word.

Sixth. Thus the Pagan Roman Beast that was before the Papal Roman Beast took his seat, power and authority, now comes on the stage of action to inflict judgment on the Harlot of Rome, of which we shall speak in our next number.

Thus we see, dear reader, the last jots and tittles of prophecy fulfilling before us. Truly, we are favored to be permitted to behold them; the prophetic page almost exhausted; the brow of heaven gathering darkness; the shadows of evening settling down. Keep thine eye single, and thy body full of light.

Erratum.—In article No. 6 of Evening Shadows, under the Fourth head, please read—"There does appear to me an identity concerning this scarlet-colored beast and the horn of Daniel 7 : 25," instead of "does not appear." S. S. B.

* The following oath of Gen. Lamoricier, a few years since, in assuming the command of the Papal troops, shows most clearly, to my humble opinion, the fact that the succession of Popes considered themselves temporal rulers; consequently, they filled the prophetic page. And all know full well the reluctance of the present Pope to yield his temporal power.

"I, Leon de Lamoriciere, commanding general in chief of the Pontifical troops, promise and swear to be faithful to St. Peter the Apostle, to the sacred college of the most eminent and reverend Lord Cardinals of the most holy Roman church, to the supreme Pontiff now reigning, and to his successors, elected according to canon; and I will exercise faithfully the office of commander-in-chief of the Pontifical troops confided to me. So help me God, and the holy Evangelists."

Weapons of Warfare.

Bro. Wendell:—I listened to a sermon by Bro. Morgan on Sabbath morning, at Chapman Hall, on christians bearing arms, which I think every follower of Christ should have an opportunity to read; and would suggest that he be requested to publish it in tract form. It may be the means of confirming many who are now halting, whether to use carnal weapons or spiritual.

Boston, Mass. D. N. Smith.

Correspondence.

From Eld. J. V. Himes.

"Our Home," Apr. 16, '61.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I have been here under special treatment near two months. It has taken a powerful hold of my system, and has developed the diseases with which I have been afflicted. My case is rather hopeful, and I hope to see days of health, in which I shall again put forth my energies in the best of causes,—I mean the Advent cause.

These times stir up the inmost soul, and call for the action of all who have faith in prophecy, and signs, relating to the near approach of the Son of man, to "make all things new." But I must suppress the rising tide, and be quiet for the present. I am contented, and cheerful, and hopeful. O, the "blessed hope!" It never looked so good and precious as now. Ah! the prospective of the child of God! unlimited and eternal glory, in the blessedness of eternal life. Hallelujah!

From Eld. L. Boutell.

My Dear Brethren:—It seems to me these are the most perilous times we have ever seen. The all-absorbing theme from morning till evening is, "to arms! to arms!" The near cry is heard, and it comes close to us; our neighbors and children are aroused by the country's call, and are moving on to the battle-field, and all think, talk, and act; and the danger is, the christian even, in the excitement, will imbibe the spirit of retaliation, revenge, and war. The instruction of inspiration is, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord." "My Kingdom is not of this world; if it were my servants would fight." Again—"they that take the sword, will perish with the sword." All these and various other facts show conclusively that the saints must not take carnal weapons. The weapons of our warfare are not carnal but spiritual, and mighty through God to the pulling down of the strong holds of sin and Satan. Our feet must be shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. "Blessed are the peacemakers, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

I would say to the saints looking for their coming Lord, strive to keep yourselves in the love of God and patient waiting for his Son from heaven. To me it looks sad to see the young men of the land preparing to take the life of their fellow man. They cannot be actuated by the spirit of Christ, who said, "love your enemies," and, if smitten on the one cheek, turn the other also. These are critical times; we are proximating the Great Battle, and if we are meek we shall be hid in the day of His indignation. O for clean hands and a pure heart! We must not have the spirit of war. God bless and save us in this hour of peril and in the Kingdom of God. Amen.

From Eld. T. M. Preble.

Bro. Grant:—The Lord is still with us in Concord, and that to bless. Yesterday, (Sabbath,) was a day of much interest to us; baptized eight happy souls; day delightful, and I think I never saw a larger and more solemn assembly at the water on such an occasion. I am sure I never enjoyed a baptizing season better. We also enjoyed a happy and encouraging season as we came round the table of the Lord at the close of the afternoon service.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

We are having an interesting Sabbath School and Bible class, as will appear by the extracts from the quarterly report of our excellent Superintendent, Bro. C. W. Sargent:

"It gives us pleasure to announce that increasing prosperity has attended the school for the past three months. . . . Three months ago, when I took charge of the school, it numbered thirty-five scholars, and a Bible class for adult persons. The first month the average number of children was twenty. Now the whole number of children is fifty-two, and the average attendance for the past month is about thirty-three; showing an increase of seventeen to the school in three months, without any systematic effort. . . . The Bible class is quite interesting and profitable. It varies in numbers, sometimes about forty in attendance."

So much for our Sabbath School.

My prayer is that the saints may arise, and "put on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." "The end of all things is at hand: be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer." Amen.

Concord, N. H., May 13, 1861.

From Bro. R. V. Lyon.

Bro. Grant:—Thinking that some of the loved ones of earth, with whom I am acquainted, would like to know how their pilgrim brother is getting along in the good old way that leads to Mount Zion, the city of the living God, and what he is doing to induce others to start, and comfort those who are on the way,—I write. As to myself, I am much in love with Jesus and his Father. To me the latter is the fountain of all that is good, lovely and glorious; and the former the medium through which pardon, resurrection, eternal life and a future world comes to the children of men. Out of Christ I can see no pardon, no resurrection, no future life or world to come for man! My prospect for the kingdom never was better. The testimony is increasing, which bespeaks in tones of thunder that Gentile rule will soon close! Amen.

I am trying, in my feeble way, to do what appears to be duty in giving my fellow men a whole gospel. The result has been good, I think, because Zion's pilgrims have been comforted and stirred up to duty, the enemy routed, and some of his valiant ones have turned their backs upon him as their leader. I left Canada on the 12th of this month for North Burk, N. Y., where I have spent some ten days in preaching and talking what I was able. Glory be to God for what his truth has done! Last Thursday, after preaching a discourse on the mission of Christ, which was followed by a number of warm exhortations, we repaired to the water; and, after prayer, amid shouts and songs of praises, I had the honor of baptizing eight mortal souls "into the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins:" and, on their way rejoicing, they are journeying for the high lands of glory.

Chateaugay, N. Y., April 24, 1861.

R. V. Lyon, Evangelist.

From Bro. Geo. A. Streeter.

Bro. Grant:—Permit me to say to the dear children of God that I am still striving to walk in the narrow way that has been cast up for the redeemed of the Lord to walk in. O, I feel to praise his glorious name that I was ever led to see his goodness and mercy. Thank God, I can say that whereas I was once blind, now I see. Glory to God! I see that the christian's hope is almost consummated; faith will soon be lost in sight; prayer in praise; the kingdom will soon be ours. Christian, gird on thy armor; cling to the word of God, for that is the only sure guide to go by in these days of perils. Thank God for the light that is now shining on the world. We soon shall be at home; let us have patience, that after we have done the will of the Lord, we may receive the promise. Pray for me. Amen.

Obituary Notices.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at Erie, Pa., on the 1th of March, 1861, of consumption, Sister [illegible] Roberts, in the fifty-ninth year of her age.

Sr. Roberts has long been expecting the return of Jesus to change this mortal body, but has had to succomb to the grim monster, Death. Yet she was satisfied, from the word of God and the signs of the times, that she would sleep but a little while. Having suffered a long while, she was anxious for the hour to come when she might rest a little while, till the last trump should sound to awake the sleeper. Her faith was strong in God. But still she expressed a desire for some of her Advent brethren to be present and administer consolation to her in her last hours, and to officiate at her funeral, and spoke of Brs. Cook, Low, and the writer; and in the language of the poet, we can say,

> "God moves in a mysterious way,
> His wonders to perform."

We gave up one of our appointments on Ripley Hill, N. Y., so as to give us time to go home by the way of Erie, for the purpose of inquiring after her health. We arrived there at a quarter past twelve, and the funeral was appointed at one o'clock.

A Baptist minister was engaged to come to the house and make a prayer, etc., according to city custom; but an unseen hand directed otherwise; we were permitted to speak words of comfort to the bereaved ones, and we trust the word spoken on the occasion may be for the glory of God, and to the good of the large number of friends and neighbors present.

Bro. Roberts and myself were talking together of the wonderful works of God, the manner of his and his wife's conversion to the faith of the second advent, sleep of the dead, resurrection, etc. etc., and also of my coming at the time, etc., which he says was in answer to prayer. He went and produced the paper that first opened their eyes. What was most remarkable in it, the paper was dry, notwithstanding it had been raining hard for an hour, when Sr. Roberts picked it up in their door-yard. The paper was the "Voice of Truth," Vol. X., No. 12, June 17, '46. It had in it an address to advent believers, etc. It seemed to touch the whole being. How often I have thought a word dropped, or a tract, or a paper containing the evidence of our blessed hope, how much good it may do. But the work of our sister is done. She will no more warn her fellows to the judgment to be prepared for that time, nor encourage the wayward pilgrim to be faithful, and administer to their necessities. In her last moments she felt that all was peace, and sweetly fell asleep.

JOHN T. ONGLEY.

On Wednesday, April 24th, 1861, Sister SALLY BURLEIGH, wife of Bro. Jeremiah Burleigh, fell asleep in Christ, in Holderness, N. H., aged fifty-nine years.

Sister Burleigh embraced Christ about thirty years ago, and united with the Freewill Baptist church, where she continued her relation until she heard the glorious news of the Savior's return, which she heartily embraced, and as she was one of those that wanted her influence on the side of what she believed to be the truth, she left the F. W. Baptist, and remained a firm believer until the last in the doctrine of the Lord's soon coming and kindred truths, expressing to her husband a little before she died, "I shall sleep but a little while." Sister Burleigh by faith and prayer entered the storehouse of God, and thus became familiar with the Scriptures, so that she was prepared to give a reason for her hope, which she was not ashamed to do. She was of a turn of mind that she must understand for herself, thus she did not become firmly established in the doctrine of the sleep of the dead and the destruction of the wicked until about a year ago. When our sister embraced the doctrine of the Lord's coming, and the promise made to Abraham, it was apparent that by her faithfulness in meeting, and godly conversation in the family, and among friends, her modest apparel and not wearing of gold, that she wished to declare plainly that she desired a better country, that is an heavenly. So faithful was our sister in life, that when her last sickness came she had no work to do, no warning to give, but calmly to fall asleep in Christ. How blessed can the righteous die! She leaves a husband and two sons with their companions, to mourn her loss. May her many prayers be answered, and they all meet in the kingdom of God. Subject on the occasion by the writer, founded on Job 14: 14.

J. G. SMITH.

DIED, in Sidney, March 18th, 1861, at his residence, Elder THOMAS JEFFERSON DUDLEY, aged sixty years and ten days.

The subject of this notice embraced religion at the age of nineteen. In the year 1843 he commenced preaching in the Freewill Baptist Connection and continued with them until 1853 when the cry was made, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh." Bro. Dudley was ready to go forth to meet his Lord, and with many others was disappointed, yet he continued to sound the gospel of the kingdom at hand, and became identified with the Adventists, and would say with Paul, "but this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets, and have hope toward God which they themselves also allow, there shall be a resurrection of the dead both of the just and unjust." For a few years past he has suffered much from tumors, having two cut out of his face. Often we have heard him say that he loved life, or he never should have suffered the operation to prolong life, in hope of living until Jesus should come. But disease had fastened itself so strong that skill and nature could not throw it off. Another tumor began to grow in his throat, and it was with much effort that he ate or talked; but continued about the house until Monday, when a severe pain began in his side, and at eleven in the evening he ceased to live until Jesus the Life-Giver comes. So closed the labors of a faithful minister and a kind husband and father. He leaves a wife, seven children and many relatives to mourn his loss, but some of them have the consolation that they shall meet again when Jesus comes to part no more. May the others seek the Lord and be prepared to meet their God, is our prayer.

The funeral services were held at the meeting house in Augusta, where a large assembly listened to a discourse by the writer from Ps. 16: 9, "My flesh shall rest in hope." Elder Ward, Baptist; Elders Turner and Robinson, Free Baptist; Elder Whittier, Methodist, were present and assisted in the service.

H. B. SEVEY.

Calmly fell asleep in Jesus, at Warwick, R. I., March 28th, 1861, Bro. PETER ROSSO, aged eighty six years.

He has been a great sufferer fourteen weeks. His disease was of the heart and dropsy, and he suffered so much that he was often heard to say, "alas! it is no easy thing to die;" but he bore it all with true christian patience, and his faith and confidence in God were unshaken. He had no choice about getting well, but his earnest prayer was, "the will of the Lord be done." He had no fears of death, although he felt that it was an enemy, and that it would rob him of the society of those that were made nigh to him by the blood of Christ; that he could no longer sing praises to him who had redeemed him by his precious blood, and no more have the privilege of meeting for the worship of God —but must be carried away to the cold and silent tomb, where the dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence. But he so confidently trusted in Him who is "Lord both of the dead and living," that he without a murmur or fear calmly and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, believing that he would soon come again from the land of the enemy. He believed that Jesus died and rose again, and that all of them that sleep in Jesus would God bring with him; and he felt assured, by God's Spirit bearing witness with his spirit, that he was a child of God, and that when the great Life-Giver should come, he would have life again and have it more abundantly. During our beloved Rosso's long and painful illness he was never heard to murmur or complain, but patiently endured all he had to pass through, and maintained his christian integrity to the last. As we called on him, and saw how much he suffered, we would ask if it was not hard to bear, and his ready answer would always be, "true, it is hard to be sick, and trying to be denied the privileges I once enjoyed,—but—O! glory to God!—Jesus, the lamb of God, in whom I have trusted 'mid sunshine and storm, has proved in this my great affliction to be a present help in every time of need. All in all in him I find. He is my heavenly Father, and no good thing will he withhold from me, and if I have to suffer here and die, it will not be too much for me to bear, for I have the blessed promise that if I suffer with him, I shall also be glorified with him, and that if I die, I shall live again, and it be but a little while that I shall have to 'sleep,' for our blessed hope is soon to be consummated, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ to take place. In that morning I shall live again—live to die no more, for there will be no more death there, and I feel with Paul that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate me from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Thus another has been cut down by that cruel enemy, death, and laid away in the dust of the earth to await until the trump of God shall sound and the resurrection dawn. We deeply feel the loss of our dear Bro. Rosso, yet we sorrow not as those that have no hope. A large concourse of people listened with deep attention to an interesting and instructive discourse by Bro. Champlin from Job. 14: 10.

A. M. HOLLIS.

Fell asleep in Jesus in Newark, N. J., April 23d, GRACE SYLVIA, aged nineteen years, six months and sixteen days, after a long and painful illness of five months of lung and throat consumption, which she bore with christian fortitude. Her faith was strong in God. She would often repeat the 23d Psalm, which she learned while sick. She longed to be at rest, and would often repeat—

> "Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
> From which none ever wakes to weep."

She bade her sister farewell, and said, "I'm going home." Her sister said, "you are going to see mother." She replied, "in the morning of the resurrection I shall see mother." For the last week of her life she was very happy. Although her sufferings were great, her last breath was praising God. She was taken to Bordentown, to her father's, for interment. She has left a husband and many relatives and friends to mourn her loss, but we mourn not without hope. Her funeral sermon was preached by Bro. Hickman of the Methodist Church.

STEPHEN LUM.

Newark, N. J.

Died, in Troy, N. Y., Feb. 13th, of diphtheria, JOHN BUNYAN, son of Solomon Hale, aged five years, six months and seven days.

We buried him in Springfield, Mass., by the side of his mother, two brothers and one sister, in "Pine Grove." We hope to have the grace of God to sustain us, so that the remaining one and myself may meet them in the morning of the resurrection unto immortality and eternal life.

Also, in Troy, N. Y., April 8th, of diphtheria, MATHEW HENRY, son of Solomon and Clarissa Hale, aged two years and seven months. We buried him by the side of his little brother in Hartford, Ct.

In this hour of severe trial, of sorrow and affliction, we mourn not as those who have no hope. In Jesus we hope and trust. He said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," and inasmuch as we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. These indeed are precious promises, and they are heart cheering, when we realize that the promise is sure, that death shall be destroyed and him that hath the power over death, which is the devil.

The English papers continue to discuss American affairs. The entire London press, excepting the Times, sympathizing warmly with the loyal States, and anticipating an easy triumph for the Government. The Times fears a serious conflict if the North is determined to force obedience.

The state of affairs at Warsaw remained unchanged.

DOMESTIC.

WAR IN MISSOURI.

Our dispatches indicate the opening of important events in Missouri. The Governor of that State, an avowed secessionist, has been doing all in his power to precipitate the community into the hands of the rebel leaders. One of his ingenious schemes has been the formation of a State militia, which was simply a rebel force under another name. Capt Lyon, the commander of the United States troops, could not suffer this defiant treasonable movement to organize and gain strength close under his eye, and so he captured the whole gang, consisting of eight hundred men, in a very prompt and quiet manner, took their arms, and offered to release them on parole after taking the constitutional oath, which they declined to do, as traitors naturally would.

Just before the troops left for the city, and while the State forces were drawn up between the lines of the volunteers, several rocks were thrown at the volunteers, and a few pistol shots were fired by excited parties in the surrounding crowd, which was composed of a large number of citizens including many women. One shot took effect in the leg of Capt Blantowski, and as he fell he gave the order to fire, which was obeyed by some two or three companies, resulting in the death of upwards of twenty persons, including two women, several children, and badly wounding several others.

Among the killed are Walter M Dowell, Thomas A. Haven, and Emily Dummers. Intense excitement exists in the city, and large bodies of men throng the streets.

St Louis, May 11th. Many conflicting rumors prevail relative to the cause of firing on the crowd of spectators. Some say rocks, brickbats and other missiles were hurled at the volunteers, smashing their muskets, breaking their limbs, and otherwise wounding them, while others assert the contrary.

A respectable citizen who stood a few feet behind the troops when they fired, states positively, that no stones were thrown and no pistols fired by the crowd, and that the only provocation given was abusive threats launched at the Germans.

It is known, however, that after shots were fired by the troops and returned by parties in the crowd, and several citizens wounded. It is understood that a thorough investigation has been ordered by Capt. Lyon, when the truth will be learned.

Several of the troops are already under arrest.

It is difficult to learn the names of the killed, in consequence of the speedy removal of the bodies by friends, but a full list will be ascertained to-day.

Captain Lyon was very seriously but not dangerously kicked by a horse on the camp ground.

United States troops are now in possession of Camp Jackson, with all their equipage, tents, provisions, etc.

The Pacific and North Missouri railroads are occupied by the volunteers.

Much excitement exists in the city, but owing to the efficiency of the military and police corps order prevails.

Gen. Frost and his staff and all the State troops are in the arsenal.

SECOND DISPATCH.

St. Louis, May 11th.—Hon John How, Mayor of St. Louis, and Col. Robert Campbell received a note from Gen. Frost, which has been distributed over the city in extras, earnestly requesting his and the friends of the State militia, now held prisoners of war in the arsenal, to abstain from any demonstrations, stating that their safety depends upon the quietness of the city, and that any riotous proceedings would arouse the populace in the lower wards and result disastrously to the city and them.

Reports of insubordination in the arsenal are credited, and fears entertained for the lives of the State troops should disturbances occur in the city.

Gen Harney has arrived and taken command of the U. S. forces.

Captain Lyon will start for Washington to-morrow.

THIRD DISPATCH.

St. Louis, May 11th. General Frost's brigade was released from the Arsenal this evening. The officers were liberated on their parole of honor, and the men took an oath not to bear arms against the United States during the war.

A report having gained credence that the Federal troops had gone to Jefferson City to arrest the Governor and disperse the Legislature, B. Taylor, President of the Pacific Railroad, authoritatively contradicted it. He says that some troops at the Pacific Railroad depot are simply stationed there to see that no munitions of war are transferred to or from our city. Also that the officers disclaim any interference with the management of the road, and that trains run regularly. The Governor, however, has caused one span of the Osage bridge to be destroyed, which will necessitate a change of cars.

Two regiments of the Home Guard are patroling the streets to preserve order, and about 100 men are stationed around the Democrat office. Several shooting affairs occured during the day, but the city is quiet to-night. A heavy rain is now falling.

A large body of troops came down on the Alton and Chicago Railroad this afternoon and passed on to Belville, Illinois, about 12 miles from here.

The Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Times furnishes the following with regard to the passage of troops through Baltimore:—

"Upward of ten thousand people assembled and followed the troops through the streets. Not a hiss nor a sound of disapprobation was heard during the whole march. The stars and stripes were thrown to the breeze along the route, while the soldiers responded with hearty cheers to the demonstrations. Bonfires were built along the entire route from Baltimore to Washington. They reached Washington at 2 o'clock, and marched immediately to quarters. They were seven hours on the road—most of the men in freight cars, with the doors closed and locked, to prevent accident. Some of them had nothing to eat for thirty-four hours. All were in good spirits, and most of them are ready to serve during the war."

SOUTH AMERICAN TOWN DESTROYED BY AN EARTHQUAKE.—Intelligence has been received of the total destruction of the town of Mendoza, in the Argentine Republic (La Plata,) by an earthquake, on the evening of the 20th of March.

The town, which contained a population of from 12,000 to 15,000 inhabitants, was situated on a level plain on the east declivity of the Paramillo range of the Andes, at an elevation of 2,891 feet above the sea, and distant from the Aconcagua volcano about fifty-five miles. It was compactly built of sun-burnt bricks; contained a large parish church, convents, and other public buildings, and was a place of considerable importance as an entrepot for trade between Chili and Buenos Ayres.

On the evening of the earthquake two successive shocks were felt between eight and nine o'clock, which lasted but a few seconds, but were of such severity as to destroy every dwelling and public building in the place, while the loss of life was at least 8,000 or 10,000 persons. Whole families were instantly destroyed, and the few that escaped were left homeless and starving. In addition to the horrors of the earthquake, a fire broke out in the ruins, which destroyed the lives of many who had escaped destruction from the earthquake.

A more terrible calamity has not occurred for many years. It was reported that one or two smaller villages had been destroyed, but the report lacked confirmation. The catastophe has thrown a gloom over the whole of Chili, as many of the leading families of Santiago, who had gone to reside at Mendoza on account of their politics, had perished. The commercial community of Valparaiso also are likely to suffer heavy losses, as a large trade was carried on between the two places.

For the Crisis.

He'll Come Again.

He'll come again, the angel said,
Why stand ye gazing here?
Like manner as he went away,
He'll soon again appear.
The basis of the christian's hope,
These cheering words we love:
Proclaimed to us by messengers
Sent from the courts above.

He'll come again—He'll be our King!
Praise God forevermore!
He'll give each saint eternal life
On Canaan's happy shore.
Then, clad in robes of purest white,
Bright crowns upon our heads,
We'll wave our palms of victory,
The streets of gold we'll tread.

We'll sweep our harp-strings o'er and o'er,
Sing praises to his name,
We'll shout, O glory be to God!
And to the Lamb once slain!
We'll roam o'er fields of living green,
Bedecked with fadeless flowers,
We'll taste the fruit of life's fair tree,
Rest in ambrosial bowers.

He'll come again! We bless the Lord
The sound has reached our ears,
'Tis comfort to our fainting souls—
It lightens all our cares.
And when our hearts are bowed with grief,
Our bodies racked with pain,
We cling to this our only hope—
He'll come—He'll come again!

THE COMING STRUGGLE Between the Church and the Powers of Darkness:

SHOWING THE MISSION AND DESTINY OF SPIRITUALISM.

No. 14.

(Concluded.)

Thus the trial brought about by the beast and his image, or, in other words, through the development of Spiritualism, will be "the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world to try them." Rev. 3: 10. It will be also the "perilous times" of "the last days," when men shall be unholy, blasphemers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith, who creep into houses and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, and who resist the truth as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses. 2 Tim. 3: 1-8. The time when those "who receive not the love of the truth, that they might be saved," shall accept of the "strong delusion" and "believe a lie" through the false Christ's deceivableness of unrighteousness and miracles which prove a lie. 2 Thes. chap. 2. The time when they shall say, "Lo, here is Christ, or there," when "false Christs, and false prophets shall arise, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." Matt. 24: 23, 24.

Then the days will have come when the church will "desire to see one of the days of the Son of man and shall not see it" (immediately), and they shall say, "see here," or, "see there," when, according to Christ's admonition, we must "go not after them nor follow them;" when men ought especially "to pray and not to faint." Then we can understand the meaning of the passage—"And shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them? I tell you that he will avenge them speedily. Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Luke 17th and 18th.

We can then understand the need of Christ's admonition—"Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." Luke 21: 36. We can then realize the force of the language, "Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried;" and "shall understand, but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand." Dan. 12: 10. We can then see the need of Christ's laying so much stress upon our watching in the times immediately preceding his coming; what Paul also meant in promising the "crown" to them only who "love his appearing," and "salvation" to them only "that look for him;" what all meant in assuring us that the day of the Lord would come as a snare or thief upon the world, but otherwise upon the church.

Hence, let us heed the admonition to have our "loins girt about and our lamps burning, and we ourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord when he shall return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh we may open unto him immediately." Let us have "no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Let us be holy and keep our garments pure, and "hope to the end for the grace that shall be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ." Let us rejoice in view of the prospect that we shall soon arise and trim our lamps, and so be ready when the bridegroom comes to meet him with joy and not with grief.

The hour's approaching, and 'tis near,
When saints will hold Christ's coming dear;
While Satan's "hounds" from earth and hell
Will press us sore, our hope to sell.

But by God's grace we'll never quail,
[illegible] demons rage and foes assail;
We'll welcome you temptation's hour,
Since with it came God's grace and power.

Though to the dens and caves of earth
We have to flee when "hounds" are forth,
Yet, Father's smiles will meet us there,
While persecutors find his snare.

Why should we seek some pleasant [illegible]
Since Christ such sufferings did endure?
We'll bear the [illegible] our "spots" to clear,
And fit us for Christ's day so near.

CONCLUSION.

I have now noticed the several portions of scripture in the New Testament prophecies where there is an allusion to working miracles, and I think I have shown what I proposed to at the first, namely:—1, That in each case these miracles are wrought by a power opposed to God, supporting a false religion, and especially opposing the truth. 2, That in each case we find the world generally are deceived by these miracles, and through them are persuaded to accept of this false religion. 3, That in several instances we find this power spoken of as a persecuting power. 4, That this miracle-working power is to do its work during a short period ending with the coming of Christ. And 5, that having these several coincidences in character, design, policy, success and time of fulfillment, they must severally refer to the same power.

And I think I may add now, that this miracle-working power here alluded to, as opposed to God and his truth, and destined to allure the world generally into a recognition of its doctrines and pretensions, and which is to persecute the children of God, and to accomplish its work during a short period preceding the coming of Christ, is Spiritualism, or, as some choose to call it, Modern Spiritualism.

It is a strong delusion through which God separates the tares from the wheat, leaving to Satan to lead those who will be led by him, till their own course justly seals their condemnation and deserves the wrath of God. Nor "is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance" in this case; for before he suffers this strong delusion to commence its work, he provides us all with the Bible, which will teach us a way of escape if we desire it; and while the delusion is in progress he is continually warning those who are going into it, as well as those who are in, what they are doing, through his church and his word. It is truly a strong delusion, and we shall find no way of escape from the snare but by clinging closely to the Word of God, which has long since foretold us of this Spiritual movement—its rise, character, miracles, mission, and destiny.

It has told us of its rise, as the appearance of seducing spirits and doctrines of devils;—we have them in Spiritualism. We are told that some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to them and their doctrines of devils;—such is the case. That they shall speak lies in hypocrisy, having their consciences seared;—they can scarcely allude to the merits of the Bible without proving themselves guilty here. That they shall forbid to marry;—they do it everywhere.

It assures us that these last day miracle-workers shall be men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith; that they shall be lovers of their own selves, boasters, proud, heady, high-minded, unholy, blasphemers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, etc.; that they shall creep into houses and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts; that they shall resist the truth as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, etc. A clearer description of Spiritualism, in its present phases, could not be given, and yet this was given eighteen hundred years ago, by the God of the Bible, as having its fulfillment at this time. It assures that the adherents of this miracle-working religion, shall, through their miracles, obtain a union with the Catholics, as well as those who depart from the faith, and that they shall co-operate together in bringing about a Union of Church and State, introducing a system of persecution against all who will not worship as they direct. Rev. 13th. This is plainly declared by the Spiritualists as a part of their arrangements for the future.

It assures us that there will false Christs arise, showing great signs and wonders, the same probably as the Man of Sin and dragon in other places, who also are spoken of as associated with a miracle-working power at the same period. The Spiritualists look for a personage whom they call "The Coming Man," of whom they say:—"the wonders wrought by Jesus shall be thrown into the shade by the more wonderful which shall be witnessed from this person and his twelve principal mediums." A false Christ would probably have twelve false Apostles. The quotation above, as well as other testimony in this article, shows that this is a feature in their future arrangement. A false Christ, to be successful insomuch as to deceive, if it were possible, even the elect, must appear according to some arrangement for the appearance of the true Christ on earth; and, therefore, as answering to Christ's second coming, this "Coming Man" is looked for by the Spiritualists as the accomplishment of the predictions of Christ's second coming. When the true Christ comes the second time he will set up his kingdom of glory: hence, we should expect the false Christ to have his kingdom with pretensions that it is the Kingdom of Christ which he was to set up at his coming. The Spiritualists call their coming Union of Church and State, with their "Coming Man" at its head, a New Dispensation," answering to the scripture predictions of the "Millennium," "The New Jerusalem" or the Kingdom of heaven on earth. The false Christ would be likely to take possession of the earth, as by right, and, giving it to his friends for their inheritance, would attempt to subdue his enemies, as this would answer to the work of the true Christ. This answers to the Spiritualists' account of the work of their "Coming Man."

This is as far as I am familiar with their plans, as from them, but the Bible carries us on to their punishment, in the pouring out out of the "seven last plagues;" their madness and rage toward God because of these plagues; their preparation for the battle of the great day by sending out three unclean spirits to gather the kings of the earth and the whole world to the battle; their assembling to the battle to make war against Christ, and their final overthrow and everlasting destruction, in that battle, at the hand of Christ.

Does not Spiritualism, then, establish the Bible in fulfilling these prophecies? Does not the Bible point out the mission of Spiritualism, instead of Spiritualism pointing out the mission of the Bible, as they affirm? Is it not clear that the God of Spiritualism is the Devil of the Bible? Does not its coming up at this time with pretensions to overthrow the Bible and its religion, prove that the wisdom of the Bible is more reliable in that it has been warning us for the past eighteen hundred years that it would arise at this time, and with these pretensions, describing minutely its character and policy?

If the Bible had not spoken of this great miracle-working power as coming up here, and described its character, mission and destiny, the church would be in a perilous place, indeed! But with the light of the Bible we may behold at a glance the rise, character, policy, progress, great miracles, mission, plagues, and final destiny, while the Evil One is leading them, as it were, off the plank and they know it not. Has not the Bible clearly foretold the developments of Spiritualism thus far? And do not the Bible predictions of this same miracle-working power for the future strikingly agree with the plans and purposes of the Spiritualists for the future? Can we ask for anything clearer? Does not Spiritualism prove that we have the sure word of prophecy in the Bible? Does it not prove its teachings light and a sure guide for us? Then let us cling to the Bible as our "Detecter" in these days of counterfeits, our Chart in these days of "perils," our Light in these days of darkness, and our Compass that shall point us to the "bright and morning star," Jesus, though false prophets may present themselves and deceive, if it were possible, even the elect.

"The great Prince of darkness is mustering his forces
To make you his prisoners again;
By slander, reproaches, and vile persecution,
That you in his cause may remain.
Then shun his temptation's wherever they lie,
And fear not his servants, whatever they say,
The pure testimony will give you the day.

A battle is coming between the two kingdoms,
The armies are gathering around,
The kings of the earth and the Lamb that was slain
Will come to close contest ere long.
Then gird on your armor, ye saints of the Lord,
And he will direct you by His living word;
The pure testimony will cut like a sword."

For the Crisis

What do the Catacombs teach?

BY JUDSON AUSTIN.

This to the christian is an important question, and a correct answer to it is both interesting and instructive. As there may be some readers of the Crisis who do not understand what is meant by the Catacombs, let me explain. The word Catacomb means simply a cave, or any subterraneous place, for the burial of the dead; but it is now generally applied to a vast number of under-ground sepulchres near Rome, in the Appian way; for the reason that those are the most extensive known, as they extend some twenty miles. To get a correct idea of these catacombs, let the reader think of some place twenty miles distant, and then imagine the intermediate space excavated so as to resemble a honey comb work under ground; that is, alleys running in every direction, each alley three feet wide and eight to ten high, and you will get something of a good idea of the catacombs near Rome. The reason these vast excavations were made is not known; although many suppose that in the earlier history of Rome, here is where a large number of men were employed for the purpose of getting out building materials. This is mere supposition; but it is positively known that the early christians, during the first and second centuries, fled to these catacombs for security against persecution's bitter hand, when christians were not allowed to appear in public, and when many were burned at the stake, if they refused to denounce Christ, or the christian religion.

History informs us that here they lived for years—here they held their meetings—here they died—and here they were entombed in niches hewn in the walls of these extensive avenues. When they laid one of their number to rest they sealed up the niche, and often made inscriptions upon them, showing in some instances what they believed in that early day, in the history of the church.

I propose, by way of answering the question at the commencement of this article, to give a few of these inscriptions, which still are there sculptured in the rock-enduring testimonials of the faith of the early fathers, those who listened to the teachings of the apostles; and possibly, when the resurrection trump shall sound, some will come forth who have lived and talked with Jesus. Their words are here inscribed unchanged by theology and the mistranslations that attend many of the earliest writings handed down to us.

The following was taken from a slab, a part of which was broken out, so that one could look in and discover the dust of the sleeping saint, in the form of a perfect skeleton. "Valeria sleeps in peace." "The sleeping place of Elpis." "Victorina sleeps." "Zoticus laid here to sleep." "Lanus, the martyr of Christ, rests here; he suffered under Diocletian, and his successors also." "In Christ, in the time of the Emperor Adrian Marius, a young military officer, who had lived long enough, when with his blood he gave up his life for Christ. At length he rests in peace."

I might give others in harmony, but will only give one more, which alluded to the resurrection:—

"You well deserving one, having left your relations—lie in peace. You will arise—a temporary rest is granted you."

Thus we see that these early believers taught the "sleep of the dead"—not that when they died they should go to glory. Certainly, if they believed the latter, they would have been quite likely to have mentioned the fact in this place. They also looked forward to the time of rising, and considered the state of death as a temporary rest.

All of the early inscriptions harmonize with these views; but we may easily trace the creeping in of error; for those bearing date later, speak of the dead in different terms, intimating that they are not there, but in heaven. The early belief can only be traced on those inscriptions bearing date during the first and second century, and they testify to the fact that Valeria, Elpis, Victorina, and all of these rest in sleep, in peace, awaiting the resurrection; but, undoubtedly, a modern theologian, when reading these inscriptions from the very hieroglyphics made by those early christians, would say, "You did not mean that Valeria sleeps—only the body—Valeria is in heaven." "This is not the sleeping place of Elpis—only his body." "You mistake when you say Zoticus is laid here to sleep—it is only his body," etc. O that men would come to the truth, and ecclesiastical dignitaries cease perverting the christian faith.

For the Crisis.

"Thessalonica; or, the Model Church."

By a most soul-cheering and body-healing visit from Bro. H. L. Hastings, we have been favored with a few copies of this work. We have read it with avidity, and can recommend it as the very work to inspire the zeal requisite for the times—a zeal that will glean after the harvest—that will climb for the berries upon the outermost branches. Hear him:—

"The Thessalonians had turned from idols to serve the living and true God. And what is it to serve God? Is it merely to pray, to sing, and be happy, and be saved? Is not this God serving us? Suppose I find a man drunken, homeless, wretched, ragged, hungry and forlorn, and take him to my house. He is an outcast: and I take him in. He is homeless: I make him a home. He is hungry: I feed him. He is ragged: I clothe him. And when he eats my bread, wears my clothes, and lives in my house, is that serving me? I think not. I am serving him. But when I tell him 'Go, do my work; go, feed those who look to me for bread; go, watch over those who are the objects of my care; go, do good to all around on my behalf,'—then, if he fulfills my requests, and devotes himself entirely to my service, he is serving me.

Thus the christian who serves the living God is not entirely occupied with his feelings, his joys, his frames, and his frailties; he is serving God, not himself. And his own case and his own work are to him a matter of secondary importance. He has no doubt that God loves him and will take good care of him; but his chief concern is to keep himself in the love of God and be diligent in the service of so good a Master. This was the work of the Thessalonian church. They turned from idols, and they served God."

This is what we have done, some of us, since the visit of our brother. I tried the experiment of eating beans without salt, using a little sugar, and I felt so cool and comfortable and cheerful afterwards, that I continued to refrain using the common vegetables without salt; and for the first six days I felt not the slightest thirst, and did not take a spoonful of any drink in that time—my mouth and stomach, all the time, day and night, feeling cool and moist, as if I had just taken a refreshing draught of water.

Now, friends, simple as this may appear to you and unworthy of notice, I feel it to be the commencement of a new life to me. The cheerfulness of my youth is returning; my powers of endurance are reviving; my energy is aroused; my self-possession is strengthened; my patience is a readier servant,—in short, the internal war is subsiding, and I feel myself arming and fortifying for external combat. When all is right within, then an onslaught upon the enemy will be felt. Were our nation united, who could harm us? But now it is weak as was Sampson when his locks were shorn. So with the children of God. I do believe if we were right upon dietetics—if we were turned from all the idols of appetite to serve the living and true God in our eating and drinking, as we are commanded to do, we should be the better prepared for the storm that is now about to burst upon the world. We know not what consequences depend upon our being right every moment. We, or our children, through our carelessness, may imbibe a war spirit, and thus be led away from our allegiance to the Prince of Peace. Let us not rush into this avenging war. The Avenger of blood is upon the track, and let not the innocent assume the colors of the guilty, and thus share their fate.

Now, beloved, try the experiment of using no salt, and your tea and coffee pot will not be called for, and let your living be vegetarian and fruits. Bro. H. said there was a German adage that a horse is never loose as long as he drags his halter. This struck me; I felt that I had dragged my halter for the last twenty years; but now, all glory to my heavenly Master, I have doffed the head stall, and I am free.

Yours in christian bonds,

"Where is Heaven?"

Under the above heading, we find the following, which we took from the New York Chronicle. It is cheering to see the light advancing in these days of fable teaching. M. GRANT.

"Let me tell you what the Scriptures say, and how I interpret them. We assume, on the start, that this world having been purified by fire from all the effects and contamination of sin, and made new, will be the abode of the redeemed of all ages; that at the coming of Christ the righteous living will be "changed in a moment" from mortality to immortality; that the Savior will bring with him all who have slept, or died in him in all past ages of the world—their bodies being raised to die no more, but to dwell with him forever on the new earth.

Do the Scriptures teach this? Dan. 7: 14, "And there was given him (the Son of man) dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." Verse 18, "But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever." That this earth is the place where these things are to transpire is just as certain as that Daniel was on the earth, and that the people, nations and languages were on the earth. This kingdom, on this earth, is not to pass away, but to continue "forever, even forever and ever." This must then be the final abode of the saints, for there can can be nothing beyond "forever and ever." If this does not express eternity, then language cannot express it.

Again, Rev. 22: 5, "And there shall be no night there, and they shall need no candle, neither the light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light; and they shall reign forever and ever." That this is to be on this earth is evident, first, because no indication is given that it will be elsewhere; and second, it is said, (chap. 21. 24,) "And the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it," that is, the holy city which came down from heaven. If the saints are to be removed to some other sphere or place, they cannot inhabit the city which comes down for their special residence. Mark, here also it is said, "they shall reign forever and ever." .... Again, Mal. 4: 3, "And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of Hosts." My exposition of this passage is briefly this: That after the day that "shall burn as an oven," when "all that do wickedly shall be as stubble," and they shall be burned up, and during the thousand years, before the second resurrection, when the wicked are to be raised, the saints are to inherit this world, made new, and purified by fire, a beautiful world, and fit residence for Christ and his saints; and that during this time, the wicked are to be ashes under the feet of the saints. At all events, the ashes will not be carried to some place for the saints to tread upon. If this exposition be correct, the saints will walk upon this earth.

Again, Ps. 30: 9-11, "For evil doers shall be cut off; but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth. For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be. But the meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace. The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever." Matt. 5: 5, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." These Scriptures cannot be accomplished in this dispensation, unless it is to continue forever; nor then even, for I cannot see how the meek are peculiarly blessed. They do not inherit the greater part of the earth, but far the lesser. They do not inherit the best part of the earth any more than the wicked. How then are they blessed? Their inheritance of the earth is in reserve, when evil doers will be cut off, when they will not usurp the most and the best of the earth; when the place of the wicked "shall not be." Then the meek shall "delight themselves in the abundance of peace," and "dwell in the land forever."

"There shall be nothing to hurt nor annoy in all God's holy mountain." This will be an inheritance worth possessing, "that fadeth not away." The meek can well afford to wait a little longer for this good time coming, for nothing is more sure to come.

Again, Rev. 21: 5, "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away and there was no more sea. Behold I make all things new." Are all things to be made new for no purpose, or for another order of beings to inhabit? I answer, the meek will inhabit the earth made new, in their raised bodies, with their Lord and Savior in person, reigning upon his holy hill of Zion, before the ancients gloriously. A spiritual millennium before the second personal coming of Christ I utterly deny.

Again, 2 Pet. 3: 13, "Nevertheless, we according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." Is righteousness to dwell in the new earth, disconnected with righteous beings or persons? Who shall they be but those who "have come up out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb?" The Lord Jesus will dwell with them in intimate, familiar, holy intercourse, and "so shall they ever be with the Lord." But this is "according to his promise," Isa. 65: 15; "For behold I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create; for behold I create Jerusalem a rejoicing and her people a joy." If the same persons who once inhabited the present world are not to inhabit the new, with what propriety could it be said, "the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind?" If they had not known the former, they could not remember it. The idea to my mind is this: The new heavens and new earth will be so much more glorious, beautiful, fascinating and lovely, that the present shall be remembered with no regrets. It shall not be worth a passing thought in comparison with the new earth which will then exist. This will be the "times of restitution," of which God hath "spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," Acts 3: 21. "Then He shall send Jesus Christ, which was before preached unto you." Then "the whole creation shall groan and travail in pain" no more. This will be "the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."

This will be the kingdom of God, for which the church has always prayed, fully come. Then the King shall sit upon his holy hill of Zion, and all that offend and them which do iniquity shall be gathered out of it. Then the "knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters do the sea," and never till then.

These are some of the more direct Scriptures which lead me to think that the heaven of the righteous will be this very orb on which we now dwell, restored to its pristine beauty before the fall, or perhaps far more beautiful and glorious, in every way adapted to the condition of its holy inhabitants. Then the tree of life will grow, and yield its ripe fruit every month, and all the happy inhabitants will have free access to it, for no angel with his flaming sword shall guard it, but the redeemed of the Lord may eat and live forever, even forever and ever. D.

If you please, make me a Christian.

I well recollect, in the course of my labors, a poor Hindoo youth, who followed me about the garden of the school, asking me to make him a christian. I said, "It is impossible, my dear boy; if it is possible to do so at all, it is possible only through the Lord Jesus Christ to make you a christian. Pray to him." How well I recollect the sweet voice and sweet face of that boy, when he came to me and said "The Lord Jesus Christ has come and taken his place in my heart." I asked, "How is that?" He replied, "I prayed and said, 'O Lord Jesus Christ, if you please, make me a christian!' and he was so kind that he came down from heaven, and has lived in my heart ever since." How simple and how touching! "Lord Jesus Christ, if you please, make me a christian!" Can you say that you made a similar appeal in such a spirit as this poor Hindoo boy? And can you say, my young friends, that Jesus Christ has come down from heaven to live in your hearts?—Rev. Dr. Boaz, of Calcutta.

PRAYER IN THE HOUSEHOLD.—I was once told of a cottage patriarch who was born in those days when Scotland had a church in almost every house. There was one in his father's dwelling; and when he pitched a tent for himself he builded an altar. Round that altar a good number of olive-plants grew up; but, one by one, they were either planted out in families of their own, or God took them, till he and his old partner found themselves, just as at their first outset in life, alone. But their family worship continued as of old. At last his fellow-traveler left him. Still he carried on the worship by himself. So sweet was the memory of it in his father's house, and so pleasant had he found it in his own, that he could not give it up. As he sat in his silent habitation morning and evening, his quivering voice was heard singing the old psalm tune, reading aloud the chapter, and praying as if others were worshiping at his side.—James Hamilton.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Dr. Twitchell's Theory of Sudden Deaths by the use of Tobacco.

In discussing this subject, the doctor first described the effects it has on the nervous system, particularly the nerves of involuntary motion,—those whose function it is to carry on the action of the lungs, heart and stomach. These nerves are placed beyond the power of the will, acting without our consciousness, in sleep as well as when awake. And it is on these, he said, the habitual use of tobacco produces its most pernicious effects, by paralyzing their action.

It first manifests itself in the respiration, which is imperfectly performed; the blood is not fully purified, and a sense of anxiety or incipient suffocation is felt; to relieve which a voluntary effort is made to expand the chest to take in more air; and, every now and then, a deep inspiration or sigh is the result, giving momentary relief.

But, during sleep, especially when first going to sleep, the will not being so easily excited to action, the sense of suffocation is longer endured, till, at length becoming urgent and painful, a degree of consciousness is awakened; the individual begins to feel his condition, and ... perhaps suddenly starts, and sits up in the bed in alarm, his heart palpitating violently; and having obtained relief, soon goes to sleep, to pass through the same scenes again.

But, as the habit continues, the whole nervous system becomes affected; the muscles become tremulous, the sensibilities diminish, respiration and the action of the heart become more imperfect, and suffocation more urgent; but consciousness now fails to be roused to put forth a voluntary effort for relief; and the poor abused and languishing nerves, whose office is is to stand sentinel at the fountains of life, obtaining no help from the muscles of volition, at last are compelled quietly to yield up the struggle; and the person is found dead in his bed, the cause not known. Yet it is a foolish sacrifice of life to the vile but enchanting habit of using tobacco.

There are doubtless some few who are found dead from disease of the heart. But the doctor said he had for many years been extending his inquiries on this subject; that he had found almost every individual, who had died during sleep, had long been in the habit of the free use of tobacco, and it was his full conviction that that was almost the only cause of such deaths.

The habitual use of tobacco, he said, was a most fruitful source of disease. And this would appear evident when we consider its effects upon the nervous system. It lowers down the power of those nerves upon which life depends; the blood does not fully undergo that change in the lungs which respiration is designed to effect, and goes to the heart impure and purple; the heart has not its original power to send it forward in its circulation through the body, and an impure, sluggish circulation is the consequence, which predisposes to almost every disease the human system is subject to.

Among the diseases caused by tobacco, the doctor enumerated palsy, inveterate nervous headache, palpitation of the heart, disease of the liver, indigestion, ulceration of the stomach, piles, and many others; and finally, he said, he hardly knew that there was any disease it did not at times produce. He did not undertake to assert that all who use tobacco must necessarily have these diseases fully developed. But he said individuals often experienced annoying, and sometimes alarming symptoms, the result of tobacco, which render them infirm and wretched, while they are altogether ignorant of the cause. He mentioned giddiness, pain in the head, palpitation of the heart, faintness, and gnawing sensation of the stomach, neuralgic pains, trembling, sudden loss of strength, loss of recollection, starting in sleep, etc.; that he had been called to prescribe for a great many persons, whose diseases have spontaneously disappeared on their discontinuance of tobacco.

The particular form in which tobacco is used is not of very material consequence. He thought tobacco more frequently produces palsy than all other causes, and that snuff is more likely to bring it on than any other form in which it it used; but that chewing is more injurious to the digestive organs, affecting them in a threefold way. It robs the stomach of its saliva, lessens its nervous power, and diminishes its peristaltic motion; and all the cases he had seen of ulceration of the stomach were manifestly the effect of tobacco.

One day Dr. Twitchell had been describing, in his exquisitely graphic manner, the gradual inroads made by tobacco upon the human system. He first displayed the gentlest effects of this "celestial drug." The slightest nervousness or most trivial pain was perhaps all that the sufferer noticed. Then came the horrid dreams and nightmares dire, with indigestion and all its miserable train. After talking thus for some time, he proceeded still further, and had just touched upon the point where, according to his theory, the victim of appetite will see death staring at him. All his audience were listening with deep interest, and silence reigned in the room, when suddenly one gentleman dropped senseless. He had listened with great attention, and was horror-struck at fancying that he had arrived at the fatal point in his journey as a tobacco-chewer. He, however, soon recovered from his swoon, and from that moment foreswore the use of the article in any shape.

Speaking of the effects of tobacco in certain cases, Dr. Twitchell says, "In six cases palpitations were produced; and in eight pains in the chest, usually over the heart, but at times at the right side of the breast. In two of these it was noticed particularly after immoderate use of tobacco. Headache was observed four times, and frightful and severe dreams in four more cases. Nervous tremors, cramps, starting, etc., were found eleven times. In one case the memory was benumbed, and the patient became stupid."—Dr. Bowditch's Life of Dr. Twitchell.

For the Crisis.

Response to Sister A. C. Judson.

Kind are thy words of love, my Sister dear,
To one whom wondrous grace hath called to plead
God's holy truth to man condemned and lost.
O 'tis an honor "worlds want wealth to buy,"
To tell the story of redeeming Love—
"The glorious Gospel of the blessed God."
Concentrate there, divine perfections glow,
Which far outshine the beauties of the skies;
Justice and mercy, righteousness and peace,
In sweet embrace proclaim that "God is Love."
True are thy words, belov'd, that "yet to God Belongs the honor for" what man "has done."
"Not by (our) might," but "by (thy) Spirit," Lord,
The truth's received which saves the soul from death.
"Not unto us, O Lord, but to thy name,"
The everlasting glory we proclaim.
To thy kind plea, belov'd, for CHARITY,
Wounded in her own house, my heart responds.
O brethren dear! think of that Holy One,
"Harmless and undefiled," who bears with us
Our numerous errors, and our faults forgives.
And think with awe, the judgment that we mete,
Eternal Judgment metes to us again.
O God of Love! Let not the shade of life
E'er cool my love for those who love my Lord.
In "the new earth" of Love soon may we meet.

"Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation."

BELOVED CHRISTIAN BRETHREN:—Never, I apprehend, was it more necessary for us to consider this command of our blessed Master, than in the present solemn crisis. The adversary, who tempted the disciples to call down fire from heaven to consume their enemies, will tempt us to forget the principles and precepts of our holy religion, and that "the Son of man came not to destroy men's lives but to save them." With the plausible plea, that it is our duty to submit to the powers that be, which is true only to a certain extent, he will tempt us to cherish the spirit and approve the maxims of an ungodly and warring world. Civil enactments are to be obeyed so far as they are in harmony with the laws of the Ruler of the universe. But "whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto (men) more than unto God, judge ye." Acts 4: 19. The New Testament, indeed, recognizes the righteousness, (in the present depraved state of the world,) of restraining individuals from doing evil by the sword. Rom. 13th. But it no where recognizes the right of States or nations to settle their differences by the same instrument. When we consider the nature and terrible results of these conflicts, which, as Mr. Jefferson said, are simply attempts to show "which can do the other the most harm;" we may well pause and seriously enquire, if our logic is not some where at fault, which brings us to the conclusion that the disciples of the Prince of Peace may rightfully engage in them.

O beloved brethren, let us remember our high vocation. Though in the world, we are "not of the world." John 17: 14. We are chosen out of the world, to be the light of it, and to reflect, amid its moral darkness, the glory of that Kingdom which is righteousness, PEACE, and joy in the Holy Ghost." "My kingdom (said our blessed Lord) is not of this world (or age). If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight," etc. John 18: 36. "Put up thy sword into the sheath." John 18: 11. "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord. Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink," etc. Rom 12: 19, 20. The victory to which Jesus Christ leads his army, is to "overcome evil with good." Now contrast this with the scene of christian brethren, meeting on the battle field to bayonet each other's bodies, which are the temples of the Holy Ghost! 1 Cor. 6: 19. How shall the holy angels who are "ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation" fulfill their commission on such an occasion? What reception can conflicting prayers meet at the mercy-seat stained with fraternal blood? Jehovah indeed "cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of (this land) for their iniquity." In view of the national sin of oppression, Mr. Jefferson truly said that God's justice would not always sleep. The cries of the red man of the forest, and of our brother of a darker hue, have entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabbaoth, and are now to be answered by a terrible retribution. O Lord, in the midst of deserved wrath, remember mercy. What, my beloved christian brethren, is now the voice of God to us? Is it to mingle in the strife of "the potsherds of the earth?" "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds" of sin. 2 Cor. 10: 4. Let us respond, with grateful joy, to the sweet invitation of our Father's love: "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee, hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast." Isa. 26: 20, 21.

The Signs.

It is not to be expected that every one of Christ's disciples will have sufficient knowledge of history to harmonize all prophecy and history, so as to have a clear light reaching down to the end, or to the coming of the Lord. But none need be left in doubt as to the near proximity of that glorious event, by simply taking the predictions of our Lord in Matt. 24, Mark 13, Luke 21, where he gives us the signs which should immediately precede his second coming:—first, the darkening of the sun; second, the falling of the stars; third, distress of nations, etc., and last, the coming of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven. He says, "this generation shall not pass away till all these things be fulfilled." Now the first of these signs, viz., the darkening of the sun, was May 19, 1780. The generation who saw that sign eighty-one years ago have nearly all passed away, but not quite all: here and there may be found a few who remember having seen the sun darkened. And yet the generation who saw that sign "shall not pass away till all be fulfilled." Some who saw that sign eighty years ago, will live to see the Lord come in the clouds of heaven; hence, it is very nigh—so nigh that we should now be looking for the complete fulfillment of the prophecy. That the generation is meant who saw the fruit of these signs, is evident, because the generation who were living when the prophecy was uttered, did not see "nation rise against nation and kingdom against kingdom." That generation saw only Rome, a universal kingdom or empire, and which remained unbroken for two or three centuries after that generation passed away; and although the sun was darkened at the crucifixion, yet the darkening spoken of in this prophecy of our Lord is evidently in the days after the great tribulation, and as Rome was unbroken until the 4th century, the generation then living could not have been meant as the generation who should see all these things, including the second coming of the Lord.

It seems as though the Lord had given these signs and the prophecy of them as a plain and simple guide to all the last generation of his followers, including those who might not have the opportunity or means of understanding the more obscure and intricate prophecies.

Let us look at the signs spoken of in Matt., Mark and Luke. 1st, the darkening of the sun and moon—fulfilled May 19, 1780. 2d, the falling of the stars—fulfilled November, 1833. 3d, the powers of heaven shaken, as said in Matthew, and in Luke it is called "on the earth distress of nations with perplexity." The two first of these signs are passed—the third we are now in, for look where we will we see distress of nations and perplexity, a time of trouble, etc.; and if we include this nation, we have here a time of trouble such as this nation never saw. Truly the cup of which all nations were to drink, is being drunk by this nation; and look where we will, we can see no deliverance but in the sure word of prophecy. The only deliverance to which the church can look, is to the second coming of Jesus. Well may the christian lift up his head and rejoice, knowing that redemption is nigh. If the church was instructed to rejoice when these signs began, we may be more sure of the speedy realization of our hope now that we see the last signs but one. This is in accordance with the promise that the light shall shine more and more unto the perfect day.

☞ Be systematic in every thing. It will add much more to your convenience than you can imagine. Few persons seem to be aware of the great advantage of system. It saves time, saves temper, saves patience, and saves money. To all we would say, "be systematic."

For the Crisis.

How shall the Gospel be sustained?

To all who sincerely and truly love Christ and his cause, this is an important inquiry. If we love the Savior truly, we are willing to do all He requires at our hands; nay, it is a privilege to do His requirements. "If ye love me, keep my commandments." John 14: 15. "If a man love me, he will keep my words." Ver. 23. Why, this is a self-evident proposition. If we serve our Lord in the strict sense of that word, we are ready to do whatever command falls from his sacred lips, and not gredgingly, either, as though he were an unjust Master, but with delight and pleasure, thankful that we are accounted worthy to suffer with Him, that we may also reign with Him in glory.

If He call on us to do a certain thing,—something we are fully able to do, what is the principle upon which that requirement is founded? I answer, justice, righteousness and love. Are we required to love our neighbor as ourselves? It is because it is an eternal principle of right. And why is it right and just? Because God is its author, and because we wish to be dealt by on this holy principle. Who ever saw an individual that objected to having this Divine principle applied to him, "Do unto others as ye would that others should do unto you." But I have known people to complain when they were asked to apply this heavenly command by doing it do others. This fact is good evidence that the requirement is just, and not of human origin. It is opposed to natural inclination to be obedient to this demand; hence it is not a human requirement, and no evil being would ever institute such a holy requirement; therefore it is from a Divine source—from God himself.

Who ever knew this principle in its practical application to inspire any one? "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor," furnishing another proof of its Divine source. Well, now, if we would but heed these general principles of Christ and his Apostles, I ask if I or any other individual would need to write an article of this nature. Not at all. Means to support the gospel would be abundant. The Lord's treasury would be flush with means to send the good news of eternal life far and near, while now it is almost empty. Instead of our ministers and editors being in such straitened circumstances as they are now, means would be on hand to raise them above embarrassment, and place the cause of Christ on a sure basis. Instead of their being half fed and clothed, as is now the case,—yes, and it is really worse than I here represent, but heaven knows this is bad enough,—they would be placed above temporal wants and have the means to do God's work with. Come, brother, sister, you who wish your children and neighbors converted to the gospel, put some stock into Christ's bank; it is the best bank you ever located money in—I will guarantee that, for it will not break or fail, because the cashier is He who owns the earth and the fulness thereof, and the cattle on a thousand hills. Brother, don't stand there doubting; the stock is ample, and the rate of interest is, in "this life, an hundred fold, and in the world to come" the principal, "life everlasting." Glory to God! And you need not distrust any of the proprietors in this heavenly bank; they are all honest, and fully capable of doing the business properly, for they are old experienced hands; and none of them can be bribed to do wrong or cheat. They are tried ones. The Devil offered one concerned in this Divine Bank all the kingdoms of the world if he would just fall down and worship him, or may be just let him put his hand in the treasury. But, said this blessed proprietor, "Get thee behind me, Satan, thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." This same proprietor was tempted by this arch and subtle deceiver forty days and stood the test. Just try this good Director once, and see the good fruits that will result from laying up treasures in heaven. No moth can corrupt, no thief can steal it.

But it may be thought I write this article especially on my own account. Not by any means. I write it for the good of the cause at large. We never shall accomplish anything until the ministry is better supported among us. As things are, their hands are tied; they are embarrassed and perplexed. The most of us, if we preach at all, must go into the desk without any or very little preparation at most. Such preaching will not accomplish large results. Then if the poor brother don't preach smart or interestingly, perhaps he will be told by some Judas professor and miserly brother that he has no business to preach at all, and thus go home heart sick and discouraged. And ten chances to one if he is not termed a pauper preacher withal. Men who take such an evil course ought to be scarce in the church of God.

Another evil. Our young ministers are not encouraged as they should be. I know this to be a fact. Brethren forget that all our ministers were once boys, and preached some like boys, too. And these same fault-finders forget that they were once boys in their calling as farmers, merchants, mechanics, etc. If you want that young man yonder to improve in preaching, tact and talent, just help him out into the field, and give him books that will aid him in his great work. Brethren in Michigan, let us arise and work in earnest. Get out to our quarterly meetings always when you possibly can, and help on the cause when there. Lord, help us!

Evening Shadows.—No. 6.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is."

DEARLY BELOVED IN CHRIST:—Permit me to continue my remarks on this very interesting subject, in connection with former articles. You perceive 'tis written that the rise of this power will cause much astonishment. He is also declared to be an eighth of seven previous forms of government.

First. The subject presents itself to me in this light. At the time of John's exile on Patmos, five heads, or leading forms of the Dragonic government, had fallen; one was then in authority; the other not yet come, namely, the Patriarchate, did continue but a short space. Under that, the seventh form, Romulus Augustus, he gave up his seat, power and great authority. Thus ended the seventh head.

Second. This eighth, it is declared, shall ascend out of the bottomless pit. (See No. 7 on this point.) There did arise a corresponding power in France, during the reign of terror, it doth seem to me, and filled the mould precisely. Thus the Beast that John saw with seven heads, Rev. 12: 3, was not during the Wilderness state, but did ascend out of the bottomless pit an eighth, and of the previous seven-headed monster, A. D. 1780, a republican, infidel, Pagan government.

Third. "And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, who have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast." There was to be an association of power at one time between this eighth formed power and ten Kings; consequently, the revolutionary republican element sent out of the mouth of the Dragon has gone forth unto the Kings of the Earth and the whole world, to prepare the way of these ten Kings to consummate the work assigned them in Rev. 17: 15-17; (read it;) and the result is now making itself manifest in an astounding manner. Republicanism has dried up the symbolic Euphrates, and severed the ten kingdoms of Italy forever from the scarlet-colored Beast and its rider.

Fourth. It was declared in Rev. 13: 2—the Dragon "gave up his seat, power and great authority," and in the 4th verse it reads, "And they worshipped the dragon which gave power unto the beast: and they worshipped the beast,"* (Please read the subjoined article, "Saturnalia,") the scarlet-colored beast possessing the predominancy through the wilderness state. The ten kings, at the close of that period, are to give their power and strength unto the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit.

Fifth. They are to receive power as kings one hour with the beast. "One hour"—at one time, I understand the words to imply. If this suggestion is correct, then the subject is plain, to my mind at least. In 1848, the most eventful year ever recorded in history, the kingdoms of Italy did at one time become completely revolutionized, and since that time, in all probability, you are familiar with what has transpired. The Pope fled for his life to Gaeta, and a republican government was established. And now what a singular complication of elements we behold in Rome! Once the seat of the Dragon; next the seat of the scarlet-colored beast, sending forth his myriads of bishops, priests, nuncios, Jesuits, missionaries, black, grey and white nuns, swarming like the locusts of Egypt. Rome, the Romanist's Paradise, now clamoring to expel the Pope, crying and shouting for Victor Emanuel, Garibaldi and Liberty.

Sixth. "These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength to the beast." They are throwing off with giant strength the trammels of oppressive despotism. There is now a one mindedness manifesting itself with the entire peninsular kingdoms, and the only exception to this seems to be those who are sinecures and government officials. Thus, it seems to me, the ten kings, once devotees to the scarlet-colored beast and its rider, now give their power and strength to the eighth form of Dragonic Republican government, that rose from the bottomless pit in France during the reign of terror. Dearly beloved, if the above suggestions are correct, what additional strength it adds to the hope of soon seeing Jesus and being made like him. The sun is fast sinking, the evening shadows are casting their long projected rays around us, and night, dark, eternal night is hasting upon the poor sinner! O, ye wanderers from God, flee, flee to the city of refuge, before the Master rises up, shuts to the door, and swears thou shalt never enter into his rest.

*SATURNALIA.—A feast among the Romans, a festival of Saturn, celebrated in December as a period of unrestrained license and merriment of all classes. I take the following from "The World as it is," page 295:—"Carnival and Lent at Rome immediately precedes the forty days fasting of lent, and usually lasts eight days. Commencing about the 25th of January, forty-eight days before the Sunday following the 14th of March, it is a time of universal festivity as a preparation for the succeeding fast. The name Carnival, derived from the Latin word Carnivale (taking leave of flesh) denotes the object. The three last days are the most licentious. Persons of all descriptions lay aside restraint; priests and prelates, under the scruples of conscience the rest of the year, now give indulgence to their passions, and go in quest of pleasures about the city, forbidden at other times, but now find abundant means of enjoyment. The more modest wear masks; others take no pains to conceal their excesses. The Carnival corresponds in its principal features with the Saturnalia of Pagan Rome. * * * At 12 o'clock at night on the commencement of Lent, a fast of forty days, all merriment ceases, and for the forty succeeding days the appearance of the city is as silent and sombre as it was before joyous. The eating of any kind of flesh is strictly forbidden. The churches are crowded. The people are occupied in fasting, doing penance in various forms, making confessions and obtaining absolution. At the close of Lent commences the festival of Easter, in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ. The transition is as sudden and as great as that from the Carnival to Lent. The religious ceremonies and parade of Rome are equally disgusting to strangers, whether infidels or protestant christians. The one consider them, all a farce, the other a corruption of the pure principles of christianity."

Thus, dear reader, you perceive in the above short historical extract the amalgamated worship of the red Dragon, Roman Papal, and the scarlet-colored Roman Catholic worship. Thus they worshipped the dragon and they worshipped the beast.

Importance of Prophecy.—No. 6.

(Concluded.)

Seventh. "And the foolish said unto the wise, give us of your oil: for our lamps are gone out." As the oil represents the attribute of love, so the call for oil represents a demand for love, or charity. The foolish virgins, being destitute of oil, and their lamps having gone out, demanded oil of the wise. In carrying out the figure, those represented by the foolish, require the wise to extend to them charity, urging as a reason their own convictions that the definite time movement which, a little before, they themselves had declared to be the counterpart to the midnight cry, was a failure; that the church had acted too hastily; that they had been altogether too exclusive in christian fellowship; that duty requires them to retrace their steps, and exercise a more liberal charity.

That there was a want of love for Christ's second Advent, on the part of some who were very zealous in the '54 and '55 time movement, as indicated by the foolish virgins' destitution of oil, is fully demonstrated by remarks like the following, viz.: "I am glad the Lord did not come as we expected; for in that case I should have been damned." "If the Lord had come, as we expected, the Church would all have been lost;—they were not prepared for the event." "I am glad the time is past;—I am now at liberty;—I am out of the nutshell." "If I had not been under that time influence, I should now have been worth several hundred dollars more than I am." These, and other similar remarks, show a want of love for the appearing of Christ. It would seem that those who, after the passing of time, rejoiced because the Lord did not come as was expected, were, during the time development, actuated by fear that he would come; and, being desirous to secure their own salvation, were thus induced to offer some sort of sacrifice to God, by which they hoped to receive the gift of eternal life.

"Give us of your oil." The requisition, "Confess your errors and your faults, and extend to us the hand of christian fellowship in the bond of christian union and charity," is equivalent to saying, "Give us of your oil."

"Our lamps are gone out." Remarks like the following: "We profess to be honest christians, but we cannot see that the time arrangement in question answers to the midnight cry;—we consider it as being a false cry, a grievous error, and a fatal mistake,' are tantamount to saying, "Our lamps have gone out."

Eighth. "But the wise answered, saying, not so, lest there be not enough for us and you; but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves." The wise are represented as refusing to divide their "charity" (love) with the foolish, on the ground that they have not enough for both classes. "But," says one, "you cannot be right in your application: are we not, as christians, commanded to love even our enemies?" I answer, yes. "But suppose our enemy is a thief, a drunkard, a gambler, and a robber. Are we, as christians, under obligation to love a person in whose character all these wicked propensities are practically combined?" I answer emphatically, yes! If there is any apparent hope in his case, we must strive to lead him to the lamb of God, that his sins may be taken away. If he is hungry, we must feed him. If he is thirsty, we must give him drink. If he is destitute of raiment, we must clothe him. In short, we must do him all the good in our power. But that these acts may testify that our moral character assimilates to that of Christ, they must not spring from a spirit of ostentation, nor from fear of being damned if we neglect to perform them; but they must spring from genuine, sympathetic emotion, and love to God. And as for anger, malevolence, and revenge, we must not indulge in these evil passions. We must overcome all such wicked agitations of the mind. But are we to love the evil practices of our wicked enemies? The concurrent answer of all men would be, "No!" Are we under obligation to respect and love the unscriptural positions of men, and hold them in christian fellowship, even though on all accounts we may esteem them? Consistency says, No! Then we have found a principle upon which the wise are justified in refusing to divide their love with the foolish. To esteem the foolish as christians, would amount to an acknowledgement that they occupy a christian position. But being convinced to the contrary, by the light of inspiration, the wise refuse to bestow on the foolish the charity they demand. The wise will be governed in this matter by the following rule, viz: "Either make the tree good, and his fruit good; or else make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt; for the tree is known by his fruit. . . . But I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." Following this rule, if we esteem a person as a christian, we shall also esteem his position to be a christian position. But if the position he occupies is esteemed as being unchristian, he also must be esteemed in the same light. Every idle word, i. e., every unprofitable word, that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. And every word of doctrine, not agreeing with the teachings of Christ, is idle.

The demand for oil, (charity,) as we have previously remarked, would, if complied with, amount to an acknowledgement on the part of the wise, that the position the foolish occupy, is a christian position. But this the wise refuse to do, believing that they have been, and still are, acting in concert with the plan of God. They fully understand that they cannot, at the same time, exercise charity for two positions which stand diametrically opposed to each other. Should they endorse the position of the foolish, they must abandon their own. But this they cannot do, as they believe their position is established in truth. Therefore, as the wise cannot love two antagonistic positions at the same time,—as they have not charity enough to cover two opposing interests at once,—the substance of their reply to the requisition for charity is, "Not so, lest there be not enough for us and you; but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves."

Is the question asked, where can charity (love) be purchased? The answer is, charity can be purchased of those who contend that christian character does not consist in peculiar faith, but in maintaining an exterior assimilation to the rules of Christianity, notwithstanding they may hold to the unscriptural traditions of popular teachers, and persistently oppose the present developments of God's economy. But what is the price of the purchase? Ans. "Lay aside your peculiar views and your test questions; refrain from discussing disputed points; discuss such points only as respecting which christians are tolerably well agreed. In this way strive for the peace of the church, and share with us our charity." But God says, "He that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully."

Ninth. "And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage; and the door was shut." As the foolish virgins, in going to buy oil, must of necessity have been in extreme haste, knowing that, in consequence of the near approach of the bridegroom, they had but a short time in which to secure the important article, so also those whom the foolish virgins represent, in carrying out the figure, excite themselves to the highest pitch of action; they anticipate a great work to be done for the Lord, and, on account of the nearness of his second coming, apprehend the time in which to do their work to be short. As it seems to have cost the foolish virgins more travel and exertion to secure their own exclusion from the marriage feast than it cost the wise to gain admission, so also will it cost those whom the foolish represent, more labor and toil to force their way down to perdition, than it will cost the wise to gain an inheritance among them that are sanctified. The wise are not under the necessity of being in such "dreadful haste;" their hearts being filled with love to God, they have light to enable them to discern the unfoldings of his economy, and grace to stimulate them to act in unison therewith. When the cloud rests, they will rest. They will not, at such times, become impatient, and establish some system of their own device for the promotion of God's cause; but they will wait patiently till the cloud moves, and then, moving in harmony therewith, they will understand the plan of God, give glory to him, and rejoice in the present truth. And when the Lord Jesus Christ is revealed from heaven, they will be found ready to ascend and meet him in the air, and, together with all the redeemed host, celebrate the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Tenth. "Afterwards came also other virgins, saying Lord, Lord, open to us." As the foolish virgins came, probably expecting to be admitted to the nuptial celebration, from the fact that they had been bidden, and had taken the trouble to comply, as they supposed, with the terms of the invitation, not thinking that their turning back for a new supply of oil—a necessity which they had brought upon themselves by their former listlessness—could be looked upon by the bridegroom as a misdemeanor, so also, at the coming of the Lord, will those whom the foolish virgins represent, appear before him, confidently expecting that—as they will have been looking for him;—putting forth a vigorous effort to convince the world that they were speedily approximating the great day of the Lord—he will at once admit them to the marriage feast. Hence they will cry, Lord, Lord, open unto us. But,

Eleventh. The Lord will reply to them, "Verily I say unto you, I know you not. And though they offer the plea, "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name have done many wonderful works?" Yet will he profess unto them, "I never knew you, depart from me, ye workers of iniquity."

We have a sure word of prophecy, whereunto we do well that we take heed, as unto a light shining in a dark place. "Cast not away therefore your confidence," (in past fulfillments of prophecy,) "which hath great recompence of reward . . . . For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry. Now the just shall live by FAITH: but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him." Persevere, then, in well doing. Watch the way. Make thy loins strong. Fortify thy power mightily. Keep in unison with the developments of God's economy, so as to shed light in the world, instead of producing darkness. All the unfoldings of the plan of redemption have to be proclaimed to the world by the church. Let her, then, appreciate her high and holy calling. Let her, as she receives the word of God from her great head, preach that word faithfully—notwithstanding she may be accused of innovation, and finally receive the welcome invitation,—"Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Luther.

"It is impossible," says the great Luther, "for a man to be a christian without having Christ: and if he has Christ, he has all that belongs to Christ. What gives peace to our consciences is this—by faith our sins are no longer our own, but they are Christ's, on whom God hath laid them all; and on the other hand, all Christ's righteousness belongs to us, to whom God has given it. Christ lays his hand on us, and we are healed; He casts his mantle over us, and we are sheltered; for he is the glorious Savior, blessed forevermore."—D'Aubigne's History of the Reformation.

Answer to Bro. Crosby's "Inquiry."

I noticed in the Crisis of Feb. 27th, an article from the pen of my good friend Crosby. And in it he wishes me to answer the following questions:

1. He wishes me to inform him "where (I) obtained (my) testimony that Cain had no faith." Bro. C., this question is an important one, and I will let the apostle Paul answer it. "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead yet speaketh."

2. He asks me to inform him, "Why was that altar erected, and Cain's best brought and laid thereon as a sacrifice, if he had no faith?" An important question! And I will answer it by asking another, and answering it. Why is it that the rich feel disposed to give of their abundance, and the poor to exert themselves to the uttermost in bringing in their offerings to support a time-serving ministry, and a worldly-minded church: who stand arrayed against the things concerning the Christ and the kingdom of God? I think it must be obvious to all that they do these things to be seen of men, as the Pharisees of old did, Matt. 23: 5-7,—"But all their works they do for to be seen of men: they make broad their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments, and love the uppermost rooms at feasts, and the chief seats in the synagogues, and greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi." And it was this spirit, or mind, that led Cain to bring his sacrifice, and erect his altar! And by the same spirit the mass of human beings are led today, having no faith in the truth as revealed in the LIVING ORACLES! Cain slew Abel! Gen. 4: 8.

3. He asks, "What did our kind heavenly Father design to teach Cain, when he said to him, 'If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted?'" A solemn question! from the fact that Cain's future life was identified with the lesson taught in this declaration of our heavenly Father. What is it? I answer, faith in God's revealed truth. And without it Paul has informed us that "it is impossible to please God!" Hence he stood condemned by God, as having failed to do well, on the account of unbelief. And the taking of the life of his brother, is positive testimony that he had no faith. Consequently, sin rested upon his own head. Had his offering been mixed with faith, he would not have taken the life of his brother, nor been displeased with him; because he would have had the mind of God as revealed, and, like Enoch, he would have walked with Him by believing all His truth as revealed, and yielding implicit obedience to all his requirements. Man may feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the sick, pay his quarterage, assist in building gospel bazars, fast much, pray long and loud, shout and sing, talk long and eloquently, attend to the ordinances of Christ's church, etc., etc.;—but, if he has not faith in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus, he stands in the present tense a condemned sinner before the Royal Majesty of the heavens. "For whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Your brother in hope,

The Future State; as believed by different Nations.

The Mahometans believe in a hell, with "seven stories; the first for the temporary punishment of bad Mahometans; the second for the Jews; the third for the Christians; the fourth, fifth and sixth for the idolaters; and the seventh, and worst place, for the hypocrites." "The infidels are to be damned forever; but the true believers for only nine hundred years, or, at most, seven thousand years." "One great punishment will be the thinness of the partition betwixt hell and heaven, allowing the damned to hear the conversation of the blessed. The torments will be great heat and cold; and the lightest of all pain will be to be shod with shoes of fire, whose fervor will cause the skull to boil like a chaldron."

In some of the distant provinces of Russia, when a person dies, the corpse "is carried to the grave, the priest produces a ticket signed by the bishop and another clergyman, and directed to St. Nicholas: this is considered as the passport to heaven, and is placed between the fingers of the deceased."

The Russian Circassians believe that, at death, the spirit passes "immediately into paradise."

The Japanese believe that "the souls of men and of beasts are equally immortal."

"The New Hollanders are supposed to acknowledge the existence of a Supreme Power; and their dread of spirits indicates their belief in a future state." "If asked where their deceased friends are, they always point to the sky."

A New Zealander, on being asked by Mr. Marsden what he considered Atua, (their God,) he answered, "an immortal shadow."

Western Africa. Dahomy is a kingdom ruled by a king. "At any time when the king has a message to convey to his deceased relations, he delivers it to one of his subjects, then strikes off his head, that he may carry it to another world."

Buenos Ayres. The southern part of Pampas is inhabited by Indians who "believe in a future state, to which they conceive they will be transferred as soon as they die."

In the Spanish settlements of South America, the Catholic religion prevails. When a Spaniard dies, "his relations send to the treasury to buy a bull," which is a "ticket for admission into Paradise." "The virtue of this bull is not confined to dispensing with the obligation of going into purgatory, but extends to extricating the soul which, like the asbestos, is whitening in its flames. It has the faculty even to designate the spirit it is wished to liberate. It is enough to write upon the bull the name of the person it animated in this lower world, and that very moment the gates of paradise are opened for him." Says M. Lavaysse:—"In all the churches of this country, there are pictures representing heaven and purgatory. In a corner of the picture is a priest saying mass; at the side, are people giving money for the celebration of mass, and souls starting out of purgatory, when masses have been said for them. They are received by the archangel, St. Michael, who is depicted holding a pair of scales in his hand, one of which is full of the money for the masses, and appears to sink, while the red hot souls, like broiled lobsters, throw themselves into the other scale, from which they fly to heaven."

The above extracts I have taken from a book entitled Universal Traveller. If you have any use for them, they are at your service. Respectfully yours,

The Fulfillment of Wishes.

A wish is defined as an expression of earnest desire, and, when directed to our heavenly Father, is in reality prayer. We are all conscious of a secret or avowed longing for some coveted good, which we fancy would add materially to our happiness; these wishes vary according to the different characters, habits and external circumstances of our earthly allotments. The poor long for wealth, rank and influence; the sick, in body or mind, for health and enjoyment; the rich man sighs for freedom from care and domestic joys. Each one can frame for themselves innumerable unfulfilled wishes that mar our earthly happiness; and we are often tempted to charge our Maker with injustice in the dispensation of his favors, deeming ourselves capable of choosing our own lot, and controlling our own destiny, like an headstrong child, we would fain break loose from the restraining hand of tender paternal correction, thus "kicking against the pricks," till infinite mercy opens our eyes to discern a wiser way; then we kiss the rod, and find a "needs-be" for every trial.

Is the child of indulgence, whose wishes are all anticipated, happy? Far from it. The most pleasing delineations of childish innocence and delight are not the surroundings of the restless, pampered child of fortune; but the little half-clad urchin, who is left to create his own enjoyments, with a heap of dirt or a stagnant pool; "children too of a large growth," evidence that a humble lot is most conducive to a contented spirit. "The more we have the more we want," is a trite but truthful proverb. In the "wisest of men" we have an example of one who had tasted to repletion all the delights the world can bestow on its votaries; yet, when every wish was fulfilled, he pronounced all "vanity of vanities."

We may surely learn something from our own experience to reconcile us to the non-fulfillment of some of our cherished desires. Has the imagined good, when attained, never proved delusive, or withered in our grasp? The evil that we dreaded, and wished to avoid,—has it never been converted to a blessing? But it is to be hoped our wishes are not confined to temporal benefits, and we may surely expect a fulfillment of wishes regarding "heavenly treasures," for God's word assures us that "he will withhold no good thing" from his children; yet we may err even here as to the ways and means by which we "limit the Holy One of Israel;" though his people have ever found him to be a prayer-answering God, he may see fit to try their faith and patience in such a way as almost leads them to despair; but when we have "seen the end of the Lord," we shall be enabled to say—

God chooses best for me and mine,
Ne'er let my wayward heart repine,
My wishes unfulfilled may be,
Yet soon Thy wisdom I shall see.

SOLAR SUBSTANCES.—Two German chemists, working together in their laboratory at Heidelberg, have analysed the body of the sun. Fabulous as it may seem, this is literally true. They arrived at the results of their analysis solely by close examination of light. By this means it is ascertained, in a manner quite convincing to those who have witnessed the experiments, that the body of the sun contains large portions of iron and other metals and earth common to this globe of ours.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 22, 1861.

Eternal Suffering.

The "Editor's Table" of the last number of the American Presbyterian has the following notice:—

"'Debt and Grace,' a bulky 12mo. of nearly 500 pages, by C. F. Hudson, has reached the fourth thousand, and may be regarded as a standard work, so far as a work in defence of error can claim such an honorable title. It is a perfect armory of weapons, gathered by a thorough and scholarly man from every age and department of literature. The spirit of the book is apologetic; it aims to vindicate the character of the Deity and the christian religion from the embarassments which, in the view of the writer and his class, are brought upon them by the doctrine of the eternal suffering of the wicked. Annihilation, according to his view, relieves the the case of its difficulties. It is a rash putting forth of hands to stay the sacred ark. Published by Rudd & Carleton, New York, and for sale by Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia."

If the author of "Debt and Grace" may reckon as belonging to "his class" all those to whose minds "the doctrine of the eternal suffering of the wicked" presents "embarrassments" of the most serious character, his party is very large and includes one, at least, of the editors of the "Presbyterian," if his feelings on the subject remain what they were when, in one of his published "Practical Sermons," he said—"I have never seen one ray of light that has given relief to my tortured mind on this subject; it is all dark, dark, dark to my soul, and I cannot disguise it." We refer to ALBERT BARNES, and though we are obliged to quote from memory, we are sure we give his words with substantial accuracy. If the doctrine of everlasting torture is a "sacred ark," the individual we have just named is an eminent instance to prove that the "ark" contains "difficulties" which are felt by those who have not yielded assent to the doctrine of "annihilation."

But, blessed be God, there is relief, and we find an ample revelation of the fact in a "standard work" which the "Presbyterian" will not call "a defence of error:" we mean, of course, the BIBLE. We shall not feel while consulting this Divine oracle that we are guilty of "a rash putting forth of hands," nor shall we fear that "the anger of the Lord" will be "kindled against" us if, in the light of such teachings as we find there, our views of the destiny of the finally impenitent fail to meet the demands of so-called orthodoxy. We have no desire to "vindicate the character of the Deity" from any aspect in which it is presented to us in the Word of Truth; here we find Him set forth as a God of LOVE, who has "no pleasure in the DEATH of the wicked," and we would be found faithful in proclaiming to perishing mortals the declaration, from His mouth—"the soul that sinneth, it shall DIE." In echoing this solemn utterance to those who are thronging the "broad way," we find no occasion for "mental reservations" concerning its import; and in its definiteness, together with its harmony with the attributes of God, there is found a motive power, to induce obedience and love, which is utterly wanting in the terrible representations of the prevailing theory.

In the same number of the "Presbyterian" from which the notice is taken, in an editorial on "Summer Work and Summer Preaching," we find the following:—"We have some examples in modern times of ministers—like Spurgeon—who can happily blend the doctrinal and the practical, proclaiming freely, simply, yet in a manner to interest and captivate thousands of common hearers, those doctrines of our Calvinistic faith, which by their enemies have been considered above the common apprehension."

Our design in quoting the foregoing endorsement of Mr. Spurgeon, will appear at once. We have just referred to the terribleness of the common view. We now propose to let Mr. Spurgeon draw a picture of its awful horrors—might we not say its blasphemies? We do not know whether eternal misery is one of "those doctrines of" the Presbyterian's "Calvinistic faith, which by their enemies have been considered above the common apprehension." We presume it may be. At any rate, Mr. Spurgeon's happy faculty of blending "the doctridal and the practical," and his ability to proclaim "freely, simply, yet in a manner to interest and captivate thousands of common hearers," are here vouched for, and he shall now speak to our readers on the important subject under consideration. In one of his sermons, republished in this country, he uses the following language:—

"When thou diest, thy soul will be tormented alone—that will be a hell for it—but at the day of judgment thy body will join thy soul, and then thou wilt have twin hells; body and soul shall be together, each brimfull of pain, thy soul sweating in its inmost pore drops of blood, and thy body, from head to foot, suffused with agony; conscience, judgment, memory, all tortured; but more, thy head tormented with racking pains, thine eyes starting from their sockets with sights of blood and woe; thine ears tormented with

'Sullen moans and hollow groans,
And shrieks of tortured ghosts;'

Thine heart beating high with fever; thy pulse rattling at an enormous rate in agony; thy limbs cracking like the martyrs in the fire, and yet unburnt; thyself, put in a vessel of hot oil, pained, yet coming out undestroyed; all thy veins becoming a road for the hot feet of pain to travel on; every nerve a string on which the devil shall ever play his diabolical tune of Hell's Unutterable Lament; thy soul forever and ever aching, and thy body palpitating in unison with thy soul. Fictions, sir? Again, I say, they are no fictions, and as God liveth, but solid, stern truth. If God be true, and this Bible be true, what I have said is the truth, and you will find it one day to be so."

What, dear reader, shall we say of this attempt to "blend the doctrinal and the practical?" Shall we be charged with trifling if we ask what there is in this "to interest and captivate thousands of common hearers?" Our pen falters in any attempt properly to characterise such a representation as the foregoing. And yet, who will affirm that it is an exaggerated statement of the doctrine whose "difficulties" we may not seek to avoid without incurring the charge of rashness? The discourse from which the extract is taken contains also the following:—

"There is a real fire in hell, as truly as you now have a real body—a fire exactly like that we have on earth in everything except this, that it will not consume though it will torment you."

"It will not consume," says Mr. Spurgeon; —the word of God declares, "the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." Ps. 37: 20. The issue is a plain one: a mortal says that the wicked will "not consume"—God says "they shall consume." "LET GOD BE TRUE."

☞ READ the interesting article on our fourth page, headed—"There shall be wars and rumors of wars." We found it in one of our exchanges, but do not know its source.

☞ Our first editorial (written before our "Salutatory") consisted of three paragraphs, with the caption, "WHERE ARE WE?" The Harbinger copies the last two paragraphs, under the heading, "Distress of Nations," and gives credit to the "London Review!" Try again, Bro. Newman—but do not tell us this was an oversight, for we perfectly understand that already.

Bro. HENRY GREW—whom we have never seen, but have long known and loved—in a note accompanying his contributions to this number of the CRISIS, says:—

"Permit me to welcome you to your new position, with sincere supplication to our Father for all needful grace to occupy the same to his glory in the edification of his saints, and in winning souls to Jesus Christ."

Bro. J. B. COOK, of Binghamton, N. Y., in a letter dated 14th inst., writes:—

"Deliverance seems certain and soon, and altogether glorious. * * * The next event I look for is the opening scene of the great day which will bring deliverance to all the saints, Rev. 11: 15-18, 1 Cor. 15: 51, and the time of wrath follows—though nobody scarcely seems to see (so as to say) it; Rev. 15: 1-4; 15: 5, through 16, Isa. 26: 19-21; Dan. 12: 1. But the Lord he is God and needs no endorser. I must live on Him, the living bread, or perish."

The Harbinger of last week has the following items:—

"Bro. MILES GRANT has retired from the editorial chair of the World's Crisis, and Bro. RUFUS WENDELL, of Albany, has taken his place as editor of that paper. Bro. Grant is still engaged as an assistant editor. We suppose this is done to give Bro. Grant more liberty in his evangelical labors. We wish them both a hearty success in their sphere of action, and that they may be made a blessing to this corrupt age, who are waxing 'worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived.'"

☞ "Prof. C. F. Hudson, of Boston, Mass., being on a tour West, called on us on Saturday last, and on Sunday he gave two very able discourses in the New Hall, occupied by the church in this place."

2 Peter, 3: 8.

BRO. L. REIMER, Philadelphia, sends us another short extract from LUTHER'S works, taken, he says, from "an old edition of the year 1542, Vol. 1, page 569." On the above passage Luther's remarks are as follows:—

"2 Pet. 3: 8. 'One day before the Lord is as a thousand years,' etc."

"As before God there is no reckoning of time, a thousand years must be to him as one day; therefore is the first man just as near to him, as the last one, who shall be born just before the judgment day. We cannot comprehend time in any other way, but by beginning to count from Adam one year after another, until the judgment day. But before God all time is as one heap. Whatever seems long to us, is short to him, and vice versa. So man dies, his body is buried and decays, lies in the ground and knows nothing. But when the first man on the day of judgment shall arise, he will think that he had lain in the grave scarcely an hour. Then he will look around, and wonder that so many people have been born after him, of which he had not the least knowledge."

APPOINTMENTS CHANGED.—Our appointment at Syracuse, N. Y., for May 22d, and onward, is withdrawn. The one at Seneca Falls, N. Y., is changed from Monday evening, May 27th, to Wednesday evening, May 22d, and the one at Dansville, N. Y., will commence Friday evening, May 24th, instead of Wednesday evening, May 29th.

We will preach in Rochester, N. Y., Thursday evening, May 23d, if a place is provided, and we find the meeting advertised when we arrive. M. GRANT.

Book Notices.

"THE BREATH OF LIFE:" By Geo. Catlin. I have received from the publisher, John Wiley, of N. Y., (by paying for it,) as any one else can for 50 cts., a book by Geo. Catlin, the great traveller among the Indians, with the above title. Mr. C. has probably travelled more among savages, and seen more American Indians than any other live man. His book is instructive and funny withal. He notes the difference in health between savage and civilized Americans—the uncontaminated Indians being healthy, losing no children by disease, having fine teeth, etc.,—with the effeminacy of the whites, (whose teeth one Indian thought were spoiled by the lies that came over them)—and he concludes that, to a great extent, these differences arise from a different style of breathing, which is enforced by Indian mothers, and practiced by all their children. The sum and substance of the book and its concluding advice is, "SHUT YOUR MOUTH,"—thus keeping out bad air, fevers, ague, malaria, dust, impurities, etc.

The Indian women make their pappooses shut their mouths. (I wish some of the white women would, for they emit most horrible music when they are open.) When the children get their mouths open, asleep or awake, the women go and press their lips together and shut them. Through life they live with their mouths shut as much as possible. Man is the only animal that breathes through his mouth except when heated. The nose purifies the air by passing it through long, narrow, moist passages, where the dust is deposited. The mouth gulphs it down, dust and all. (☞ Snuff takers, I presume, ought to breathe through their mouths,—tobacco chewers through their noses.) The Indians sleep on their backs mainly, with a little pillow, not under the shoulders, but under the head, to throw it forward and keep the mouth shut.

The writer does not mention the use of salt, to which Beonick, an Indiana Indian Chief of much intelligence, (a salt-user, too,) attributes much of the degeneracy and feebleness of the Indians; but I am quite of the opinion that it will be well for us to heed his advice and breathe through our noses most of the time and keep our mouths shut.

I would suggest, therefore, that persons try and shut their mouths, especially consumptives; also rummies, tobacco chewers, and smokers; swearing men, scolding women, and squalling children; liars, slanderers, spouters, politicians, fools, and I had almost said some lawyers and preachers. But I forbear, and close with the advice, to KEEP YOUR MOUTH SHUT, especially in the damp, the night, the dust, and when asleep, or when disposed to say foolish things.

"A DISCUSSION on the doctrine of future punishment, between H. V. Reed, of Dixon, Ill., and V. Hull, of Walworth, Wis."

This is a closely printed 12mo. of 136 pages. It contains thirty-two speeches, sixteen on each side. I judge from a brief examination of it that it will compare favorably with other books of the kind. It appears to have been conducted with ability and interest to the close. If you wish it send 30 cts., with your address, to Eld. H. V. Reed, Dixon, Ill. He has them on hand for sale, and needs the pay for them.

"WAYSIDE GLEANINGS."—I have been perusing this little volume with deep interest. The author, Sister Fannie Parry, of Pine Avenue, Sandy Hill, has been known to the readers of the Crisis as one of its valuable contributors. Her sweet and truthful poems have, no doubt, comforted many hearts who now feel to mourn her loss. At the early age of twenty she was called to lay down her pen by the stern enemy, Death—a pen which had already done much honor to the cause of God. Some of her choicest gems of poetry, as well as many prose articles, are published in the volume, and are well worthy of perusal. Her arguments in the prose articles in behalf of truth, are weighty, evincing clear perceptions and sound mind—while a high order of talent is discernible throughout the work. No one can help loving so bold while yet so youthful an advocate for the truth. The style of the volume is quite attractive, and worthy a conspicuous place on the parlor table. It can be obtained at the Crisis office, or of Eld. J. Parry, Sandy Hill, N. Y. A. C. J.

"THE COMING CONFLICT: With the inquiry—Ought Christians to bear arms? A discourse delivered at Chapman (Large) Hall, Sunday morning, May 12th, 1861, by P. B. Morgan. Published by request. Boston: Redding & Co." Price 5 cts. each; $3.00 per hundred. For sale at this office.

We are informed that the above work has just been put to press, contains twenty-four pages, and will be out in a few days. We trust it will be found a desideratum in these times of war.

For the Crisis.

From the Prairie.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me again to speak to the children at the east through the Crisis. Through the merciful care of our heavenly Father, we have been permitted to arrive in safety at our home in the great west, and commence the work of preaching the gospel of the kingdom;—and as there are many in the east with whom I have labored that would be glad to know my situation, and the prosperity of the cause in Ill., I take the opportunity of addressing them through our much loved paper. Our place of residence is about ninety-seven miles south west of Chicago, in the town of Lamoille, and what was a few years ago an unbroken prairie, but now for miles around under a state of cultivation. We live in a pleasant, quiet place, away from the bustle of town or city, in the midst of Nature's own loveliness. Blest retreat for the weary preacher, where he can commune with God, and prepare for a new struggle with the enemy, or to speak a cheering word to the weary saint of God. God has bestowed his blessing on the soil, but he has withheld the beautiful New England forests and pearly streams from this fair land, and we miss the sparkling brook and forest shade. But God hears prayer and gives us peace, blessed be his holy name.

I have travelled but little in the State as yet; have visited the church in Amboy, Lee Co.; found them united, strong in the faith of the gospel, looking for Jesus soon to come. This is the place of our Conference in May. They worship in Mechanic's Hall. The next place I visited was Earlville, Lasalle Co., and Shabona Grove, DeKalb Co., with my brother, who has been contending against the fables of the last days, wherever an opportunity offered, for the last four years. We started Friday, Apr. 26, on a tour to those places; and rode over rolling prairie and deep sloughs; arrived at Earlville about night, when our spirits were refreshed by the hearty welcome we received. We spoke to a good congregation in the evening, in the Methodist church, on the coming crisis. We made it our home with R. Snow, of Mass., an old friend and neighbor, whose kindness will not soon be forgotten. The few that are looking for the blessed hope in this place are struggling for the kingdom. May God bless them and give them admittance there. From this place we went to Shabona Grove, passing through East Paw Paw Grove, the most beautiful place I have seen in the west. We arrived just at night at Bro. Norton's, the pilgrim's home. We found them waiting for us, and we were welcomed to that almost New England home in the skirts of Shabona Grove, where oft the weary pilgrim has rested his frame before. Preached in the evening, on the signs of the times, to an attentive congregation. Men are becoming convinced that there is a crisis just at hand. God grant that they may see that it is the coming of Christ to judgment, and prepare for it. Sunday morning, preached again on the inheritance of the saints—a large congregation present; there seemed to be an interest in the great truths of the gospel. My prayer to God is that the people may see that the covenant and promise of Jehovah give Christ and his church the land, purified and made the habitation of the saints in light. In the afternoon my brother preached on the resurrection of the dead; in the evening I preached again in the town of Clinton. Quite a number are looking for the Lord in this place, and seem inclined to labor in earnest for God. May the Lord direct them into all truth, and give them the kingdom at last. Here we met Bro. Spencer, who also is a preacher.

The Grove and place takes its name from Shabona, an Indian chief, who resided here long after his tribe had been swept away. He was a friend to the whites, and served them in the Black Hawk war. We visited with subdued feelings the log house of the Indian chief, a relic of the past; and as we thought of a once powerful race, now almost extinct, we were forcibly impressed with the transitory state of earthly things. No more is the grove lighted by his council fires; no more will he slake his thirst from the creek that passed by his door. We left the haunt of the old Indian, thanking God that the time was so soon coming when the Prince of peace shall reign and give life and immortality to the tried and tempted saints of God. Pray for us, that God may give us health, and bless our efforts to do good.

☞ We must first learn to be silent before we can properly learn to speak.

For the Crisis.

Faith's View of the Christian's Glory.

The view taken by faith is that given by the Great Teacher and his apostles, John 17; Eph. 1 to 3. The measure of this glory is so set forth as to exhaust all language, all comparison, and all conception! It is "the fullness" of the glory of Jesus—"all the fullness of God!" Eph. 3: 15-19; John 1: 16; 14: 23; 15: 9-15; 17: 22. "The glory which thou gavest me I have given them"—they "shall be like Him"—"fashioned like unto His glorious (glorified) body!" Phil. 3: 11.

The relation and likeness of the church to the Messiah is set forth by that of Eve to Adam—of the bride to the Bridegroom. Eph. 5: 32; John 3: 29.

He who hath "in all things the pre-eminence" is "the first born" of the Most High. Luke 1: 31-35; Rom. 8: 30; Col. 1: 15-18; but those now "begotten (and yet to be born) again into the image of the heavenly" are "the many brethren—the household (family) of God!"

Further proof might be furnished; but my aim is not argument. The echo of the voice of God is enough for testimony, and testimony is now my sole object. "If they believe not" God—"neither would they believe though one rose from the dead." On this grand theme please observe,

1. That this testimony is from on high. It needs no endorsement—no other authorisation. These are the crowning and ever accurate statements of God Almighty as to the christian's future glory. It is enough! "Return to thy rest, O my soul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee!"

2. Doubt and opposition as to these parts of truth are as un-worthy and unholy as they would be to the Messiahship of Jesus. Both stand or fall with the testimony of God. Amen.

3. These plain, oft-repeated and positive portions of truth place "the church of the first born" with Christ in "pre-eminence." They are (to be manifested) the sons—the heirs of God—co-heirs with Jesus! Hence they will yet be "kings and priests" with the Melchisedek king! Some having "authority over ten cities—five cities," and the apostles over "the twelve tribes of Israel." Amen! "The root of Jesse shall rise to reign (be king) over the nations."

J. B. C.

The Clouds that precede the coming of the Son of Man.

Cotton Mather in his "Magnalia," says of John Eliot, the famous apostle to the Indians, that "when any bad news arrived, his usual reflection thereupon would be, 'Behold some of the clouds in which we must look for the coming of the Son of man.'"—See Time of the End, p. 330.

Mather also says of him, "While he was thus making his retreat out of this evil world, his discourses from time to time ran upon 'the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ;' it was the theme which he still had recourse unto, and we were sure to have something of this, whatever other subject he were upon. On this he talked, on this he prayed, for this he longed," Ib.

There can be no more suitable theme for conversation, than the coming of the Son of man. It being a great, a glorious, and a near reality, why should we not converse respecting it, and pray and long for it? And when we look ahead and see the threatening aspect of the nations, and our land convulsed with insurrection and rebellion, why should it not cause us to turn our thoughts, like that missionary of the cross, to the Redeemer, to the coming of Him, who will ere long put an end to all contention and strife, to all treason and madness, and will inaugurate his own chosen reign of peace and righteousness!—coming in person and reigning from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth.

We cannot know beforehand just how much trial and contest this world must witness before it passes through its purgatorial fires, and we know our readers wish us to make no assertions any farther than we can read them in the revealed word. But should it please God to involve this entire globe in a condition of anarchy, by causing every recognized government upon it to drop the scepter, we do not see that it would be anything more than is brought to view in the symbol of the smiting of the Image, by the stone in Daniel 2d; the smiting of which must show a crumbling to pieces of all dynasties—the removal of the unregenerate from the earth, being symbolized by the sweeping away, like chaff by the wind, of the triturated constituents of the Image.

Whilst, therefore, we may not know what lulls there may be in the storm, what calms in the tempest, or what conquests, conciliations or reconstructions there be before the end, it will be well to keep ever in mind the coming of the Son of man, as the termination of all this turmoil, and to look with Eliot, upon this as among the clouds that precede his coming.—Advent Herald.

☞ Rev. Albert Barnes, being inclined to sleep during a dull sermon, a friend who was with him joked him on having nodded now and then. Dr. B. insisted that he had been awake all the time. "Well, then," said his friend, "can you tell me what the sermon was about?" "Yes, I can," he answered, "it was about an hour too long."

A New Theological Seminary.

We find the question on our table, and pass it along, whether another school for the prophets is not needed. Many churches have great and protracted difficulty in obtaining a pastor who is fitted to their peculiar wants and wishes. One church has very nice shadings, perhaps overclouding, in its theology. Another is so given to practical godliness that it cannot receive any doctrinal preaching, like a pilot so intent on the practical duties of the helm that he cannot give any attention to charts and reckonings. Yet another church would captivate and convert (to pew occupants at least) certain outsiders, who rank sermonizing among the fine arts, and the pulpit as a baptized lyceum. The circumstances of another church are very peculiar. They are surrounded by Arminians, Restorationists, Unitarians, etc. They would draw all these into a Broad Church Evangelical. A young man of popular talent, prepossessing appearance, (good physique, we think the churches watching for pastors call it,) silent on doctrines, progressive, devout in attitudes and intonations, would answer their purpose. The First Avenue Church is destitute. Under the former pastor this church did nothing but sustain its regular meetings and the common charities of the day, make small and frequent additions to its numbers, and live a common Christian life. But they could not pay their pastor, and so sent him away. They want a smart young man, and are not particular about the salary. The Pilgrim Rock Church is in want of a man. During the presidential campaign their house was closed, except for the discussion of "great questions." "What must I do to be saved?" was not one of them. The election is now over, the times are dull, and they propose to have a revival. Deacon Eli, one of the officers in this church, wants a man of great power; for his sons, Hophni and Phineas, give him some anxiety. They want a man who has always produced a revival in his six and twelve months' settlements. A new and fashionable church, in a growing place, feels the need of a man a little above medium size, dark complexion, heavy whiskers, and perhaps moustache. The latter point cannot be settled till after the next levee. If he have all but the moustache, and they settle it to have it, they consent to close the house while he tarries at Jericho the time requisite. The Polygon Church wants a man so smart and so feeble, that he can preach but seldom. A pale, thoughtful recluse, who has strength to see only the principal families, and has a German reputation, would be preferred. If his health requires a trip to Europe, while they shut up the church for six months, and pay his expenses, it will suit them, for "a good name is better than precious ointment."

It is proposed to found a Seminary that will furnish custom-made ministers. From four to eighteen months, according to the specialities in the order, would suffice to get up the article, while many a church has spent three years in hearing candidates and criticizing, and then got nothing but a minister of the Gospel.

It is an open question, whether or not to have any creed, even one for "substance of doctrine," in this new Seminary. For it is found that a definite creed, as the Westminster, is a special hindrance to settlement. Yet nothing serves so well as a basis on which to beget confidence, funds, professorship, etc. But we leave the whole question open, as we found it.—Boston Review.

Good Lord, give us men to preach the word! Strong men, good men, bold men, mighty men, live men! H. L. H.

Correspondence.

From Sr. E. S. Willard.

The Lord is doing a work here in "the highways and hedges," bless his holy name. We heard a man pray last night who has for the last ten years been given over to the demon—Alcohol. But, bless the Lord, Christ is stronger than Bacchus or Belial! Such a scene of rejoicing and shouting I have not witnessed for many years. And it did seem to me, if that long trodden-down wife had not praised God, that the stones would have cried out. Pray, friends, that this last call may be heeded.

Hammonton, N. J., May 8.

From Sr. Annie Thomas.

Bro. Wendell:—Feeling unusually impressed to write a few lines for your paper, and believing that I have the good Spirit, I will endeavor to obey its calling—praying the Lord to direct. I have often felt it duty to say a few words to the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, but have ever neglected until now; and feeling the most unworthy of God's children, I have excused myself from time to time. Brethren and sisters, we are living in perilous times, and if we would stand fast in the liberty of the gospel, wherewith Christ has made us free, and be prepared for the coming of Christ, we must obey God in all things. "Behold, the judge standeth before the door." O, let us take unto ourselves the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil; and, truly, our weapons of warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of the strong holds of Satan. Praise the Lord! Jesus is the captain of our salvation; he leads the army, and he is sure to gain the victory. How I long to meet the redeemed of God in that blessed land where there will be no more parting; where the wicked will cease from troubling and the weary will be at rest.

Brethren and sisters, pray for the little church here in Fairhaven. We are as sheep without a shepherd, having no minister to preach for us. We often feel discouraged, but God is with us, and we are determined to press our way on toward the kingdom. Though dark the way may seem at times, there is light beaming from the word of the Lord that assures us that the day is at hand. Soon the trump will sound, and we, if faithful, shall hear the welcome plaudit—"Come, ye blessed of my Father!" God grant that we may be among that happy number, is my prayer.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in North Attleboro, Mass., May 16th, Bro. Harmon Holmes, aged fifty-eight years.

Bro. Holmes formerly belonged to the Methodist Church. He was one of the first in the Advent movement of '43, and he continued steadfast in the faith of the word of the Lord as it reads. To him it was "a lamp to his feet and a light unto his path." His sickness was of a chronic character, and most of the time for six months very painful; all of which he bore with much patience. At the last, he expressed unshaken confidence in his Savior, believing that he will raise him up at the last day.

Our brother has left a companion and several children, who are greatly afflicted by this bereavement. May the God of the widow and of the fatherless watch over and guide them in the way of peace and safety, and finally bring them into that rest that remains for the children of God.

The funeral was attended by the subscriber, and a discourse given to a large congregation, from the words, "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." John 11: 25. J. S. White.

Died, in Chelsea, Mass., 13th inst., of scarlet fever, Charles Sumner, son of Bro. B. G. and Sr. Mary B. Getchell, aged ten months and twenty days.

Another bud of sweet unfolding has been nipped by the untimely frost,—another treasure hidden in the insatiate grave. Truly,

"Thou hast all seasons for thine own, oh death!"

But there is sweet hope and comfort left to the desolate when the innocent die. The eternal future shall restore them, glorified and immortalized—the chill and mold of death never to terrify affection again. The promise which the dear gift of earthly love inspired, shall have its heavenly fulfillment, when the redemption of man shall be complete, and sin and suffering have been forever banished from the world.

Let your hearts be comforted, stricken parents, having your trust in the arm of the Lord. May his presence fill the dreary void the enemy has made, and give you patience to await his will, believing that he will order all things well.

> "Can we forget the buds that wove,
> Bright garlands round our tent?
> The links that from our chain of love
> By death's stern grasp were rent?
> * * * * * * *
> We call them lost, but thou, our God,
> Shalt guard their peaceful sleep,
> And in thy casket of the sod
> The rich deposit keep,
> And bid the grave each atom tell
> Thou'st to its charge hast given,
> And raise our 'sown in tears' to swell
> The harvest-song of Heaven."

Boston, May 18th. M. Augusta Grant.

Fell on sleep and was gathered to his fathers, in Collinsville, Ct., Orlando M., son of Samuel M. and Hannah R. Tatro, aged fourteen years, three months and twelve days.

Orlando was a very active and intelligent lad, and gave great promise for the future; but he has been

> "Nipped by death's untimely blast,
> While in the bud."

The disease of which he died was congestion of the brain. He was taken sick on Thursday evening, and on Friday his last conscious act was to impart the kiss of affection on the cheek of a beloved parent. On Sunday morning death put an end to his suffering, and his fond parents, together with one brother and three sisters, are left to mourn his premature death, but in their affliction the word of the Lord gives them the comforting assurance that ere long death shall be robbed of his prey and the grave of its victims, and then Orlando will live again, and, we hope, live to die no more forever. May the Lord bless and sanctify this affliction to the lasting good of the entire family, and bring them all into his kingdom at last. Amen. C. Goodrich.

Died, of epileptic fits, May 14th, 1861, Mary Jane, daughter of Eld. Wm and Sarah Sweet, aged fifteen years and seven months, lacking one day.

She was sensitive on religious subjects when a young child, although her disease, which was one of the heart and commenced when about two years old, had impaired her mental faculties. She could read, and spent hours in the chamber reading the blessed Word. She often prayed with us in family prayer, and strictly observed secret prayer. It seemed like the simple language of fervent sincerity, and will long be remembered by the lone writer of this notice. May God bless her dear parents, brothers and sisters, and her kind neighbors, that we may all meet in that home where we shall rest. She lost her voice for singing, but frequently said God was going to give her a new voice. Her fits were frequent and most distressing, particularly the last attack, till the last enemy, death, had nearly completed its work. She then sweetly fell asleep in Jesus till He shall come to rouse the slumbering dead.

Died, in Low Hampton, N. Y., April 21st, 1861, of congestion of the brain, Emma A. daughter of Harrison and Anna Phelps, in her fifteenth year.

The subject of this notice was of a mild, affectionate disposition, beloved by all who knew her. She was confined to her room about two weeks; and although for most part of the time she suffered much distress of body, yet in the closing up of life she passed away like one going to sleep, without a groan or struggle. Her friends used every means within their reach for her recovery, but human skill was unavailing. When death calls, its mandate must be obeyed. The enemy makes no compromise. Soon after she was taken sick, her mother asked her if she loved the Savior. She replied in the affirmative, and expressed a desire to love him more. The deep sorrow and grief of those called to part with a beloved child and an affectionate sister, none can realize fully, save those who have passed through the affliction. But the evidence she gave of her love to the Savior is a comfort and solace to them in their bereavement. They sorrow not as those who have no hope. Hope looks beyond the grave, when friends shall meet again in that sorrowless state where > "There is no sorrow, nor any sighing,

> Nor any tears there, nor any dying!"

O glorious prospect! Cheer up! afflicted ones; that loved one who has died in hope you will meet again, where no farewell tear is shed.

The funeral was attended on the 23d. Elder G. W. Burnham preached an interesting discourse on the occasion from Phil 3: 11. D. S. A.

Advent Herald, please copy.

Died, at North Springfield, Vt., May 4th, 1861, Sister Lucy Spaulding, widow of John Spaulding, aged forty-eight years.

Her disease was a cancer in her right side. The cancer made its appearance first about one year since. All medical aid seemed to be useless, while its rage increased, even to the last. The latter part of her life was attended with much pain and suffering, which she patiently bore.

Sister Spaulding espoused the cause of Christ some twenty years or more since. She united with the Methodist church, and remained with them until 1844, when she received the good news of Jesus Christ soon coming to earth again, and life only through Him. She fell asleep with a good hope and strong faith that she should awake in the morning of the first resurrection to suffer and die no more. In compliance with her wishes, I attended her funeral and spoke to a good attendance from 2 Sam. 14: 14. S. Cook.

"My daughter is even now dead."

Never was the sad truth expressed by these words more forcibly impressed upon my mind than a few days since, when I received a telegraphic despatch to attend the funeral of sister Isabel Storer, daughter of Bro. Thomas M. and Sister Alice Storer, of Brunswick, Me., who fell asleep in Jesus the 6th inst., aged twenty-five years six months.

For several years it has been my privilege to be acquainted with the family of which our Sister was a member. Of the many endearing remembrances of past enjoyments with them, none are more valuable to my heart than those relating to the time when Isabel gave her heart to the Savior, and with others obeyed her Lord in the ordinance of baptism. Being of a very diffident temperament, Isabel was a Sister of but few words. Yet her christian deportment, her love of Jesus and his truth, ever told that she was a "pilgrim and stranger" upon the earth. None knew her but to love the christian graces she manifested. Fondly had the father and mother, brothers and sisters, hoped that Isabel would live till Jesus shall come, but, alas! the family circle has been broken, and one strong tie has been severed. Our beloved Sister has fallen by the cold hand of the "King of Terrors." Yet she is

> "Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
> From which none ever wake to weep."

Hard as it is for this dear family to be thus bereft, they have the blessed gospel hope that their loved one will soon awake to eternal life. O, what "blessed hope" is this! How it assuages the grief of the heart-stricken relatives, "and bids them joyful be." May this hope ever sustain the surviving ones who are left to weep over the grave of their beloved daughter and sister, is my prayer.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

PER STEAMSHIP PERSIA.

St Johns, N. F., May 20. It is confidently asserted that letters of marque had reached Liverpool and London. It was reported that vessels have left Liverpool with letters of marque, but the report is not confirmed.

Lord Derby expressed a hope in the House of Lords, that the forthcoming proclamation by the government will give emphatic warning that if British subjects join privateers, or become involved on either side, their blood will be on their own heads, as they can expect no redress from England. Lord Granville said that would be the natural result of the proclamation, which was only delayed in order that its wording might be carefully considered. It is reported that preparations are being made to hold an American Union meeting in London. The Times editorially says the mediation of England might as well be offered to a hurricane of the gulf of Mexico as to the States of America.

The War risks at Lloyds are unchanged. French political news is unimportant. The Turin Opinione says the time has come for France to officially recognize the new Kingdom of Italy, and calls on Napoleon to do so. Commander Martino will succeed Prince Carignani as the King's Lieutenant at Naples. It is reported that there are renewed symptoms of insurrection in Hungary. Spain has not yet entered into arrangements for annexing St. Domingo to her dominions, but it is announced that slavery will not be introduced.

There had been a religious insurrection in Kanzan, Russia, during which seventy peasants were shot.

The Calcutta, China and Australia mails had been telegraphed, and would probably reach London in season for the American mails by the Persia.

DOMESTIC.

New York, May 19. A special dispatch to the Herald states that the garrison at Fort Monroe is to consist of about 3000 men. A camp of between fifteen and twenty thousand men is to be created outside of the fortress, under Gen. Butler.

It is understood that all the forces now enrolled and offered in various States that will serve for three years, will be accepted.

The rebels of Virginia have been supplying themselves via River Rappahannock. The fact was discovered by one of General Butler's brigade and the river blockaded.

A rebel battery was discovered within a few days at Matthias Point, on the Virginia side of the Potomac. The battery was on too high land to be successfully attacked by a ship of war, but the rebels there will soon be dispersed from another direction.

A dispatch to the Tribune says that Richmond is the point of an early attack.

General Cooke has 6000 well armed troops at Culpepper, expecting an early attack. Scattered between there and Alexandria are nearly 3000, who are not expected to show fight until they have retreated on the main body at Culpepper. It is considered by military authorities that the proper course will be to march direct to Culpepper, and thence, if possible, to Charlottesville, where there are now 2500 troops, and thence to Lynchburg, as may be deemed best. Forces will also be dispatched by Acquia Creek, and a large force by way of Norfolk, so that on all sides Richmond will be invested. Probably the first encounter will be at Culpepper.

A dispatch to the Times states that ex-Governor Wise of Virginia is seriously ill.

The New York Eighth Regiment will be sworn in on Monday for the war.

Chambersburg, Pa., May 18. Heavy reinforcements are expected here when the troops march South.

A deserter, who was impressed at Culpepper Court House and went from thence to Harper's Ferry, has arrived here. He states that the captain of his company ordered the men to husband their powder and percussion caps, as they only had enough to fire five rounds. The rebels had only five brass field-pieces, the rest being old iron pieces, and they were short of provisions. Out of 7000 only 2000 were armed.

Judge Mason, late Collector at Baltimore, was arrested here to-day. He says he came to Chambersburg to see if the people would buy four negro children, whose father he emancipated. He is under arrest awaiting instructions from Washington.

Chambersburg, Pa., May 19. Judge Mason was released to-day.

A deserter from Harper's Ferry, named Stanley, belonging in Ohio, says there were but twelve cannon there on Thursday night. The Confederate troops on Friday night killed seven hogs and drove off three head of cattle belonging to a farmer in Maryland, three miles below the Ferry. They have committed similar depredations in Maryland for ten miles above the Ferry daily.

The troops here expect marching orders southward every day, and will certainly occupy Hagerstown in a few days.

Unionists who have been driven out of Virginia are arriving here daily. They tell sorrowful stories of their experience.

Washington, May 19. Gen. Butler will proceed to-morrow to take command of the department of Virginia, which includes all of that State this side of the Blue Ridge, and both the Carolinas.

The troops now accepted by government number no less than two hundred and thirty thousand, which, with the available force of the Navy, brings the number up to a quarter of a million of men.

Government will take possession of Arlington Heights on Wednesday, with a force of ten thousand men.

Grove Meeting.

A Grove meeting will be held at West Point, Wis., commencing on Friday, 2 o'clock, P. M., and hold over Lord's day following. Several ministers will be present. Let the scattered saints come to the feast.

W. Sheldon.

Bro. Sheldon—We publish your notice just as it came to us, but it fails to state where the meeting is to be held! It may be too late to publish a corrected notice before the meeting.—Ed.

Notice.

After consulting some of the brethren, it is thought best to postpone our meeting of the 22d (on account of the war spirit running so high just at this present time) until some future time, as Bro. Grant may arrange.

By request of Bro. Grant,

Syracuse, N. Y. C. B. Turner.

Notice.

Our Quarterly Conference at the Pitcher School house, in Utica, Winona Co., Minn., is adjourned to Saturday, June 1st, at 10 o'clock, A. M., to continue over Sunday following. Brethren from a distance are requested to attend. Eld. Wm. Sweet.

Herald, please copy.

Conference.

Providence permitting, a conference of believers in the gospel will be held at Ypsilanti, Mich., in the Advent Disciple chapel, commencing Friday, at 2 o'clock, P. M., May 31st, to continue over Lord's day following. Eld. A. N. Seymour and wife are expected to aid in preaching the word of life to the people. We also invite all ministering brethren who can to meet with us. We hope and expect to see brethren and friends from Salem, Northfield, Nankin, Adrian, etc., at this meeting. Come, brethren, do make especial effort to get out to this meeting and confer with us what can be done for the cause of our coming King in Eastern Mich. That King is coming speedily; therefore, what we do for him in this life must be done now. Come praying and trusting in God that his work may prosper. Strangers coming to this meeting will inquire for Bro. B. S. Weller and Amasa Scoville. By order of the Church,

J. A. Sober.

Western N. Y. General Association.

The Annual Meeting of this Association will be held at Seneca Falls, to commence on Thursday, June 6, 1861, at 7 1-2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the following Sunday. All are invited to attend.

Arrangements will be made by the Church at this place to accommodate all who come with bed and board. Let all come by railroad who can, as it will be more inconvenient to provide for teams than mankind. However, let all come, and we will provide as best we can. Some two or more of our eastern elders are expected, and we desire more, nay all who can and will come, both east and west—both male and female.

Come, brethren, let us meet once more in love and harmony and worship before the Lord, as it were on the very threshold of the "time of trouble."

B. B. Schanck, President.

T. G. Newman, Secretary.

Discussion.

I am to hold a discussion with Rev. Jacob Baker in Wales, commencing the first Tuesday evening in June, and continuing four evenings and days, if thought best.

Questions.—1. Will all men live forever? 2. Will any portion of mankind cease to be?

For the Crisis.
Lines.
BY MARIA MATHEWS.

"Take care of yourself. Dress well, and be seen in the world. This working for the poor, in a poor world, for poor people, brings poor pay, and if continued in, will bring you all to the poor house."—Brother R.

Friends warn me of danger as onward I go,
The cases of sad hearts in lone hovels to know;
But Jesus, my Master, would visit the place,
And happy am I, whose footsteps to trace.

The pride of the world and the lovers of gold
Would tempt me by pleasures unnumbered, untold,
And fashion looks out from the windows of earth
And tries to allure me with things without worth.

The honor of men and the pencil of fame
Are waiting to write in bright colors my name;
But not to your pages my name shall be given,
I pray it may stand on the record in heaven.

When foes firmly stand, or when dangers appear,
When false friends forsake and destruction is near,
Ah! then would I stand, most determined to fight,
The Lord my salvation, my shield and my might.

O hinder me not, for I'm bearing my cross,
Your pride and your pomp are the relics of dross;
I love to walk lowly, as Jesus commands,
And bear gifts and burdens in merciful hands.

I love to come down where I'm driven to pray,
"O God, give me bread for this cold, chilly day!"
To feel what I need and expect a supply,
I want to do good in the world till I die.

The Master will come with his servants to count,
He'll pay every steward his honest amount;
I'll work with all might, that my balance may be,—
"Well done, faithful servant,—come reign now with me!"

For the Crisis.
Backsliding.

In almost every era of the church, her growth has been retarded and her grace marred by this parasite. In the early ages this painful, appalling spectacle was but too frequently and lamentably manifested. Numbered with the twelve apostles was a Judas who betrayed his Lord. Demas, "having loved this present world," forsook Paul; and among those to whom he preached the words of an endless life, were foolish Galatians, and apostate Corinthians. But while the church may mourn that such go out from her, may she not rejoice that they were not of her consecrated number, and that "the Lord knows them that are His."

Relaxing his grasp upon the standard of faith and works, step by step, the backslider passes down the delusive plain, acting under a law of subversive progression, until he at length finds himself bound and captivated by the Adversary of all goodness. Perhaps, at times, he desires to return to his lost position; but his intention being too often indecisive and future, the bonds of his captivity become more and more unyielding, and he is found less able to extricate himself to-day than yesterday, and will be less able to-morrow than to-day; thus, wholly impotent in himself, nothing but the power of God can effect his rescue.

Thus, if we remit our fervency in regard to even one known and positive duty, we become thereby more and more susceptible of omission, till we stumble upon the dark mountains, become engrossed with the cares and pleasures that belong wholly to the domain of earth, and forfeit our allegiance to the sovereign Redeemer. Such appears to have been the state of the Laodicean church, and such, we have too great reason to believe, is the state of the church in many places at the present time; occupying a kind of neutral ground, not wholly denying the form of religion, nor pressing on to the promised glories of immortal life. How deplorable the condition of such as have a name to live, while they are already dead to real piety. As fatal as the samiel of the desert, is the influence of such to the vitality of pure religion. Like stumbling-blocks in the King's highway, they seem to defeat the prosperity of Zion. Around the family hearth-stone of such, no voice of prayer is heard; and their food is eaten unblessed. No consecrated closet witnesses the effusions of hearts broken and contrite, ascending like acceptable incense before the throne of Him that seeth in secret.

Is it thus, that we are to wait and desire the appearing of our soon-coming Lord?

A Cheering Thought.

In these days of rebellion and war, when nations and governments are being shaken, it is cheering to think that soon there will be set up a Kingdom which cannot be shaken, a Government against which there will be no rebellion. The African will be there, but not to be enslaved and trampled in the dust. No, blessed be God! oppression can never enter that fair land; "wars and rumors of wars" will no more be heard, for then "the meek shall inherit the earth: and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Amen. Lord, hasten the day. GEO. W. LEWIS.

☞ Mr. Rogers, a Puritan divine, was styled the Enoch of his day. Bishop Kennet said of him, that England hardly ever brought forth a man who walked so closely with God. He was always remarkable for gravity and seriousness in company. Being once addressed by a gentleman of rank, "Mr. Rogers, I like you and your company well enough, but you are too precise." "O, sir," replied Mr. Rogers, "I serve a precise God!"

"Ministerial Rascality."

I want a new subscriber for the Crisis. One man has stopped his paper because of my article on "Ministerial Rascality." Now I don't want the paper to go down, and I wish some one would get another paying subscriber in the place of the disaffected one. It appears that shot took effect. One man from the west wrote me approving it. I hear of another man, who has been charged with visiting his jug oftener than his closet, grumbling about his "character" being attacked. Another one has commenced a law suit against a man who brought him up to the mark, and bases his action upon a confidential letter which he came by, either dishonestly or dishonorably. He expects heavy damages no doubt. I hope he may have a good time.

Well, gentlemen, go ahead! show yourselves! We want to set the battle in array. We are not fighting men, but we are not disposed to be bullied or bluffed by a set of ungodly miscreants, who make their religion only a cloak for their many devil-tries. God's cause and truth bleed, at pocket and at heart, because of the ungodliness of mere plunderers, who can "gab," but have no moral principle. Men who get in debt, cheat their creditors, drink rum, and commit debaucheries—who wax fat with good living at others' tables, and with laziness that keeps them from working to earn their own bread.

One man wrote me from away on the banks of the Mississippi, after reading my discourse on the "Qualifications for the christian service," calling for a preacher—such a man as I had described, especially in the second particular, i. e., a man who was HONEST!! I know some such men, thank God, but they are needed all around, and cannot be spared as I see. Pray God to send out more of them, and men too who will do something for God and truth, rather than dispute, snarl, grumble and find fault, and peddle more perverse questions and disputings than a busy man has time to think of, or talk about. I heard of one such who was boasting that he had "tripped up" H. L. H. in an argument. This might be; it isn't very hard, I presume, though it was done so gently that I did not know when, where, or how it was accomplished. The worst tripping up I have from such men is some $500 worth of books scattered about, a score of which they have bought and never paid for, and probably never will. That "trips me up," lays me flat on my back, and sends me out to borrow money to pay my own bills, and keep square and honest with the world and before God.

One word more. Churches must put their hand on rascals among them, whether in the ministry or elsewhere. If private interviews do not answer to convert him from his faults, "tell it to the church." Don't send a rascal off to impose on others in distant regions, and so fleece the flock of God. Beware of "conference white-washings," and if you exclude a man for good and sufficient causes, then if any conference countenances him, or if any newspaper knowingly gives him currency after good and sufficient notice, let them bear the responsibility. Take care also who you ordain, and who you approve. "Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker's of other men's sins. Keep thyself pure." May God keep us pure.

For the Crisis.
Is it So?

Says the prophet: "Prepare to meet thy God." Amos 4: 12. Circumstances surround men's lives with obligations not to be ignored with impunity. The very nature of his destiny clothes him with responsibilities that must be met. It is true he may become inured to procrastination and inordinate lusts; but no natural propensity of the heart may assume the prerogative of nullifying a well demonstrated fact. Death may become a by-word to some men's ears and hearts by constant repetition, and a stolid indifference the result of another observed truth; yet the declaration of God, "Thou shalt surely die," is just as much believed as though the thunders of Jupiter echoed it in the ear with unceasing terror.

From this fact alone, as it presents itself a stepping-stone towards an unknown future, there is a great, noble incentive for man to progress in moral and religious excellence; but as a question of revealed destiny, is the forth-coming event less worthy of a fitting reception? It is recorded by the apostle of Jesus Christ, that by a personal manifestation of himself he "brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." Now whether men's lives are proverbial for merit or de-merit, is no part of the argument; but as a gospel dispensation, is it not rather an unmerited grace, hitherto withheld by the absence of a redemption, but now made an attainable boon by the advent, death and resurrection of the Son of God? If this concession is granted, where, I ask, is the present prevailing immortality of the patriarchs and martyrs for God? What! immortality without a resurrection from the dead? I desire this point met. 1 Cor. 15: 16, 18. "For if the dead rise not, then they which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."

Why should a race of already condemned culprits desire to abrogate a law enacted by God for the salvation of a lost world? Their hope is an unceasing struggle to attain their individual perfection. Why not arrive at it on the specified terms of the gospel? The plan is broad enough, but, as already granted, based on the work of Christ. It is philosophical, inasmuch as the requisition it makes is in the closest congruity with the plan itself. God has never in his history of dealings among men thrust upon them an unconditional destiny; but, upon the hypothesis that God is unchangeable, precaution has been a fostered attribute duly exercised in his moral government. Ezk. 18: 32, "I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth; wherefore turn and live ye, saith the Lord God." Such an announcement evolves the whole scheme in the light of an universal privilege. And Christ, John 5: 40, "And ye will not come to me that ye might have life,"—manifestly preferring the courts of sin and its wages, death, than the gratuitous gift attainable by simple obedience. Is any one with a smattering of theology prepared to successfully demonstrate the eternity of evil from the passages in question? If so, let them ask themselves: Do I believe? Am I willing to accede to the authenticity of the gospel? And, finally, do the Scriptures teach man's immortality in the absence of Christ? If answered in the affirmative, was not the object of Christ's mission premature and uncalled for? And why is "the gift of God eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord?

Honesty, as a virtue, becomes a mountain of light, around which all lesser graces cluster; and the christian that knows God through a system of revealed laws and promises,—that has been inducted into the mysteries of that higher life by the washing of regeneration,—will spurn a philosophical dogma as a viper that saps the life-blood from its victim. Such an one only prays that the light of the Divine Transcript, in its simplicity, may be the chart that is to guide him through life's howling wilderness, until the sun of life shall set upon his pathway. To be sure, popular errors may have been infused into his heart by force of instruction, until they have become maxims of theology; but God's truth, as revealed through Christ, his apostles, and the prophets, should be the moulding of opinion that relates to his spiritual concerns. There is no practical evidence of spiritual relation between God and man, except through the requisitions he makes upon him. Jno. 5: 39, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life." Do this honestly, candidly, and prayerfully, setting aside previous notions of unproved precepts, and, if necessary, bury in eternal oblivion the friendship of former social relations, for the sake of Christ and his doctrines. Those things are at enmity with God.

The worth of immortality may never demonstrate itself to man from incidental causes. God's plans are absolute in themselves, and salvation, the greatest of them all, becomes a shelter of hope only as the candidate resolves himself into a salvable condition. "This do, and live," is the requisition of an indulgent God. No matter what men think, or how firmly they are entrenched behind a fortress of theological speculation; for "the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." As a question of immortal life and its relations to man, prudence should be the talisman to actuate a ready conformation to the terms of the gospel. In thus doing, a well defined hope, based on the immutable promises of God alone, will be the credentials that shall induct us safely into our promised rest. C. O. C.

For the Crisis.
Light Wanted.

I find an article in the Crisis of Feb. 13th, signed "W. L. Stroud." In commenting on Luke 23: 34, "Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do," he says, the words "them" and "they" refer to the principal party concerned in the killing the Prince of life, who derided him, etc. And he says, also, that "all Israel (nationally) will be saved." I have heard the same sentiments advanced for many years, and have always been left in the dark in respect to evidence, or by what authority the assertion is made. Therefore, I request Bro. S. to answer a few questions and help me out of the dark on that subject, and not only oblige me, but many others.

1. Did Christ's Father hear and answer his prayer? 2. If so, why were the judgments of God fulfilled on those murderers? Matt. 22: 7; Luke 21: 24. 3. How, or by what virtue, can those murderers be saved? 4. Whereas God said to Moses, Ex. 32: 33, "Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book," how can those three thousand, referred to in verse 28th, and those that the earth swallowed up, and those two hundred and fifty that offered incense, Num. 16: 32–35, be saved? 5. If those Israelites that were murderers and idolaters can be saved, why may not all mankind that have died in their sins be saved, too? JOHN GIBSON.

"There shall be Wars and Rumors of Wars."

If there was ever a time when this Scripture was having a fulfillment it is to-day, for over the whole face of the earth there are either actual or threatened conflicts that call the nations to arms. Everywhere there is unusual combative activity that maps the world with hostile camps and fulfills the conditions spoken of for "the last days." For some years civil wars have existed in all the American countries south of us excepting Brazil, till they have become a chronic disease. For forty years Mexico, Central America, Venezuela, Peru, Chili and other States of more or less importance, have had internal or external conflicts that have left scarcely a day of peaceful quiet and prosperity. We had thought that their ill-temper and unhappy condition was the weaning process, when cut off from the mother country prematurely; they were disturbed in stomach, head and nerves, but would outgrow their evils and settle into national stability. Not so; they seem no better than they did a generation since; and we may doubt whether they now promise more for the future than a city infant fed on slop milk does of healthy teething. We are of a different race and training, and have enjoyed a different existence; but to us also has come war. Perhaps we ought not to have expected it otherwise, for temptations and perplexities must be needed to develope national as well as individual character. All other peoples have thus developed their internal life, and we might say in the language of Watts:

"Shall I be carried to the skies
On flowery beds of ease!
While others fight to win the prize,
And sail through bloody seas."

Still, so safe did we feel that nobody could believe that war would come, when Mars was blowing his trumpet and uttering his war-cry on all sides. But come it has: and here we go surging in the tide like other nations, and dashing on the stormy sea with as little control over our passions or destiny as had those of uncivilized or unchristian ages. Thus almost the whole American continent is following fife and drum, and striving for victories or to escape defeat.

Little better is the state of Europe. If not in actual war, every important nation hangs upon its verge or stands armed from head to foot, in preparation for it. Russia, the Great Bear of the North, has a civil revolution within herself, in her serf emancipation; she stretches one paw to Poland that is in semi-rebellion—the country filled with troops and the people daring them to fire; with the other she scratches the Asiatics from the Sea of Japan to the mountains of the Caucasus, and at the same time she wildly growls at the Porte and threatens to lap up his possession to the Bosphorus. Austria bristles all over with bayonets. She is in perpetual war to hold subdued peoples, and may any day be launched into other military troubles. Hungary groans in her mountains and demands release, and Venetia cries aloud by the sea to Italians impatient to let loose the dogs of war. So Denmark and Prussia are at variance; Italy has internal troubles—the Pope at Rome and reactionary movements at Naples, Turkey is in disruption; Spain is putting on her old armor, and looking to conquests and reconquests; France is breathing threatenings and destruction, and even England is fearful of enemies without, and may in the prostration of business fail to keep quiet within. All Europe is in war or siege, revolution or fear.

Asia is no better than other sections. From the mountains of Syria to the sea on the east, one wave follows another in quick succession, like the jars of an earthquake, and all is commotion. The blood is not yet dry on the sides of Lebanon where clan warred with clan; on the Circassian heights the watch fires of the native warriors burn as in the days of Schamyl; in India the rebellion still lingers and famine adds its destroying powers; Cochin China suffers under the French blade and bows to the French eagles; China, torn asunder by insurgent wars, gives way before the Minie rifle and the cross of St. George; and Japan, just opened to the world, is wild with the delirium of civil war.

So we go all over the earth; the nations labor and groan and God only knows what the future shall bring forth. Jeremiah, gifted with a vision of things to come, appears to have had his eye on our times, when he said: "Take the wine cup of this fury at my hand, saith the Lord God, and cause all the nations to whom I send them to drink it; and they shall drink and be moved, and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them. Then I took the cup at the Lord's hand, and made all the nations to drink. . . . . A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth; for the Lord hath a controversy with the nations; he will plead with all flesh; he will give them that are wicked to the sword. Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, Behold, evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth; and the slain shall be at that day, from one end of the earth to the other.—Ex.

Selections.

A Popular Mistake.

There is no one thing in regard to which greater misapprehensions prevail than in relation to the pulpit labors of a faithful minister. We can recollect the time when we had the idea that the minister had quite an easy time of it. We thought he was a sort of speaking machine—that all that was necessary for him to do, was to go into the pulpit and open his mouth, and the words would flow out as a matter of course,—that it was the design of colleges and theological seminaries to make preachers, and that when made they would be able to get up before a congregation, and throw off a sermon with the same facility, and with as little forethought as a mechanic would accomplish a piece of handicraft. This is, doubtless, the general impression among the masses, even of professing Christians. It is somewhat amusing, sometimes, to hear persons expressing themselves in relation to this matter. They will speak of such and such ministers as being able to preach without any preparation.

We would take occasion here to remind our readers who may have allowed themselves to be deceived in regard to this matter, that no man can preach to edification without diligent and careful premeditation and study; and that those professed ministers of the gospel who seek to create the impression on the minds of their hearers, that they are ready at any moment to preach a sermon without having made previous preparation, are either grossly deceiving their hearers, or should be regarded as no better than clerical quacks.

We freely admit that there is great diversity of talent in this, as well as in all other professions; but no amount of talent, and no gift of utterance will supersede the necessity of constant and diligent study on the part of a preacher. The word of God must be closely and sedulously investigated, if we would exhibit the mind of the Spirit, and draw from it those rich stores of truth which it contains. Now it takes time to do this, and much more time than persons of inexperience with such matters would suppose.

There is, perhaps, no profession in which there is less opportunity to exhibit the fruits of study in such a way as that they will be seen and appreciated than that of the ministry. How often does the preacher spend hours in the perusal of critical works on the precise import of a word in the original, or the true grammatical construction of a sentence, and after he has ascertained it, a single sentence will perhaps exhibit the result of all these protracted and laborious researches! Ah! Yes! hearers of the word little know the mental toil which the thought that his minister may be expressing, especially in the way of exposition, may have occasioned him.

We have called attention to this matter, not with a view of eliciting sympathy in behalf of the profession; but simply to let our readers know that the most incorrect ideas are prevalent, especially among the less informed classes of hearers, in relation to the amount of labor which the duties of the pulpit require. We refer here not to physical, but to mental labor. The former is sometimes appreciated when the latter is wholly overlooked. We have often heard persons expressing sympathy in behalf of preachers, in consequence of having had to stand so long and speak so much. Perhaps the preparation of these discourses produced, owing to the influence of the mind on the body, a far greater degree of physical exhaustion, than was caused by the bodily exercise required in the delivery. The one, however, is seen, whereas the other is known only to the individual himself.

Thoughts on 1 Cor. 15: 22.

"For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

This scripture is supposed by many to refer to the resurrection of the wicked as well as the righteous, because it is equally true of them that they die in Adam. But this conclusion is not necessary, for a thing may be affirmed of a particular class, which is equally true of another class, and yet that other class not be had in view.

The apostle in this chapter is declaring the benefits of the resurrection; but the resurrection of the wicked is not for a benefit to them. If Christ is raised, a benefit is thereby conferred on them that sleep in Jesus. "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept." Verse 20. By this the apostle would show that those who are fallen asleep in Christ are not perished, inasmuch as Christ is the first-fruits of the harvest of saints. There is no change in the argument—the next two verses begin with "For." "For since by man (Adam) came death (on those who sleep in Jesus,) by man (Christ) came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all (of the class under consideration) die, even so in Christ shall all (the same class) be made alive." But that it refers only to the saints is evident from the next verse. "But every man in his own order, Christ the first-fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." All must admit that the expression, "every man," in this last verse covers the same ground exactly as the word "all" in the verse before it, hence it cannot apply to the wicked unless they are "Christ's at his coming."

In verse 35 the query is anticipated, "How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" Now if this refers to the general dead, without distinction, Universalism follows. See Paul's answer to the query in verses 42–44. "So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption. It is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory. It is sown in weakness; it is raised in power. It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." Will the wicked be raised in "incorruption" and "glory" with "spiritual bodies?" If so, Universalism is true. If not, then the chapter has reference only to the righteous.

This view is also strengthened by the apostle's conclusion in the last verse. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not vain in the Lord."

Though the saints die "in" (by or through) Adam, yet because "in," (by or through) Christ they will be made alive, therefore their labor is not in vain in the Lord.—M. E. CORNELL.—Advent Review.

The Central Sun.

Within the last few years an hypothesis has been advanced concerning the possibility of the existence of a central sun. The investigations have been prosecuted more particularly by M. Maedler, an eminent European astronomer. The great extent of the range of influence exercised by the law of gravitation, suggested the high probability that in the assemblage of stars with which our system is connected, there is a centre of gravity around which they revolve.

In order, if possible, to establish this theory by the facts of the universe, Maedler carried out his observations of the heavenly bodies with great perseverance and ingenuity, and was induced to direct special attention to the constellation Taurus, and particularly to the star Aldebaran, which seemed to have the nearest approximation to the required conditions. He subsequently ascertained that the star Alcyone, in the group of the Pleiades, occupied the desired point.

He discovered fourteen conspicuous stars, besides many that were smaller, around this central one, and when the proper motions of all these were determined, they were found to be in the same direction, and all nearly equal to each other. Within fifteen degrees of this centre there are also sixty stars, moving south, or in accordance with the hypothesis that Alcyone is the centre, forty-nine exhibiting so well-defined motion, and only one which appears to move contrary to the computed direction. Assuming Alcyone to be the grand centre of our astral system, and the direction of the sun's motion as determined by Argelander and Struve, he investigated the consequent movements of all the stars in every quarter of the heavens.

The result of the researches of Maedler led him to the conclusion that Alcyone, the principal star in the group of the Pleiades, occupies the centre of gravity, and that around it the universe of stars composing our astral system all revolve. The distance of this star is estimated to be so immense, that the light proceeding from it would require a period of five hundred and thirty-seven years to traverse the mighty interval which separates it from the sun.—Methodist.

How to Write Easy.

Some of my readers may write for a living, or for pleasure. Now there is a right way and a wrong way, a good way and a bad way, a hard way and an easy way of doing this. It is very difficult to tell how to write without standing by the pupil and showing him how to do it. Still I will venture a few hints. Most of the teaching in schools is wrong decidedly on this point. Half the instruction about sitting, holding the pen, etc., is mere nonsense. It produces very little good effect. Persons write slowly, wearily, and in a cramped and tedious manner. To avoid this, consider the following rules:

1. Write on a flat table if you write sitting; when standing, a desk may do; but if sitting, a desk sloping towards a writer seems to me a very awkward arrangement. A flat table is far better.

2. Sit by the side of the table in such a position that your elbow will jut over the edge of the table about three or four inches.

3. Lay your paper square before you a little to the right, and sit so that the point of your elbow will be just about in a line with your back, only extended about a foot or so to the right of your body.

4. Hold your pen any way you choose; a good way is to lay it under the fore-finger and the thumb, and over the point and nail of the second finger; but, however you hold it, it will make very little difference with your writing.

5. Hold your arm in just such a position as you would if the palm of your hand lay flat upon your paper or table. Keep the back of the hand towards the top of the room, and do not turn your hand over to rest, or steady it upon your little finger.

6. Do not touch your fingers to the paper at all, or at most only allow the nails of the third and fourth finger to glide lightly over the paper. You will not need their support at all when you have learned to write.

7. Do not touch your wrist to the table or the paper at all, under any circumstances, while you write. The only place where the arm or hand is to touch the table is at the ball of the arm, some three or four inches below the elbow. This ball is to rest upon the edge of the table, forming a rolling pivot or fulcrum, on which the whole arm and hand are to be swung back and forth, and right and left.

8. Never move your fingers to form a letter while writing. This is what tires writers. The constant bending of the fingers back and forth to produce letters, wearies the writer and cramps the writing. The only use for fingers in writing is to hold the pen—not to make the letters. A man writing in this way can write just as well with a pen tied to his hand as he could with it between his fingers. The fingers should only move as his arm and hand move them. They should never be crooked and bent back and forth to form letters.

9. Holding the pen in the fingers, begin to roll the arm or move it back and forth and sideways, keeping the back of the hand upwards, the wrist off from the paper, and the fingers free; let all motion come from the roll of the arm close by the edge of the table. In this way you can make long marks clear across the page, without raising your hand, indeed you need not raise the hand at all, for it is already raised, and should be kept up all the time. Your writing will become more free. Your fingers will not ache, though you write all day, and you will find yourself gaining in general ease. The motions made by the arm will of course be natural curves instead of the cramped crow-tracks made by aching and twisted fingers.

10. Write carefully, sit erect, write slow first, well next, and fast afterwards. Write plain, especially when you write for a newspaper. Study over these directions—remember them and practice them; and, though it may seem awkward to you to write in this way at first, in a little while you will feel, like one writer whom I taught these principles, who said he felt as if he wanted to go and tell all his friends of it, so they could write easy too.

Very truly, H. L. HASTINGS.

The Substitute.

In one of the suburbs of Paris there was, and I believe is now, an Asylum to reclaim those destitute youths who wander about the streets of that city. This institution is productive of great good.

One of its rules is, that when any one of the boys commits a fault, there shall be summoned from among his comrades a jury, who shall decide the case, and inflict the proper punishment, independently of the master, which is generally solitary confinement for a length of time, regulated according to the enormity of the offence. During this time the boy in disgrace is fed only on bread and water; but before he is actually confined, he who is appointed judge stands up, and says aloud, "Who will bear this boy's punishment for him?" Then, if any one is willing to be confined instead of the culprit, he immediately signifies his intention to the Judge; and the guilty boy, if fortunate enough to find some one who has sufficient kindness to bear his punishment for him, is obliged to carry to the substitute his allowance of food.

Well, one day a very wicked and depraved boy, well known in the streets of Paris, was admitted into the establishment. He at first seemed to like his new situation very well, and for some time restrained his bad propensities, but it was not very long before these began to show themselves, and for some minor offences he was forgiven, but at last he committed one so flagrant that it could not be passed over. It was this: He was one day playing with a boy, smaller than himself, when, from some cause or other, he became angry with him, and stabbed him with a knife in the breast. The poor little fellow immediately fell, and the other was at the same time seized by the boys; and a jury having been called, he was brought before them. And after the cause had been tried, he was sentenced to solitary confinement for an indefinite length of time; but before he was taken to the place appointed for his reception, the judge, as usual, stood up and said aloud, "Who will bear this boy's punishment for him?" Every one was silent, being impressed with the enormity of the crime, and the fear of being confined a long while.

All this time the wounded little boy was not present. Then the offender was confined. But some days after, all the boys were called together, and the question, "Who will bear this boy's punishment for him?" asked again. Then a voice was heard, saying, "I will." But who is it that is so generous as to utter these words? It is the very boy who was stabbed. This little fellow was shut up, and his enemy liberated. The bad boy had to carry the bread and water to his benefactor; and one day, while doing this, he was so overcome by the meekness and appearance of the little boy, weak from his wound, that he fell down at his feet in a flood of tears, exclaiming, "I'll never be wicked again!" and ever afterward was a reformed boy.

From this we see, that the most effectual way of subduing our enemies, and that which will afford us most pleasure afterward, is to forgive them; feeding them when hungry, clothing them when naked, giving them drink when thirsty; for in so doing we shall heap coals of fire upon their heads, and at the same time we shall imitate the example of our Lord, who, "when he was reviled, reviled not again," and who in the last moments of his agony prayed to God for his murderers, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

LEAVE IT TO GOD.—A little girl, giving an account of one of the school children having beaten her, was asked, "Well, what did you do? Did you beat her again?" She answered, "No, I left it to God!"

For the Crisis.

"Earth has no Sorrow Heaven cannot heal."

Did'st thou ever, in deep and unutterable sorrow,
Press a light, fairy form to thy grief-stricken heart?
Or, bending in soul-crushing agony o'er it,
Behold the last life-token slowly depart?
With thy treasure convulsively clasped to thy bosom,
Grief-choked and despairing, did'st in thy heart feel,
As thy tears lay like pearls 'mong the soft, shining ringlets,
That earth has one sorrow that Heaven can't heal?

Sad mourner! earth-mold might have tarnished thy jewel,
Too closely perchance to thy human heart pressed;
And so it was lovingly laid in its casket,
To sparkle at last all undimmed on thy breast.
Ah! methinks thou wilt learn, when the glad nuptial morning
Shall, rending the casket, thy treasure reveal,
And the bride, robed and jeweled, goes "into the marriage,"
That earth had no sorrow that Heaven can't heal.

Did'st thou e'er, with pale lips and a heart wildly throbbing,
Press the sad farewell kiss on a broad, noble brow,
And, forcing thy tears bravely back, softly whisper,
"How beauteous their feet who bear glad tidings" now?
And then as the door closed on thee in thy loneliness,
Did the thought o'er thy heart in its weakness o'er steal,
As thine "eyes failed with longing" to gaze on the loved one,
That earth has one sorrow that Heaven can't heal?

When those who've gone forth "bearing precious seed, weeping,"
Wat'ring well with their tears as they scattered abroad,
Shall come with rejoicing and glad "harvest shouting,"
Bringing plentiful sheaves for the garner of God:
Ah! methinks I can read in that shout, that shall waken
The echoes of Eden and on thine ear steal,
"Like the many-voiced waters and thundering mighty,"
Old earth had no sorrow that Heaven can't heal!

Oh, then shall we faint at the trials that wait us?
Shall we sigh for the crown ere we've borne well the cross?
Shall we shrink from the tempest, the clouds and thick darkness,
And repine that we're called to count all things but dross?
Ah, no! but we'll "take to ourselves the whole armor"—
God's truth to our "girdle"—his Spirit our "seal"—
And 'twill soon be proclaimed, by decree of the Mighty One,
Earth had no sorrow that Heaven can't heal!

Inherent Immortality: Inconsistency of its Advocates.

LETTER TO ELD. J. KNAPP.

BY ELD. J. S. WHITE, EAST BOSTON, MASS.

Dear Sir:—Having attended some of your meetings of late, and having heard you say some things which, if believed, must lead the mind into wrong views of God and the Bible, I think it proper to give them a passing notice.

On one occasion you said, Spiritualism, Universalism, and Annihilationism were all branches of infidelity.

Now, sir, how can you help seeing, that the first of these branches is the natural fruit of your own planting? You say, the body is not the man—that the man goes out of the body at death, and is immortal, and goes directly up to heaven, or down to hell! This faith of yours, is the foundation on which Spiritualism is built; yea, more, it is the thing itself, in all its essential elements. All that the spiritualists claim, naturally rests on your own basis: remove this, and Spiritualism is at an end. Let the basis remain, and it spontaneously flourishes in all its branches. They are only in advance in a straight line on your own track. This branch of infidelity is but your own seed come to maturity. Why throw stones at the fruit of the tree of your own planting?

What of Universalism? This you say is infidelity. But, sir, you both start at the same place, namely:—That all men have, or will have Immortality—that all have a deathless spirit, an undying soul! You say that all will live eternally, somewhere. To all this the Universalist says, Amen. You say, some will live in hell eternally; which is the same as to have eternal life in hell. For some of your "miserable hearers," as you call them, can't see the difference between eternal life and an undying soul. In view of your faith, that all men will live eternally, that all have immortality, and that the wicked, even, will be raised up with immortal bodies, as you say, the Universalist looks into the Bible and finds that eternal life is a subject of promise; and that it is promised to these only, who will be raised; therefore, their conclusion is, that if all men will live eternally, somewhere, as you say, then all men will be saved.

You, moreover, say, The fire in the earth may be the hell in which the wicked will live, with immortal souls and bodies, without end. Now, the Universalist looks again, and finds that the Bible attaches immortality only to those who will be found righteous; he concludes, therefore, that all will become righteous and be saved; hence, that your view of these immortal ones, wailing in hell eternally, is not correct. Besides, he reads, "The righteous shall be recompensed in the earth; much more the wicked and the sinner." This may be one reason why you think the wicked will live in the earth. But is it not as much a reason that the righteous will live in the earth?

He reads again, "And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." Rev. 5 : 13.

He now asks, where are your immortal ones weeping, wailing, rolling, in eternal fire, cursing and blaspheming God in the earth? His conclusion, then, is, by your own showing, that the time will come when all will praise and bless God, alike in heaven and earth. These are the "miserable blockheads," as you call them, who believe in that branch of infidelity, called Universalism.

But what say you of the third branch of infidelity, "Annihilationism?" Your words are, "the body is not the man, as these miserable Annihilationists would have us believe. The soul is the man."

You have told us, we should not be afraid of the Bible—that we should take that for our rule, etc. Some of your "miserable" hearers read the Bible, and they find some very strange things there, if your frequent assertions are not strange. They read, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." God, then, formed man of dust. Did he form what you call the soul of dust? No, you say; for you have said, the soul was made in a different way. Very well. God made man of dust. This, that He made of dust, you say was the body. Very well; the Lord says, that he made man of dust; so, by your own admission, the body is the man: yet you affirm, The body is not the man! God affirms that He made man out of the dust; and if, as you say, this was the body which he made, then the Bible tells us the body is not the man, or was the man, when God made him. God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life; and man—of course he was man, before he lived—became a living soul. When he breathed he was a living man, or a living soul; and the living soul was the man. "Man became a living soul."

Your "miserable" hearers take the Bible for their rule, and believe it; your assertions to the contrary notwithstanding.

In your sermon on Future Punishment, you said there was but one passage which the Restorationists could construe in their favor, namely, "He spoke of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption.', You said, Hades, rendered hell, meant the grave, and should never be rendered hell. This you said, to show the restorationist that he is wrong in saying, Christ went to hell where the wicked are, and preached the Gospel to them while he was dead.

Now, it is said, that Christ's soul was not left in hell. And you say, that hell, in this passage, means the grave: you, moreover, say, the body is not the man; but the soul is the man. It follows, then, by your own showing, that the man, Jesus, his soul, to say nothing of the body, went into the grave when he died. Then, what becomes of your assertion, that Christ and the thief went directly to heaven when they died? Again, the hell in which the rich man lifted up his eyes, is hades; and, as you say hades means the grave, it follows that all your efforts to prove the rich man went right to hell torments, when he died, and there "engaged in a prayer-meeting," amounts to nothing; for you destroy that whole sermon by your effort to kill the restorationists. You say, Gehenna is the hell where the wicked are tormented. Now, as you have reminded us that hades means the grave, we would remind you, that Gehenna means the valley of Hinnom, on the side of old Jerusalem.

In concluding your sermon, you endeavored to answer an objection to your views of future punishment. Some say, they cannot see how it can be just for God to inflict such a punishment for sins committed in this short life. You compared such to the ox, who looked over the wall because he could not see through it. But you could see through it, you said. The following is the way you could see through it. First, you said, sin was an infinite evil, and deserved an infinite punishment, such as you described. What Bible you had for this assertion you did not tell us. You might tell us Eliphaz, the Temanite, said, sin is infinite. But, if you will look to Job 22 : 5, you may find that this was said by one of "Job's comforters." And, if you look again, you may see that your text, on which your sermon on future punishment was founded, was the language of Elihu, another of Job's comforters. Job 36 : 18.

Look at Job 42 : 7, and you will find God said to the three persons who tormented Job, instead of comforting him, "Ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath."

You said, sin was infinite, because committed against an infinite law; and, for this reason, it deserved infinite punishment. If you mean infinite in degree—and we shall infer that to be your meaning, by saying, the sinner will have an immortal body, so that the fire, with all its intensity inside this earth can't consume it—then the punishment will be unlimited; that is, it will be to the extent of God's power. Do you say, God will inflict torment to the extent of his ability? If He will, then we agree with you, that the punishment of the sinner will be infinite. But, in this case, we ask you to try again to show us the justice of such punishment, which you can so clearly see through. Will the sin of man, even though it should be committed to the extent of his ability, require punishment to the extent of God's ability? If He will not so punish the sinner, then punishment will be limited; of course it will not be infinite. If you say, it will be infinite in regard to time, you may not be so far from the Bible. On both the time and nature of future punishment, Paul may help you to see more plainly. See 2 Thess. 1 : 9.

You seemed to be aware that those who, like the ox, could not see through the wall, would not be satisfied with the justice, in putting the person who might have died impenitent, after committing one sin, into eternal torture, to say nothing of the manifest evidence, that you could not see through it; so you struck off on the assertion, that God will punish men for the sins they commit after they get into hell! But where is the Bible for this? Remember, you told us you would stick to the Bible. Perhaps you can see through the difference between tormenting a being for ever, for one sin committed on earth, and putting the sinner, for that one sin, into hell, where he will, and must sin to all eternity, and then torment him because he is there! Some of your stupid hearers must look over the wall to see this. Besides, the sinner, in your hell, will either be on probation or he will not. If on probation, then he may reform, and so get out of that place. And if not on probation, he is not accountable for what he will do, and cannot, in justice be punished for it. Or do you see that God can, and will, for one or more sins committed in this life, put the sinner beyond the reach of mercy, and so fix his condition where he must sin, and then torment him for the sins he commits while there? Is this what you see, when looking through the wall?

To clap the climax of the glory which you behold, in having the sinner put into fire, inside this earth, and kept there forever, you say, by so doing, the inhabitants of Jupiter and of the other planets may thereby be prevented from sinning, and so escape the same fate! You say, they may look down and see the wicked of this world wailing in unutterable torments, and for fear of woe, they will keep themselves from falling!

Remember, in the above discourse, you told us, you should prove everything from the Bible. Where is the Bible that Jupiter is inhabited? Where is the evidence that the people on Jupiter, if any there are, have not already fallen? How can they look from Jupiter down into this earth, to see what is going on there? If they can, does it not savor a little of spiritualism, which you call infidelity? Again, suppose all you claim, that Jupiter is inhabited, and that the people are without sin, and that they need to have some object before them to keep them from sin, what evidence have you that the object need be the eternal torment of the damned in hell? How much virtue is there in that person who is kept from wrong, by fear of punishment? Are the inhabitants of Jupiter so hard to be restrained that all the love and goodness of God fail to keep them? And does it require such a punishment as you describe to secure preservation? Must it be the torment of some, of this world, in fire that will eternally burn? and to prevent them from burning up, will God give them an immortal body, as you say, which will stand this fire, and not burn up? See Malachi 4 : 1; Matt. 3 : 12.

You told us that you knew of a very proud person, who, by the Spirit of God, had all the pride burned out "root and branch." Did you mean that there was some pride left after that? If not, how much will there be left of the sinner after he is burned up root and branch? Don't do[illegible] is your own fixing. So, by [illegible] expected that the Malachi was one of [illegible]

The rebels are said to be concentrating forces about fifteen miles below Alexandria for an attack.

A special dispatch to the American from Alexandria to-day says that Col. Wilcox, the commandant there, has issued a proclamation, proclaiming strict martial law. Capt. The pickets of the forces at Alexandria were last night fired upon, and the troops called to arms in consequence, but nobody was hurt.

[people in Jupiter and other planets!] Is it so, that God will torment one person forever for the good of somebody else? If in all this you are right, and see things clearly, we submit, that you can see better by looking through the wall, than we can by looking over it. That is what your spiritualist infidels say, that they can see through a stone wall or any other substance, far better than others can see with no obstacle in the way!

In the subject referred to, you did repeat several passages of Bible; some of them were to the point, and others, as we see things, were not rightly applied. And when you came to the conclusion of your discourse, and to one of the most important parts of the whole, I believe you did not refer to the Bible at all.

We are glad for all the good you may do. And we think you would do still more, if you would inform yourself on the sentiments of those who can't see through a stone wall as you do, and so not unintentionally misrepresent them; and deal a little more with the Bible, and less in assertion.

From the Bible Examiner.

Second Letter to Eld. Jacob Knapp.

Dear Sir:—In your recent stay in Boston, you said in one of your discourses, "If Christ had come in '43, as some supposed, half of Boston could not have seen him." On another time, soon after, you said publicly, that "In '43 many were looking for Christ to come personally, and they kept awake all night that they might have the first sight of him." You then said, "Suppose he had come to New York, Boston would not have been benefitted by it; for he could not have come to Boston, there would have been such a rabble about him."

In these remarks you plainly ignore one of the most prominent articles of faith in the creed of the Baptist church, of which you are a member. For you ridicule the idea of Christ's personal coming, which the church professes to believe, and which the Bible repeatedly affirms. Then you do not believe that he will so come in like manner as he went away. That he will come in the clouds of heaven; that he will descend from heaven with the voice of the angel to raise the dead; that all the tribes of the earth shall see him coming; for you say that should he come, not half of the people of Boston could see him; and if he should come to New York, he never could get to Boston on account of the rabble. I think you must have changed your mind since the time to which you refer. In '43 you spoke very respectfully of Christ's second personal coming, as taught in the Bible, and preached by W. Miller and others. You then said the doctrine was true, and the Lord might come at that time, and exhorted your hearers to be prepared for the event. Still you told us in your late visit that you had not changed your mind since you were here before, eighteen years ago. You may know how to put these statements together.

In the statements you now make of the coming of Christ, you not only show that you utterly reject the doctrine by your ridicule, but, according to Webster, you use blasphemy in doing it. He defines the word thus:—"An indignity offered to God by words or writing. That which derogates from the prerogatives of God."

It was Christ's prerogative to go where he chose when he was here, and no rabble could prevent him. It will be his prerogative to come, as he has said, so that every eye can see him, and to come from New York to Boston, if necessary, without being prevented by a rabble. But you say, He can't come so as to have half Boston see him; and if he should come to New York, none of Boston could see him, because he could not get to the latter place. Thus you arrogate the prerogatives of Christ, and consequently, so far as he is God, you blaspheme his holy name. Now if you can utter such impious irreverence to Christ, we do not wonder so much at the frequent unmanly epithets you apply to those who can't see things "through the wall," as you can. But we submit, whether it would not be manly, not to say Christ-like, to be more sparing of those terms, putting every body on the list of infidels and on the road to hell who do not believe just as you do, or approve of all your measures, until you learn not to blasphemously ridicule our Savior in one of the most important and essential doctrines of revelation. For if not, it will avail but little for you to call others "blasphemers, infidels, stupid, miserable old fogies," etc. etc.

To the honor of the Baptist denomination, I am glad to know that many of them do not fellowship such a course. Now be entreated, that, while you are dealing in these wholesale denunciations of every body who do not adopt your ipse dixit, and are praying for ministers—"we four and no more"—that you do not include the Savior in the company of those whom you intentionally try to hold up to ridicule—whether to exalt yourself you may be the better judge. Remember the parable of the Publican and Pharisee.

J. S. W.

ANCIENT USAGE.—Dr. E. S. Shepherd, in a communication to the Christian Union, says:

"In my travels in Italy, on visiting the ancient baptistries, and inquiring of Catholic priests why they were so constructed, they all, as in one voice, replied that they were built when immersion was the practice of the church, and that such was the practice till the eleventh century. In this they answered truly and candidly. They do not pretend that the apostles practiced sprinkling for baptism. They say that the change was made by their church, and that is sufficient authority for them.

DEW.—There is dew in one flower and not in another, because one opens its cup and takes it in, while the other closes itself and the drop runs off. God rains his goodness and mercy as widespread as the dew, and if we lack them, it is because we will not open our hearts to receive them.

Evening Shadows.—No. 9.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"And they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is."

DEARLY BELOVED IN CHRIST:—Having presented our humble opinion of the power above referred to, in former articles, we now proceed to present a few brief historical items concerning the astonishment, or wonder, created at the ascension of the beast. The seeds of discord, hatred and revolution, both of religion and government, were sown by Voltaire and his associates, and fairly inaugurated when the infuriated populace destroyed the Bastile, July 14, 1789. Then commenced the reign of terror: on the capture of this strong hold of oppression, the governor and officers were seized, their hands cut off, and then beheaded. The infuriated mob fixed their hands on pikes and carried them in bloody triumph through the streets of Paris. An open profession of Atheism was made on the 26th day of August, 1792. On the 21st of January, 1793, the King was beheaded, and the Queen [illegible] fate on the 1st of October, 1793. I wish the reader to mark this definite fact—that the beast from the bottomless pit had fairly inaugurated his career in 1792 and in A. D. 1793. Napoleon Bonaparte at that time was called "the little Corporal"—distinguished himself in the command of artillery at Toulon. Therefore, Napoleon could not by any sort of reasoning answer to the idea of his being the one that was, and his son that was not, and the nephew that is. You will not fail to perceive the fact. Dear reader, I think we shall see that it is the French nation, from the commencement of the reign of terror, that fulfils the eighth head of the dragonic power, and not an uncle, son and nephew.

Second. I will now present some very brief historical extracts;—the first from Read's "Hand of God in History." Says the historian: "We are struck with admiration at the change which Europe has passed through during the last half century. It is but fifty-three years (Oct. 10th, 1793) since France voted christianity out of existence, and with impious hands assailed the temple of truth, and decreed that one stone should not be left upon another till the whole should be thrown down. In the temple which she set up, her image was the Goddess of Reason, and the reign of terror which followed was terrific and bloody beyond anything recorded in the annals of history of the apostacy. Revelation was trodden under foot, and evangelical piety scouted from the nation. Her voice was no where heard except as echoed in blood and groans, or from the remote valley or solitary glen." Smith, in his "Key to Revelation," says: "In August 26th, 1792, an open profession of atheism was made by the National Convention, and corresponding societies and atheistical clubs were everywhere fearlessly held in the French nation. Massacres and the reign of terror became the most horrid." Hear one report of the National Convention of Jan. 30, 1795:—"Last year you maintained 1,100,000 fighting men. France stood armed on one side, and all Europe on the other, and victory constantly followed the tri-colored standard. Holland is conquered, and England trembles; twenty-three regular seiges terminated; six pitched battles gained; two thousand cannon taken; two thousand towns submitted. The loss of men in the armies of France from 1780 to 1786 slain was said to be 1,200,000, besides the huge hosts of slaughtered citizens, men women and children, who were said to amount to 2,000,000. Gen. Denican, a French officer, declared that 3,000,000 of the French perished within five years of the Revolution in 1789. The TERRIBLE REPUBLIC, (the name they assumed before they became an Empire,) having by public authority denied God and the Christian religion, were prepared to patronize any and every enormity: the burning of the Bible in a public place; the parading of the sacramental vessels through the streets on an ass in contempt." Another writer hath said:—"The reign of terror came, and in its bloody footsteps followed the terrific reign of Napoleon. Heretofore the atmosphere had been murky and mortiferous; the earth yet exhaled the bloody vapor of the revolution, and a lurid sky still bespoke the angry frown of indignant heaven. The heavens are again overcast! The thunders roar! The lightnings blaze! Europe is convulsed! The earth is terribly shaken! The Hero of Corsica comes, a burning comet, rolling over all Europe . . . thrones are crushed; kingdoms crumble; the foundations of the great deep are broken up." Dear reader, what astonishment, yea what wonder, did those bloody scenes enacted by this eighth head dragonic monster create over all the world. Truly, all did wonder and now wonder at dragonic France.

Lastly, on this point, allow me to present one more short extract—one that I deem necessary to show more fully the astonishment at the rise of the beast out of the bottomless pit:—"All Europe stood in amazement and perturbation at the events that were passing. The prodigious increase of power by France, and the revolting purposes to which she had applied it, began to arouse a universal dread for the independence of nations and the existence of social order. It was natural that kings and aristocracies should regard even the first outbreak of the revolution with dislike and apprehension now, from the frightful features it had assumed. This feeling was partaken by the whole world, and prevailed even among the most democratic communities. The enlightened citizens of the United States shared it with the ignorant populations of Sarmatia or Romelia. Upon the first reverse sustained by France, all the nations of the earth seemed to rush simultaneously to quell her. The sympathies of mankind were enlisted against her, for she had shown how hideous was the [illegible] by which she was actuated."

Having shown, it seems to me, most conclusively the identity of this world-wondering beast, we shall examine the work assigned in prophecy to be accomplished by it and its conjoint agents, which it seems according to statements of the last few years is progressing rapidly to a final consummation. Most emphatically, the day goeth away, and the shadows of the evening are stretched out.

Christ's Intercession.

A few thoughts suggested on seeing a picture of Christ, in a supplicating attitude, as if interceding for his people.

"He ever lives above,
For me to intercede;
His all-redeeming love,
His precious blood to plead."

What! ever interceding? and for us, weak, wretched us, borne down with care and trouble, and looking down in despondency, down, down into the depths of our weak, wretched hearts? Yes; He intercedes with the Father for us, miserable worms of the dust! and all the while we are forgetting Him—aye, grieving Him, by our disconsolation, our murmurings, our ingratitude, and our unthankfulness. Interceding for us, because, even while we are sinning against the Father, we desire the Father's blessings. See, his eyes turn upward in prayer, and he seems to cry once more, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do."

We are tried with our enemies; they would conquer and destroy us. We forget to cry to God for assistance, but Christ does not forget us. He lifts his voice in supplication, and the Father delivers us from the "snare of the fowler," and from the "horrible pit and miry clay," and sets our feet upon the Rock of Ages.

We are sick, and our bodies are racked with pain and anguish; our minds sink into despondency beneath the heavy load, and our cry is, Wo is me, for I sink under a curse; but that sympathizing Savior beseeches the Almighty, and he sends rays of comfort divine to our wounded hearts, and draws us by the tender chords of love, until our sick couch seems like the gate of heaven, and we are resigned to any fate, knowing that He cannot err.

In poverty's dark vale we stumble along, beset by the briars and brambles that surround such unfortunate ones; then we exclaim, We are neglected by God and man; we shall surely perish; but our Intercessor presents his petition, and soon our pathway is strewn with flowers.

Divers afflictions encompass us about, and our hearts are rent with terrible emotions, and all peace has fled. O! then our Mediator, with groanings which cannot be uttered by mortals, intercedes with the Father for us,—and oh! such peace as fills our hearts! it flows like a river! it is unutterable! it passeth all understanding! and in our heavenly transports we cry aloud, Our heavenly Parent, we thank thee that thou hast given to the world thy Son, as a mediator between God and man. He who in his own body bore far more than our sufferings, and has now become our Mediator, yea, our Intercessor, who, not only when we pray, but when we fail to pray, and when steeped in guilt, still cries, "O spare them a little longer!"

How can we wilfully sin when we realize this fact? How enter upon the duties of life with a wicked, reckless, wanton, daring spirit, not knowing or caring about the consequences? How can we forget that, "yet a little longer," and the "great day of wrath" shall dawn, when the Mediator shall cease to intercede, and shall have become our Judge? Are we ready?

Lines.

BY MARIA MATHEWS.

"Take care of yourself. Dress well, and be seen in the world. This working for the poor, in a poor world, for poor people, brings poor pay, and if continued in, will bring you all to the poor house."—Brother E.

Friends warn me of danger as onward I go,
The cries of sad hearts in lone hovels to know;
But Jesus, my Master, would visit the place,
And happy am I, his [illegible] footsteps to trace.

The pride of the world and the lovers of gold
Would tempt me by pleasures unnumbered, untold,
And fashion looks out from the windows of earth
And tries to allure me with things without worth.

The honor of men and the pencil of fame
Are waiting to write in bright colors my name;
But not to your pages my name shall be given,
I pray it may stand on the record in heaven.

When foes firmly stand, or when dangers appear,
When false friends forsake and destruction is near,
Ah! then would I stand, most determined to fight,
The Lord my salvation, my shield and my might.

O hinder me not, for I'm bearing my cross,
Your pride and your pomp are the relics of dross;
I love to walk lowly, as Jesus commands,
